On the cover: A "golden" Royce Hall to commemorate UCLA's founding 75 years ago on May 23, 1919.

On the title page: The fledgling UCLA campus in 1930, with Royce, Haines, Kinsey, and Moore Halls and Powell Library forming a lone-some little cluster amid the beanfields of Westwood.

An aerial, high-angle photograph of a city, likely Los Angeles, showing a dense grid of streets and buildings. The image is in black and white and has a grainy, high-contrast quality. The city extends to the horizon under a bright sky.

Introducing UCLA

"... in 10 years . . . we shall look with amazement upon the development of this University, for it is certain to be greater, far greater, than the imagination of any of us can foresee."

UCLA Director, 1919

From Little Acorns . . .

The year was 1880. With a population of 11,000, Los Angeles was a gaslit pueblo trying to convince the state to establish in Southern California a second State Normal School like the one already existing in San Jose, some 300 miles to the north.

In March of the following year, the State Assembly approved the establishment of such a school. A group of enthusiastic citizens, over 200 of whom contributed between $2 and $500, purchased a site less than a mile from the business section. Soon the towering Victorian form of the school rose from an orange grove which, today, is the site of the Central Los Angeles Public Library. On August 29, 1882, the Los Angeles Branch of the State Normal School welcomed its first students.

By 1914 the little pueblo of Los Angeles had grown to a city of 350,000 and the school, whose enrollment far exceeded its capacity, moved to new quarters — a Hollywood ranch off a dirt road which would later become Vermont Avenue.

With a view toward expansion, Director Ernest Carroll Moore proposed in 1917 that the school become the first branch of the Berkeley-based University of California. Two years later on May 23, 1919, California Governor William D. Stephens signed the legislation that created the "Southern Branch" of the University of California — no longer merely a teacher's college but an institution that offered two years of instruction in Letters and Science.

Third- and fourth-year courses were soon added, the first class of 300 students was graduated in 1925, and by 1927 the Southern Branch had earned its new name: University of California at Los Angeles (the "at" became a comma in 1958).

Groundbreaking, September 21, 1927. Provost Ernest Carroll Moore wields the shovel as Regent Edward A. Dickson (to Dr. Moore's right) and others cheer.

The Move Westward

As the student population of the University continued to increase, the need for a new site became obvious and the search was soon under way for a permanent home for UCLA. On September 21, 1927, Director Moore turned the first shovelful of soil that broke ground for the creation of the campus of his dreams.

The choice of Westwood, set squarely in the path of westward-moving Los Angeles, no doubt was an important factor in determining UCLA's future growth. But in 1929, on the barren chaparral-covered hills of Westwood, the four original buildings — Royce Hall, Powell Library, Haines and Kinsey Halls — formed a lonesome little cluster in the middle of 400 empty acres. The campus hosted some 5,500 students that fall.

The first priority after the move to Westwood was to establish a graduate curriculum, essential for any major university. The Regents established the master's degree at UCLA in 1933 and, three years later, the doctorate. UCLA was fast becoming a full-fledged university offering advanced study in almost every field.

Los Angeles and the University nurtured each other through the years, and both experienced phenomenal growth and development during the next half century. UCLA's most spectacular period of growth occurred in the 25 years following World War II, when it tripled its prewar enrollment of 9,000 students and undertook what would become a $260 million building program that included residence halls, parking structures, laboratories, more classrooms, service buildings, athletic and recreational facilities, and a 715-bed teaching hospital which is now one of the largest and most highly respected in the world.

UCLA at 75

This academic year UCLA celebrates 75 years of growth, from a small two-year college to a comprehensive institution in the elite company of the finest research universities in the U.S. Today, UCLA is distinguished as the only campus among the nation's top 10 research universities that was established in the twentieth century.

Not the sound of symphony, but of chisel and saw: Royce Hall under construction, 1928.

UCLA is a large and complex institution devoted to undergraduate and graduate scholarship, research, and public service. Known for academic excellence, many of its programs are rated among the best in the nation, some among the best in the world.

Some 235 buildings on 419 acres house the College of Letters and Science plus 12 professional schools and serve over 34,350 students. Another major period of campus development is currently nearing completion, providing needed additional space for chemistry, management, and microbiology programs, while several of UCLA's older buildings are now being made earthquake-safe through a broad seismic correction program.

UCLA's top administrative officer is Chancellor Charles E. Young. Now beginning his twenty-seventh year of leadership in that position — fully one third of UCLA's existence — Chancellor Young is one of America's most senior and most respected leaders in higher education today.

The Setting

UCLA is cradled in rolling green hills just five miles inland from the ocean, in one of the most attractive areas of Southern California. It is bordered on the north by the protected wilderness of the Santa Monica Mountains and at its southern gate by Westwood Village. Originally envisioned as a business district to serve UCLA, this picturesque little college town has mushroomed into an entertainment magnet for the entire Los Angeles area.

The cultural treasures of the Los Angeles County Museum of Art are a few miles to the east as are other museums, the community of Beverly Hills, the Music Center, and the downtown business area. Beyond that the deserts, snowcapped mountains, and ski resorts are little more than an hour's drive.

The Ambience

The stately Tudor Gothic and Italian Romanesque architecture of UCLA's early buildings blends with the contemporary and modern design of the newer structures. Royce Hall, one of the original four buildings, remains the campus symbol. Contrasting campus moods range from the activity of Bruin Walk to the serenity of the Japanese Garden. Attend a rock concert on the lawn, or a classical recital in Schoenberg Hall. Contemplate a Rodin or a Lachaise in the Sculpture Garden, or participate in a political rally in Meyerhoff Park.

UCLA is a place of surprises. A unique inverted fountain, where water flows over river rocks, recalls the Yellowstone creeks that inspired it. Enter the Bunche Hall Annex and discover a glorious atrium where palms and ferns glisten in filtered sunlight. Step inside the courtyard of Macgowan Hall and come face to face with the impressive stone Tower of Masks, created by the noted sculptress Anna Mahler.

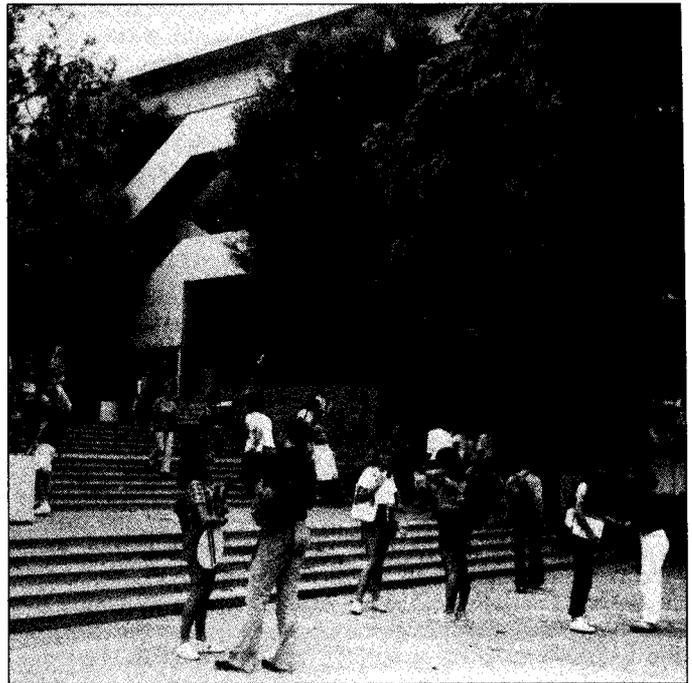

UCLA is a place for serious study in a vibrant, dynamic atmosphere. You must visit the campus to appreciate it. The Visitors Center, located within the Office of Community Relations in 1417 Ueberroth Building (310-206-8147), has a reception area where visitors are met, welcomed, and assisted. The center arranges tours of the campus all year round and provides information on campus exhibits and recreation areas. The Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools (310-825-8764) conducts tours for prospective undergraduates.

The Commitment to Research

UCLA is one of the outstanding "research universities" in the country. What does this mean to you as a student?

It means that the same faculty members teach both undergraduate and graduate courses and that these instructors create knowledge as well as transmit it. They spend a major portion of their time engaged in research in libraries and laboratories and out in the field.

At UCLA you are taught by the people making the discoveries, so you learn the latest findings on every front. You may exchange ideas with faculty members who are authorities in their fields, and even as undergraduates you are encouraged to participate in research to experience firsthand the discovery of new knowledge. This inseparable commitment to teaching and research is the hallmark of a research university.

The Question of Size

Although UCLA has a larger enrollment than other University of California campuses, it is small in comparison to some of the Midwestern universities. Its general campus population of some 30,438 students is about equal to that at UC Berkeley, but the UCLA campus is enriched by an additional 3,915 men and women studying in its health sciences schools of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing, and Public Health. UCLA makes the most of its size by offering an extraordinary breadth of high quality academic programs and a range of student opportunities available at few other universities in the country.

A major concern of the faculty and staff is to allow you, the student, to feel that you belong. UCLA provides orientation sessions and several innovative academic assistance programs for new students, a staff of helpful advisers and counselors in every college/school and academic department, a myriad of student services, and unlimited opportunities for involvement and participation.

All UCLA students share the pride of attending one of the most prestigious educational institutions in the country. Beyond that, no one individual deals with the totality of UCLA. Campus life is made comfortable by interacting and identifying with only certain parts of the whole, whether they be your academic department, residence hall, fraternity or sorority, club or organization, or the spirit of Bruin victories on the athletic fields.

Many prospective students ask about the size of classes at UCLA. Standard instructional formats include lectures, discussion sections, seminars, and laboratory sessions. Although large lecture groups in some introductory courses are not unheard of, 96 percent of all lower division lecture classes in 1993-94 had fewer than 200 students, and the University is making every effort to further reduce class size. Students in most lecture classes also enroll in discussion sections of about 25 students, and seminars and laboratory classes usually have fewer than 20 students. There is an overall ratio of one faculty member for approximately 18 students.

Most UCLA faculty members take a genuine interest in their students. They set aside office hours for receiving students, and most appreciate the opportunity for informal conversation. Even professors who seem remote in the classroom may be just the opposite on a one-to-one basis. A brief discussion can benefit both student and instructor.

Professors are often aided, especially in the small discussion sections, by teaching assistants (TAs). These are graduate students who teach on a part-time basis while pursuing their degree. Many students find it helpful to talk to the TAs about academic problems.

Hallmarks of Excellence

Recent surveys indicate that in overall excellence, UCLA is one of America's most prestigious and influential public universities. It is consistently rated among the best universities in the nation and is by far the youngest institution in this select group.

UCLA is accredited by the Western Association of Schools and Colleges and by numerous special agencies. Information regarding the University's accreditation may be obtained in the Planning Office Library, Office of Academic Planning and Budget, 2107 Murphy Hall.

ACADEMICS — UCLA has one college and 12 professional schools. The College of Letters and Science offers programs leading to both undergraduate and graduate degrees, as do the School of the Arts, School of Engineering and Applied Science, School of Nursing, and School of Theater, Film, and Television. The other professional schools offer graduate programs exclusively: the Graduate School of Architecture and Urban Planning, Graduate School of Education and Information Studies, School of Law, John E. Anderson Graduate School of Management, School of Social Welfare and, in the health sciences, the Schools of Dentistry, Medicine, and Public Health.

Few universities in the world offer the extraordinary range and diversity of academic programs that students enjoy at UCLA. Undergraduates may earn a Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science degree in one of 110 different disciplines; graduate students may earn one of 85 master's and 102 doctoral and professional degrees.

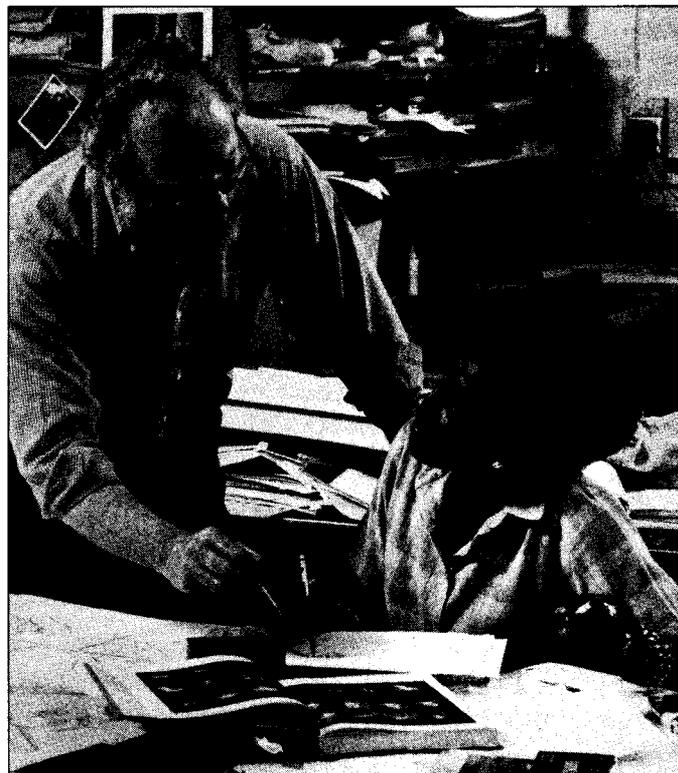

Academic programs undergo a continuing process of review and evaluation to maintain their excellence, and new programs are added as they are approved by The Regents. For example, the Graduate School of Library and Information Science has merged with the Graduate School of Education and is now known as the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies. New degree programs last year included the interdepartmental B.S. in Neuroscience and the B.S. in Cell and Molecular Biology.

THE FACULTY — Of the many factors that go into the making of a great university, no single factor is as important as its faculty. UCLA's distinguished faculty includes 1987 Nobel prizewinner Donald Cram, several John Simon Guggenheim fellows and Fulbright scholars, and many members of both the National Academy of Sciences and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. In 1993-94 four faculty members received Fulbright scholarships to conduct research, lecture, and consult abroad, and six UCLA scientists and scholars were awarded Guggenheim fellowships. Three were elected as fellows of the prestigious American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS). With five additional American Academy of Arts and Sciences award winners and four Sloan Foundation fellows, UCLA placed among the leading universities nationwide in the number of these prestigious awards.

In a recent survey the Conference Board of Associated Research Councils evaluated the quality of the faculty in more than 150 American research universities. UCLA was judged second in the nation among public universities, and among the most highly rated overall. Of the 32 disciplines studied, 17 of UCLA's academic departments were ranked among the top 10 in the country.

RESEARCH — UCLA is among the six leading research universities in the country, receiving a record $324.9 million in 1992-93 in extramural grants and contracts to support its research activities. The University hosts several hundred postdoctoral scholars each year who share its excellent research facilities. Its laboratories have seen major breakthroughs in scientific and medical research; its study centers have helped foster understanding among the various cultures of the world; ongoing pursuits of new knowledge in a myriad of vital areas continue to improve the quality of life for people around the world.

TEACHING — Although all UCLA faculty members engage in research and the discovery of new knowledge, they are equally dedicated to disseminating their findings in the classroom. Indeed, excellence in teaching is one of the most important criteria for faculty promotion, and distinguished teaching awards are among those most highly prized by UCLA professors.

STUDENT BODY — UCLA's students pride themselves on academic excellence. The Fall Quarter 1993 entering freshman class had an average high school GPA of 3.90, with an average composite score on the Scholastic Assessment Test (SAT) of 1,141 out of a possible 1,600.

One of the University's highest priorities is to advance the ethnic diversity of its students, faculty, staff, and administrators. The diversity of UCLA's student population — nearly equally divided between men and women — yields the wide range of opinion and perspective essential to a great university. Although most students are from California, they come from all 50 states and more than 115 foreign countries to study at UCLA. The University now enrolls the most ethnically mixed and culturally diverse undergraduate student population — both in total students and as a percentage of enrollment — of any major university in the U.S. Ethnic minorities comprise 61.7 percent of the undergraduates and 36.2 percent of the graduate student population. And international students and scholars presently number over 6,700, making this one of the most popular American universities for students from abroad.

NUMEROUS OTHER FACTORS — With more than six million volumes, UCLA's library is rated among the finest in the country. Its athletic teams have made the University an acknowledged leader in intercollegiate sports. Its Center for the Performing Arts ranks as the largest, most diversified and comprehensive program of its kind in the country. And management of the Armand Hammer Museum of Art and acquisition of the Westwood Playhouse in Westwood Village enhance the entire arts program.

The University played a significant role in the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles, and the campus reprised that role in July 1991 for the U.S. Olympic Festival '91. On both occasions, UCLA housed a large Olympic Village and served as the venue for several events.

All these factors plus its research facilities, its community service, and its international links with all parts of the world make UCLA today a very special kind of institution.

The University of California

The University of California traces its origins to 1868, when Governor Henry H. Haight signed the Organic Act providing that California's first "complete University" be created.

Classes began the following year at the College of California in Oakland. The first buildings on the Berkeley campus were completed in 1873, and the University moved into its new home. The following June, the University of California conferred bachelor's degrees on 12 graduates.

Today the University is one of the largest and most renowned centers of higher education in the world. Its nine campuses span the state, from Davis in the north to San Diego in the south. In between are Berkeley, San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Santa Barbara, Riverside, Irvine and, of course, Los Angeles.

All the campuses adhere to the same admission guidelines and high academic standards, yet each has its own distinct character, atmosphere, and — to some degree — academic individuality. Riverside, for example, excels in the plant sciences and entomology; Davis has a large agricultural school and offers the University's only veterinary medicine program; San Diego has excellent oceanography and marine biology programs; San Francisco is devoted exclusively to the health sciences. Among the campuses there are five medical schools and three law schools, as well as schools of architecture, business administration, education, engineering, and many others.

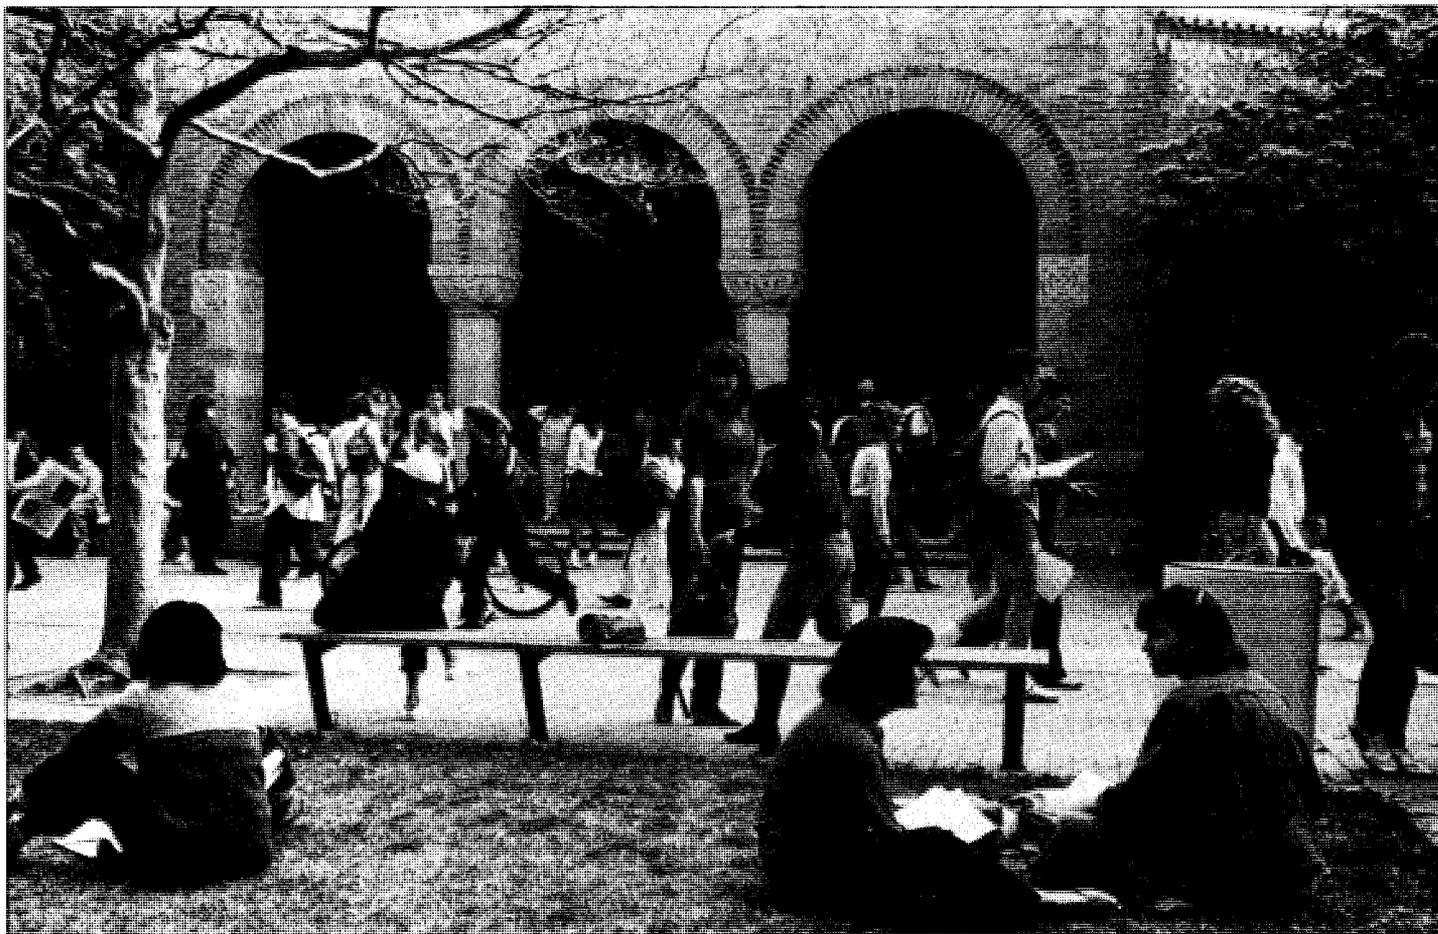

The UC campuses have a combined enrollment exceeding 163,000 students, over 90 percent of them California residents. About one fourth study at the graduate level. Some 150 laboratories, extension centers, and research and field stations strengthen teaching and research while providing public service to California and the nation. The collections of over 100 UC libraries on the nine campuses are surpassed in size on the American continent only by the Library of Congress collection.

The faculty of the University of California is internationally known for its distinguished academic achievements. On its nine campuses the University has 18 Nobel laureates, and membership in the National Academy of Sciences is the largest of any university in the country.

University Administration

The University of California system is governed by a Board of Regents whose regular members are appointed by the Governor of California. In addition to setting broad general policy and making budgetary decisions for the UC system, The Regents appoint the President of the University, the nine chancellors, and the directors, provosts, and deans who administer the affairs of the individual campuses and divisions of the University.

The Regents delegate authority in academic matters to the Academic Senate, which determines academic policy for the University as a whole. The Senate, composed of faculty members and certain administrative officers, determines the conditions for admission and granting of degrees, authorizes and supervises courses and curricula, and advises University administrators on budgets and faculty appointments and promotions. Individual divisions of the Universitywide Academic Senate determine academic policy for each campus. Students participate in policy-making at both campuswide and systemwide levels.

Academic Resources and Programs

Research: The Discovery of Knowledge

As one of the largest research universities in the world, UCLA is renowned for its programs of faculty and student research; more than 5,000 funded programs are in progress at a given time. One focus of these efforts is a group of "organized research units" (ORUs) which provide an interdisciplinary approach to the search for knowledge.

ORUs are study centers and research institutes consisting of faculty and students from various departments engaged in continuing research of particular subjects. They do not offer courses of instruction or degrees, although several work in conjunction with interdepartmental instruction programs which lead to bachelor's and/or advanced degrees. ORUs provide invaluable experience for students and faculty in basic and applied research and greatly enhance UCLA's educational program and the overall academic quality of the University.

In the overview which follows, UCLA's 24 organized research units are listed within five major divisions — health sciences, life sciences, physical sciences and engineering, social sciences, and arts and humanities. Within each division, representative groups and programs are included which, although not formally established as ORUs, are nevertheless doing important research in their respective areas.

Health Sciences

The BRAIN RESEARCH INSTITUTE, center for neuroscience research and education at UCLA, has one of the largest investigative programs of its kind in the country, with more than 200 scientists involved in every aspect of research in the nervous system from molecular organization to human behavior. The institute provides an environment for multidisciplinary research and training in the structure and function of the central nervous system. Education activities include the interdisciplinary Ph.D. program in Neuroscience, the interdisciplinary B.S. program in Neuroscience administered in conjunction with the College of Letters and Science, an elementary school outreach program whose teaching activities are directed by graduate students, and a joint educational program with UCLA Extension for teachers, educational psychologists, and other professionals. The Office of the Director is located in 73-369 BRI (310-825-5061).

The CRUMP INSTITUTE FOR BIOLOGICAL IMAGING is a science and technology center that brings together physical, biomathematical, chemical, biological, and clinical scientists and students to merge the principles of imaging with those of molecular and cellular biology and biochemistry. The imaging domains range from the molecular organization of viruses and cellular subunits to the biological responses of organ systems in the living human. A major focus is the development and use of imaging technologies to collect, analyze, and communicate biological data. Imaging technologies are used to build a picture (image) of the spatial and temporal variations in biological processes. Imaging technologies encompass such areas as cryoelectron microscopy and protein structure studies to assemble and study simple organisms and subcellular domains; confocal fluorescent microscopy for study of cellular and subcellular processes; in vitro and in vivo autoradiography studies of integrated organ function; and positron emission tomography (PET), X-ray computed tomography (CT), and magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) studies of the structure and biological functions of organ systems in animal and human subjects. The institute has research and educational programs for visiting scientists, postdoctoral scholars, and Ph.D. graduate students which include the development of novel multimedia computer-based learning technologies. There are also faculty and student exchange programs with a number of domestic and foreign universities. Dr. Michael E. Phelps is the director (310-825-6539).

The DENTAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE, with principal laboratories on the seventh floor of the School of Dentistry, fosters research related to oral health. Areas of investigation include biomaterials, clinical studies, craniofacial biology, immunology/immunogenetics, oral neurology/pain, periodontology, and ultrastructure/cell biology. The Office of the Director is located in 73-017 Center for the Health Sciences (310-206-8045).

The MENTAL RETARDATION RESEARCH CENTER, located on the C level and the fourth through eighth floors of the Neuropsychiatric Institute and Hospital, provides laboratories and clinical facilities for research and training in mental retardation and related aspects of human development. Its interdisciplinary activities range from anthropological studies to molecular aspects of inherited metabolic diseases. Administrative offices are located in 58-258 NPI&H (310-825-0313).

The JULES STEIN EYE INSTITUTE is one of the best equipped centers for research and treatment of eye diseases in the world. This comprehensive facility, located in the Center for the Health Sciences (310-825-5053), is devoted to the study of vision, the care of patients with eye disease, and education in the broad field of ophthalmology. Outpatient, inpatient, and surgical facilities are provided. The Doris Stein Eye Research Center houses new research and training programs concentrating on major eye diseases worldwide.

The UCLA-DOE LABORATORY OF STRUCTURAL BIOLOGY AND MOLECULAR MEDICINE, located in Warren Hall (900 Veteran Avenue, 310-825-9431) and the Center for the Health Sciences, is funded through a contract with the Department of Energy. Research is conducted in biomolecular and cellular science, environmental biology, nuclear medicine, and structural biology and genetics. Laboratory faculty members have joint appointments in academic departments and teach at both undergraduate and graduate levels. Major facilities include a biomedical cyclotron, advanced scanning equipment, a cobalt radiation facility, environmentally controlled growth chambers, a vivarium, and an advanced structural biology laboratory.

In the health sciences, research carried out in ORUs is complemented by research on neurological and neuromuscular diseases in the Lewis Neuromuscular Research Center, the Reed Neurological Research Center, and the Neuropsychiatric Institute and Hospital. The Jonsen Comprehensive Cancer Center, one of only 27 comprehensive centers in the nation, is renowned for the breadth and excellence of its cancer research. The UCLA AIDS Institute is deeply involved in all aspects of the fight against AIDS, with basic research in epidemiology, immunology, and the clinical management of AIDS patients being done in the Center for Clinical AIDS Research and Education. And the School of Public Health, which recently established the Southern California Injury Prevention Research Center, has joined forces with the School of Medicine to form the Center for Health Promotion and Disease Prevention, another clinical research program to enhance the health of the community.

Life Sciences

The MOLECULAR BIOLOGY INSTITUTE provides research and training resources in molecular biology for faculty from the College of Letters and Science and the School of Medicine, and includes the Parvin Cancer Research Laboratories. Administrative offices are located in 168 MBI (310-825-1018).

The CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF WOMEN, located in 276 Kinsey Hall (310-825-0590), coordinates and disseminates interdisciplinary research on women and gender by sponsoring conferences, publications, programs for affiliated and visiting scholars and graduate students, directories of scholars doing research on women and gender at UCLA and throughout the UC system, an ongoing feminist research seminar, and a public lecture series on Women, Culture, and Society. In collaboration with other UC campuses, women's studies programs, and community groups, the center seeks to address public policies affecting women's lives.

The Fernald Child Study Center is a life sciences interdisciplinary research unit created to study and treat a variety of childhood behavioral problems and learning disorders. And the Center for the Study of Evolution and the Origin of Life melds the diverse research of more than 100 UCLA faculty members in the study of the emergence and evolution of life on Earth.

Physical Sciences and Engineering

The INSTITUTE OF GEOPHYSICS AND PLANETARY PHYSICS (IGPP) is a multicampus research unit (MRU) of the University of California; the branch at UCLA is engaged in research in climate dynamics, geophysics, geochemistry, space physics, biochemistry, and biology. Research topics include the nature of the Earth, moon, and other planetary bodies, global environmental change, the origin of terrestrial life, the dynamical properties of the sun and solar wind, and the evolution of stellar interiors. Facilities include analytical laboratories in meteoritics, glaciology, petrology, geochronology, archaeology, and the origins of life, laboratories for experiments in fluid dynamics and high-pressure physics, developmental laboratories for instrumentation in space physics and seismology, and computational laboratories for large-scale numerical modeling relevant to the above topics. The UCLA branch office is located in 3839 Slichter Hall (310-825-1664).

The INSTITUTE OF PLASMA AND FUSION RESEARCH, located in 44-139 Engineering IV (310-825-5090), is dedicated to research into plasma physics, fusion energy, and the application of plasmas in other disciplines. Students, professional research staff, and faculty study basic laboratory plasmas, plasma-fusion confinement experiments, fusion engineering and nuclear technology, computer simulations and the theory of plasmas, space plasma physics and experimental simulation of space plasma phenomena, advanced plasma diagnostic development, laser-plasma interactions, and the use of plasma in applications ranging from particle accelerators to the processing of materials and surfaces used in microelectronics or coatings.

The WHITE MOUNTAIN RESEARCH STATION is a multicampus research unit (MRU) dedicated to high-altitude research. Four separate laboratory sites near Bishop, California, ranging up to 14,250 feet above sea level, include the highest permanent teaching and research facilities in North America. Research includes studies in archaeology and the biological, medical, and physical sciences. The administrative office is located in 6713 Geology (310-825-2093).

Among other interdisciplinary activities in the physical sciences and engineering at UCLA, the Center for Clean Technology in the School of Engineering and Applied Science fosters research on the interaction between technology and the environment, focusing on pollution prevention and control. On other frontiers, an Artificial Intelligence Laboratory designed exclusively for research in this burgeoning field operates under the wing of the Computer Science Department, and a Manufacturing and Automation Research Center, funded by the National Science Foundation, is operated jointly by UCLA's engineering school and the University of Southern California (USC).

Social Sciences

The OFFICE OF INTERNATIONAL STUDIES AND OVERSEAS PROGRAMS (ISOP) supports and coordinates international and foreign area studies at UCLA. Among the area studies centers and programs that operate under its aegis are four major interdisciplinary research centers that rank among the best in the nation. Some of the world's leading specialists on area studies have joined these centers.

The Coleman African Studies Center (10244 Bunche Hall, 310-825-3779) is one of the major interdisciplinary centers for African studies in the U.S. It encourages and coordinates research and teaching on Africa in the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences, as well as in the professional schools of Architecture and Urban Planning, Arts, Education and Information Studies, Law, Medicine, Public Health, and Theater, Film, and Television. The center also sponsors an active program of public lectures, seminars, publications, and academic exchanges with African institutions and an outreach service to the Southern California community.

The Latin American Center (10343 Bunche Hall, 310-825-4571) encourages and coordinates interdisciplinary research, academic programs, and publications. By linking campus activities with developments in the field and in other institutional settings, the center benefits UCLA, the broader community of Latin Americanists, and the general public.

The von Grunebaum Center for Near Eastern Studies (10286 Bunche Hall, 310-825-1181) coordinates research projects and academic programs related to the Near East and administers the interdisciplinary programs leading to the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Islamic Studies. The combined resources of the center include the largest faculty, one of the most comprehensive library holdings, and the richest variety of Near and Middle Eastern studies courses of any institution in the Western Hemisphere. The center also conducts significant publication and outreach programs.

The Center for Russian and East European Studies (11367 Bunche Hall, 310-825-4060) develops and coordinates teaching and research on Russia and the countries of Europe through conferences, lectures, seminars, and academic exchange programs with European and Russian institutions.

ISOP also supports other interdisciplinary activities such as the study of arms control, nuclear proliferation, and international cooperation and security in the Center for International Relations. The Center for Pacific Rim Studies administers the China Exchange Program and the South and Southeast Asia Program and promotes research, course offerings, seminars, and faculty and student exchange programs on the people and nations bordering the Pacific Ocean; the Center for Chinese Studies has developed a major graduate program in Chinese studies, as well as significant research on historical and social science topics; an NDEA Joint Center in East Asian Studies with the University of Southern California sponsors joint seminars and conferences focused on the East Asian region; the Center for Japanese Studies fosters research on Japan and scholarly exchange with Japanese institutions; and the Center for Korean Studies promotes interdisciplinary research and coordinates campus programs on Korea. Other ISOP programs focus on development studies, language teaching, and academic exchange. In addition, ISOP houses offices of the UC Education Abroad Program, the Southern California Fulbright Visiting Scholars Program, and the Southern California Consortium on International Studies (SOCCIS).

The INSTITUTE OF AMERICAN CULTURES is responsible for strengthening and coordinating interdisciplinary research and instruction in ethnic studies with special attention to UCLA's four ethnic studies research centers. The institute conducts no research itself but makes funds available for research and fellowships and promotes the activities of the four centers whose goals are to study and illuminate the histories of African Americans, American Indians, Asian Americans, Chicanas/Chicanos, and others, and to apply the University's capabilities to the analysis and solution of specific social issues. These centers promote faculty research, encourage the development of new courses and degree programs, assist departments in recruiting scholars, build library and other resources, and publish literature to disseminate the results of their work.

The Center for Afro-American Studies (160 Haines Hall, 310-825-7403) conducts and sponsors research on the African American experience, coordinates the Afro-American studies curriculum, publishes research results, and sponsors community service programming.

The American Indian Studies Center (3220 Campbell Hall, 310-825-7315) serves as an educational and research catalyst and includes a library, master's and postdoctoral fellowship programs, and a publishing unit that produces a number of books and a quarterly journal.

The Asian American Studies Center (3230 Campbell Hall, 310-825-2974) seeks to increase the knowledge and understanding of the experiences of Asian Pacific peoples in America and promotes the development of material resources related to Asian American studies. The center includes a library, publications unit, student/community projects unit, postdoctoral fellowships, and a master's program.

The Chicano Studies Research Center (180 Haines Hall, 310-825-2363) is engaged in the development and articulation of a Chicano/Latino intellectual perspective that recognizes and fosters the creative, professional, and social potential of the Chicano/Latino population. The center, founded in 1969, directs its research efforts in several essential areas, with particular emphasis on history, cultural studies, women's studies, immigration, education, and health and participates in the National Association for Chicano Studies. In addition, the center is one of several campus members of the Inter-University Program for Latino Research, housing the Latino Leadership Opportunity Program. It sponsors several research competitions and a predoctoral and postdoctoral fellowship program.

The INSTITUTE OF ARCHAEOLOGY, located in A210 Fowler Building (310-206-8934), is dedicated to studying and understanding the past through laboratory studies of artifacts, analysis of field data, creation of archives to store this information, and the education of students and interested community members via publications and lectures. The institute, the only one of its kind in the U.S., coordinates various academic and practical facilities for more than 40 researchers and many graduate students and volunteers in 10 associated academic departments. It regularly sponsors workshops and special courses. Research facilities include the Information Center (regional office of the California Archaeological Inventory), Ceramics Laboratory, Computer Imaging of Archaeological Data, Obsidian Hydration and Lithics Analysis Laboratory, Paleoethnobotany Laboratory, Rock Art Archive, and Zooarchaeology Laboratory. The Publications Unit publishes the findings of scholars from UCLA and other archaeology centers, while the Public Lecture Program provides a forum for the public presentation of recent archaeological discoveries and advances.

The INSTITUTE OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, located in 83 Haines Hall (310-825-1964), has an interdisciplinary research and publishing program directed toward the study of all aspects of the employment relationship, including labor markets, labor law, labor/management relations, equal employment opportunity, occupational safety and health, and related issues. It also offers social policy and employment relations programs to the general public, unions, and management.

The INSTITUTE FOR SOCIAL SCIENCE RESEARCH promotes interdisciplinary research on a broad spectrum of contemporary sociological, psychological, political, and economic problems and community issues. Research components include the Center for American Politics and Public Policy, Center for the Study of Urban Poverty, Interdisciplinary Program in Social Statistics, Survey Research Center, Social Science Data Archive, Organizational Research Program, and Center for Social Theory and Comparative History. Training in survey research methodology is available to students through participation in the annual Southern California Social Survey. The institute publishes the ISSR Quarterly, a newsletter for the UCLA social sciences community, and ISSR Working Papers in the Social Sciences; it is located in 303 GSLIS Building (310-825-0711).

Other interdisciplinary activities in the social sciences include the nationally respected Business Forecasting Project in UCLA's John E. Anderson Graduate School of Management and the Center for the Study of Evaluation in the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies which is at the forefront of efforts to improve the quality of schooling in America. In addition, the Center on the Teaching and Learning of History in Elementary and Secondary Schools brings K-12 teachers and social studies professors from throughout the country together in an effort to improve history teaching. The Center for the Study of Urban Poverty initiates new research on issues related to urban poverty and sponsors seminars in the field. The Center for the Study of the Environment and Society researches and addresses such issues as air pollution, water quality, and the public response to environmental concerns. And the Center for Communication Policy is a national leader in communications public policy issues such as technological innovations in telecommunications and the social and political impact of these changes.

Arts and Humanities

The CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF COMPARATIVE FOLKLORE AND MYTHOLOGY, located in 1037 AGSM (310-825-4242), supports and coordinates the study of comparative folklore and mythology. Resources include the Wayland D. Hand Library, the Visual Media and Folk Medicine Archives, the Archive of California and Western Folklore, the American Popular Beliefs and Superstitions Archive and Encyclopedia Project, the Archive of Folk Song and Music, and other collections of field recordings, records, and films.

The CENTER FOR MEDIEVAL AND RENAISSANCE STUDIES supports the research activities of some 20 academic departments dealing with the development of civilization between A.D. 300 and 1650. Major programs include funding research assistants, appointing postdoctoral associates and visiting professors, organizing conferences and colloquia, and supporting departments in inviting lecturers. The center sponsors the publication of two journals, Viator, with emphasis on intercultural and interdisciplinary studies, and Comitatus, with articles by graduate students and recent Ph.D. graduates. The center is located in 1628 Maxxam Building (10880 Wilshire Boulevard, 310-825-1880).

The CENTER FOR SEVENTEENTH- AND EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY STUDIES and the CLARK MEMORIAL LIBRARY are united under the administrative direction of the center and the College of Letters and Science. The center, located in 395 Dodd Hall (310-206-8552), organizes scholarly programs and workshops, seeks to enlarge the Clark Library holdings in the early modern period to enhance local research opportunities, has a publications program that makes the results of its conferences and workshops known to the community, provides long- and short-term fellowships to students and scholars doing research in early modern studies, offers graduate research assistantships and master classes, and organizes public programs and classical music concerts. The Clark Library, located approximately 10 miles from UCLA at 2520 Cimarron Street

(213-731-8529), is a rare book library specializing in seventeenth- and eighteenth-century British works. It has a renowned collection centering on Oscar Wilde and his era and significant holdings of modern fine printing and Western Americana. Bequeathed to UCLA in 1934 by William Andrews Clark, Jr., a prominent Los Angeles book collector and philanthropist, the extensive collection is housed in an elegant building in the West Adams district.

In other research activities, the Center for Bilingual Research and Second Language Education is working to produce a society that is proficient in at least two languages. In the Linguistics Phonetics Laboratory, one of the best-known laboratories of its kind in the nation, researchers are finding new ways to analyze speech functions and make voiceprints for use in law enforcement. In the Hammer Center for Leonardo Studies and Research scholars have access to major resources for the study of the works of Leonardo da Vinci. The Center for the Study of Regional Dress has opened within UCLA's Fowler Museum of Cultural History to advance the study of past and present cloth and clothing traditions through research, exhibitions, and teaching. And the Center for Jewish Studies sponsors lectures, conferences, and visiting scholars and coordinates Jewish studies activities on campus.

Resources for Research and Study

University Library System

Library facilities are crucial to both study and research. The University Library on the UCLA campus is one of the country's largest and most renowned academic libraries and consists of the University Research Library, the College Library, and 11 specialized subject libraries. Collectively they contain more than six million volumes and extensive holdings of government publications, pamphlets, manuscripts, maps, microforms, music scores, recordings, photographs, and slides. They regularly receive over 95,000 serial publications.

ORION, the library's on-line information system, provides location and holdings information for most library materials and current information for materials on order or in processing. On-line circulation status information for most libraries is also available. ORION public access terminals are located in many campus libraries, and demonstrations and workshops in using the system are available at the beginning of each term.

Students have access to the stacks in most libraries. A handbook describing the organization, services, and hours of the University libraries is available in all of the campus libraries.

The Reprographic Service, housed in 2081 Engineering I, can duplicate books, periodicals, manuscripts, and maps.

University Research Library

The University Research Library on north campus is a modern six-story building designed primarily as a graduate research library serving the social sciences, humanities, and several professional schools. The building houses over three million volumes arranged in open stacks, as well as the Reference Room, Circulation Department, Graduate Reserve Service, Periodicals Room, and Audiovisual Service. The Microform Reading Service, with some 1,110,000 microcopies of newspapers, books, and periodicals, has a variety of reading and copying equipment. During academic sessions library hours are weekdays 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. (6 p.m. Friday), Saturday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Sunday 1 to 10 p.m.

The Department of Special Collections in the Research Library contains rare books and pamphlets, the University Archives, early maps, and files of early California newspapers. Manuscript collections include the literary papers of Henry Miller and Anaïs Nin, as well as the private papers of Jack Benny, Charles Laughton, Carey McWilliams, King Vidor, and Nobel Peace Prize winner Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, a UCLA alumnus. Other significant holdings include the Sadleir Collection of nineteenth-century fiction, generally regarded as the finest of its kind, and the Ahmanson-

Murphy Collection of Early Italian Printing (1471-1550), with a concentration on Aldine imprints. The department also includes UCLA's Oral History Program, a national leader in the field with over 400 interviews with prominent individuals since the program was founded in 1959.

The Public Affairs Service, also housed in the Research Library, collects official publications of the U.S. government, the State of California, California counties and cities, selected U.S. state and local governments, foreign nations and selected foreign states and provinces, plus those of the United Nations and some of its specialized agencies and a number of other international organizations. Also housed are current English-language, nongovernmental pamphlets on public affairs representing a wide spectrum of political and social opinion, with strong emphasis on social welfare, economic, social, and political conditions, and industrial relations.

College Library

The College Library is designed to meet the instructional and informational needs of most undergraduate students. It is permanently located in the Powell Library Building but is housed in a temporary structure — commonly known as "Towell" — until 1995 while Powell undergoes seismic renovation. Towell is located at the foot of Janss Steps between the Dance Building and the Men's Gym and houses 200,000 books and periodicals; course reserve materials, including audiocassettes, lecture notes, past examinations, and APS (Academic Publishing Service) readings available for loan; and the Humanities Computing Laboratory with 36 IBM PS/2s, Macintoshes, and printers. During academic sessions library hours are weekdays 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. (6 p.m. Friday), Saturday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Sunday 1 to 10 p.m.

Specialized Subject Libraries

The resources of the specialized campus libraries are devoted mainly to subjects of concern to the departments or professional schools which they serve, but their materials are available to all UCLA students and faculty. A recorded message (310-825-8301) provides current hours of service for each library.

The Arts Library in Dickson Art Center houses material on art, art history, design, film, television, theater, architecture, city and regional planning, and transportation. The Belt Library of Vinciana is also located in Dickson Art Center. Arts Special Collections, located in the University Research Library, contain noncirculating materials, including the Princeton Index of Christian Art, the Artists' File, and other special collections such as unpublished radio, film, and television scripts and archival records of major Southern California motion picture studios.

The Louise Darling Biomedical Library, in the Center for the Health Sciences, is one of the finest libraries of its kind in the country. Its 500,000 volumes and nearly 6,000 serial subscriptions serve all the UCLA health and life sciences departments/schools and the UCLA Medical Center.

The Chemistry Library includes material on chemistry, biochemistry, and molecular biology, while materials in Chinese, Japanese, and Korean are available in the Rudolph East Asian Library. Materials for engineering, astronomy, computer science, meteorology, and mathematics are kept in the Engineering and Mathematical Sciences Library, and major subjects covered by the Geology-Geophysics Library include geoscience, invertebrate paleontology, planetary and space science, and hydrology.

The Hugh and Hazel Darling Law Library has a substantial collection of over 400,000 volumes selected to further the course of instruction in the School of Law and the legal research needs of the UCLA community, and the Management Library serves the John E. Anderson Graduate School of Management and the various subjects related to business and management. The Bruman Map Library in Bunche Hall houses maps, city plans, nautical charts, and technical books and serials on all aspects of cartography and is one of the largest of its kind in the U.S.

The Rubsamen Music Library houses historical musicology and ethnomusicology materials, musical scores, recordings, and the personal collections of such composers as Henry Mancini, Alex North, and Ernst Toch. It is also responsible for the Archive of Popular American Music which contains sheet music, anthologies, arrangements for band and orchestra, sound recordings, and manuscripts. The Physics Library covers all aspects of that science, including acoustics and spectroscopy.

Other Campus Information Resources

In addition to the extensive collections of the University Library, a rich array of other information resources is available to the UCLA community. The archives and collections listed below are independently managed by individual UCLA departments and centers.

The American Indian Studies Center Library houses a collection on American Indian life, culture, and state of affairs in historical and contemporary perspectives, while the Asian American Studies Center Reading Room features Asian Pacific American resources. The Center for Afro-American Studies Library contains materials reflecting the African American experience in the social sciences, arts, and humanities.

Materials related to Chicano and Latino cultures are housed in the Chicano Studies Research Center Library, and the Clark Memorial Library contains rare books, manuscripts, and other noncirculating materials on English culture (1640-1750). The English Reading Room features a noncirculating collection of English and American literature.

The Ethnomusicology Archive houses sound recordings of folk, ethnic, and non-Western classical music, while the Institute for Social Science Research Data Archive Library contains a collection of statistical databases for the social sciences. The Seeds University Elementary School Library features contemporary materials for children from kindergarten through junior high school and adult works on children's literature.

Special Archive Collections

The UCLA FILM AND TELEVISION ARCHIVE is the world's largest university-based collection of motion pictures and broadcast programming. The archive's holdings of original film and television materials serve both the UCLA community and national and international constituencies.

The Motion Picture Collection, with more than 37,000 films, is the country's largest collection after the Library of Congress. Among its outstanding collections are 27 million feet of Hearst Metrotone News film dating back to 1919. Other noteworthy holdings include studio print libraries from Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount Pictures, Warner Brothers, Columbia Studios, New World Pictures, Universal Studios, and Orion. Special collections document the careers of William Wyler, Hal Ashby, Tony Curtis, Rosalind Russell, Stanley Kramer, Cecil B. DeMille, Harold Lloyd, and other persons of prominence in the American film industry.

The Television Collection is the nation's largest university-based collection of television broadcast materials. Its 35,000 titles include kinescopes, telefilms, and videotapes spanning television history from 1946 to the present, with emphasis on drama, comedy, and variety programming. A special collection of over 100,000 news and public affairs programs is also maintained.

The archive's exhibition program presents evening screenings and discussions in Melnitz Theater which focus on archival materials, new work by independent filmmakers, and a wide array of international films. For program information, call (310) 206-FILM.

The Archive Research and Study Center (ARSC), located in 180 Powell Library (310-206-5388), provides on-site viewing of the Film and Television Archive's collections and research consultation to students, faculty, and researchers. ARSC hours are weekdays 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Extended viewing hours are available at the Instructional Media Laboratory.

Art Galleries and Museums

A tour of all the UCLA museums and art galleries will take you from one corner of campus to the other. In the course of three decades UCLA's WIGHT ART GALLERY COMPLEX has evolved into a multifaceted museum, responsive to the needs of the University and the general public. The complex includes the Wight exhibition galleries, with 11,000 square feet of exhibition space in which to mount approximately eight exhibitions per year, the Grunwald Center for the Graphic Arts, and the Murphy Sculpture Garden.

Located in the Dickson Art Center on north campus, the Wight Art Gallery is open Tuesday 11 a.m. to 7 p.m., Wednesday through Friday 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday and Sunday 1 to 5 p.m. (closed Monday, major holidays, and July and August). Admission is free. Tours are offered Saturday and Sunday by the UCLA Art Council docents; special group tours may be arranged by calling (310) 825-3264. The administrative office is located in 1100 Dickson Art Center. For a schedule of exhibitions, call (310) 825-9345.

On the second floor of the Wight Art Gallery is the Grunwald Center for the Graphic Arts, which houses a distinguished collection of over 35,000 prints, drawings, and photographs. Maintained as a study and research facility for the benefit of students and the community, the center's permanent holdings include significant European and American examples from the fifteenth century to the present. It is particularly noted for its collection of German expressionist prints formed by Fred Grunwald and the comprehensive holdings of Matisse and Picasso, as well as the Richard Vogler Cruikshank collection and the Frank Lloyd Wright collection of Japanese prints. The center, located in 2122 Dickson Art Center (310-825-3783), is open by appointment Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The Murphy Sculpture Garden, located between Bunche Hall and the Wight Art Gallery, contains a collection of over 70 major works by Rodin, Matisse, Calder, Lachaise, Lipchitz, Moore, Miro, Hepworth, and many other late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century masters. All works in the growing collection, situated on a picturesque five-acre expanse, are private gifts to the University.

The FOWLER MUSEUM OF CULTURAL HISTORY is internationally known for the quality of its collections and exhibits. Its collections encompass the arts and material culture of much of the world, with particular emphasis on West and Central Africa, Oceania, and Latin America. The museum offers assistance with instruction and research and sponsors major exhibitions, lecture programs, and symposia. Administrative offices are located in 1586 Fowler Building (310-825-4361).

Other Resources

The OFFICE OF ACADEMIC COMPUTING (OAC) provides microcomputer and workstation support services through its Microcomputer Support Office (MSO), campus backbone network services through its Campus Network Services (CNS) group, and supercomputer services through its Computing Services group. OAC offers a broad range of services, including an IBM ES/9000 Model 900 supercomputer with six vector facilities; IBM SP/1 high-performance parallel processing system; public computing facilities; instruction in the use of computer hardware and software through free noncredit classes; professional consulting services; user documentation and Perspective, a quarterly journal; and assistance to departments in the selection of microcomputer and workstation hardware and software and computing assistance to faculty, staff, and students with disabilities through MSO.

The Microcomputer Support Office, located in 2035 AGSM (310-825-7408), provides services enabling departmental computer support coordinators to provide assistance to faculty and students on the use of microcomputers and advanced workstations, as well as special services in computing for faculty, students, and staff with disabilities. MSO services are intended to support the integration of microcomputers and advanced workstations into administrative, instructional, and research programs as well as individual microcomputer acquisition and use. MSO supports local area networks and their connection to the campus backbone network and coordinates site licenses, user groups, and an electronic newsletter. Most services are available through the Microcomputer Information Center (MIC).

OAC's IBM ES/9000 runs the MVS/ESA and AIX/ESA operating systems and is available to all colleges, schools, and departments within UCLA, as well as to all registered students. OAC maintains a large library of applications software, including statistical, language, and graphics packages. The ES/9000 with its vector facilities and the SP/1 are particularly appropriate for numerically intensive computing and data management tasks. In the numerically intensive computing area, OAC provides a code clinic with professional consultants to analyze and improve the efficiency of specialized code in numerically intensive computing applications. In the visualization area, OAC consultants work with users in producing high-quality graphic output necessary for research in many scientific disciplines. OAC is connected to the campus backbone network, enabling access to its services wherever there is a connection to the network. These services include access to ORION, the UCLA on-line library information system; use of BEN, an electronic communication system; and access to the Internet. Information on how to apply for an account to use any of OAC's services is available in the OAC User Relations Office (4302 Math Sciences, 310-825-7548) weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The DIVISION OF LABORATORY ANIMAL MEDICINE, located in 1V-211 CHS (310-825-7281), is responsible for the procurement, husbandry, and general welfare of animals required for teaching and investigative services. It also administers the veterinary medical and husbandry programs throughout the campus.

The University of California NATURAL RESERVE SYSTEM offers 26 reserves statewide to be used for field studies in unspoiled natural sites and for protected scientific experiments. For more information, contact Robert M. Gibson, 1122 Life Sciences (310-825-6459).

The BIOLOGICAL COLLECTIONS of the Biology Department include marine fishes from the Eastern Pacific and Gulf of California, and birds and mammals primarily from the Western U.S., Mexico, and Central America. The department also maintains a more limited collection of amphibians, reptiles, and fossil vertebrates, as well as collections of algae, fungi, and bacteria. For more information, contact Jaap Hillenius, A339 Life Sciences (310-825-1282).

Although the UCLA campus as a whole has an attractive, park-like atmosphere, there are two distinctive garden areas worthy of special note. The eight-acre MATHIAS BOTANICAL GARDEN, located in the southeast corner of campus, contains some 4,000 species of native and exotic plants. It is used for botanical teaching and research. This peaceful wooded area, a center for testing the usefulness of woody subtropical plants, is a favorite spot for quiet strolls. The botanical garden also has a research Herbarium containing 180,000 dried plant specimens. The administrative office is located in 124 Botany (310-825-3620).

The CARTER JAPANESE GARDEN in nearby Bel Air, designed and constructed by Japanese artisans and architects using native plants and artifacts, is an authentic Kyoto-style garden. The terraced two-acre garden contains such traditional and symbolic features as a teahouse, shrine, antique stone water basins, lanterns, waterfalls, and a pond with Japanese carp (koi) swimming among water lilies. The garden, a private gift to UCLA, is used by faculty and students for study and research, by departments for professional events, and by others seeking a serene setting for meditation and solitude. It is open to groups and individuals by reservation only. Call the Visitors Center at (310) 206-8147.

Supplementary Educational Programs

In addition to the regular academic programs which are described in Chapters 5 through 17 of this catalog, the following optional programs are available to UCLA's undergraduate and graduate students.

Summer Sessions

UCLA offers more than 500 courses from approximately 60 UCLA departments in six-, eight-, and 10-week sessions. Many students take advantage of Summer Sessions to enroll in courses they were unable to take during the year, repeat courses in which they may have done poorly, lighten their academic load for the following term, or complete graduation requirements more quickly.

Admission to Summer Sessions does not constitute admission to the University in either undergraduate or graduate standing. Students who wish to attend UCLA in regular session must follow admission procedures described in Chapter 2 (undergraduate) or Chapter 3 (graduate).

If you are a regularly enrolled undergraduate student, you may attend UCLA Summer Sessions for full unit and grade credit. Summer Sessions work is recorded on your UCLA transcript, and grades earned are computed in your grade-point average. Check with your college or school counselor about applying these courses toward your minimum unit requirements and for any limitations your college or school may impose on Summer Sessions study.

If you are a regularly enrolled graduate student, you may, with departmental approval, take regular session courses offered in Summer Sessions for credit toward a master's or doctoral degree; consult your graduate adviser in advance concerning this possibility. Summer Sessions courses may also satisfy the academic residence requirement for master's or doctoral degrees (see Chapter 3 for details).

Unlike enrollment in regular terms, you may attend another college institution for credit while you are enrolled in Summer Sessions. Applications and more information are available in 1147 Murphy Hall (310-794-8333).

UCLA Extension

With over 110,000 adult student enrollments each year, UCLA Extension is one of the largest university continuing education programs in the world. It is designed to bring the benefits of the University — its scholars, research, and resources — to the community and the state as a whole.

Many of UCLA Extension's 4,500 classes are innovative and experimental in content, format, and teaching methods. Credit and noncredit courses are offered in nearly every academic discipline, in many interdisciplinary areas, and in emerging fields. In addition, Extension offers special programs each term on topical issues as well as those of ongoing public concern. Many noncredit Extension courses offer the opportunity to earn Continuing Education Units, widely used for relicensure and other professional/career-related purposes.

Although registering for Extension courses does not constitute admission to regular session, degree credit earned through Extension may apply toward the UCLA bachelor's or master's degree; consult your college or school counselor or graduate adviser before enrolling. For more information, see the sections on "Concurrent Enrollment and Transfer of Credit" and "Courses of Instruction" in Chapter 4. Graduate students should also see "Transfer of Credit" in Chapter 3.

The Extension Advisory Service offers assistance in planning long- or short-term study through Extension. The office is located in 114 UCLA Extension Building, 10995 Le Conte Avenue (310-206-6201). To obtain the current UCLA Extension Catalog, contact the Registration Office at (310) 825-9971. Hours are weekdays from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. (5 p.m. Friday).

Education Abroad Program (EAP)

Each year more than 1,400 undergraduate and graduate students from UC campuses study at distinguished universities throughout the world. UCLA students remain registered here while overseas and receive UC units and grade points for work completed abroad. Currently, EAP offers study opportunities at nearly 100 different universities in 32 countries: Australia, Austria, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Denmark, Egypt, England, France, Germany, Ghana, Hong Kong, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Korea, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Russia, Scotland, Spain, Sweden, Taiwan, and Thailand. Participants generally spend a full academic year abroad, enjoying a unique opportunity to enhance language skills and become involved in the culture of the host country. One-term programs are available in Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, France, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Italy (Bocconi), Japan, Korea, Mexico, Netherlands, Russia, Sweden, Taiwan, and Thailand. Summer programs are offered in Denmark and Mexico. In Costa Rica there is a year program and a one-term tropical biology field study. For all programs a special orientation program and, when necessary, intensive language training are included. During the year UC faculty members at the host university assist with scholastic or personal problems.

EAP is open to all undergraduate students who have (1) completed a minimum of 90 quarter units (junior standing) prior to departure, (2) at least a B average (3.0 GPA) overall at the time of application, and (3) the support of the UCLA EAP Selection Committee. Some programs have a language requirement as well.

Graduate students who have completed at least one year of graduate work and have the approval of their graduate adviser and the dean of the Graduate Division may participate at most study centers.

Costs for participation in EAP vary from $1,740 to $16,004, but University financial aid is available to those who qualify. Applications must be filed several months in advance. For more information, contact the EAP Office in 28 Haines Hall (310-825-4889, 825-4995).

Interdisciplinary Colloquia

Organized colloquia involving several disciplines are offered from time to time in conformity with faculty and student interests. They are open to all faculty members, interested undergraduates, and graduate students assigned to the colloquia by their advisers. Credit is not awarded directly but may be given through appropriate departmental courses. For information about the committees in charge of the colloquia, call the assistant to the provost of the College of Letters and Science at (310) 825-4621.

The Marschak Interdisciplinary Colloquium on Mathematics in the Behavioral Sciences provides a forum for interaction among faculty and students interested in the applications of mathematics and statistics to the behavioral sciences. Disciplines include anthropology, architecture, artificial intelligence, biology, business, computer science, economics, education, engineering, geography, linguistics, management, operations research, philosophy, political science, psychology, public health, public planning and policy, sociology, and systems analysis.

The colloquium sponsors presentations by leading experts in these fields, including faculty members from UCLA, other UC campuses, and other universities, and meets on alternate Fridays from 1 to 3 p.m. in 2270 AGSM during the academic year. Announcements of presentations, including abstracts of the papers to be presented, are circulated and posted on campus; announcements also appear in UCLA Today. The colloquium is directed by Michael D. Intriligator, professor of economics and political science. For further information, contact the Western Management Science Institute at (310) 825-1581 or 825-4144.

The Rothman Colloquium in Cognitive Science, organized by the interdisciplinary Cognitive Science Research Program, sponsors presentations by leading experts in the broad field of cognitive science, which explores the nature of human and artificial intelligence. Participating disciplines include artificial intelligence, biology, linguistics, neuroscience, philosophy, and psychology. The list of speakers is circulated to the participating departments on campus. For further information, contact the Cognitive Science Research Program at (310) 825-0951.

Student Life

Living Accommodations

Where you live while attending UCLA can play an important role in your total college experience. Many students, especially those in their first year, choose to live on campus; others opt for a University-owned apartment or a private apartment in one of the many surrounding communities.

There are many different housing options available. Decide early which ones you plan to pursue and apply for or follow up on them as soon as possible. If you plan to live off campus, arrive early to make your housing arrangements for the coming academic year. Some students even pay rent year-round to insure accommodations, and try to sublet during the summer months.

The UCLA Community Housing Office, 350 De Neve Drive (Sproul Hall Annex), Los Angeles, CA 90024-1495, (310) 825-4491, provides information and current listings for University-owned apartments, cooperatives, private apartments, roommates, rooms in private homes, room and board in exchange for work, and short-term housing. Rental listings are updated daily. The housing office also has bus schedules, area maps, and neighborhood profiles. A current Registration Card or letter of acceptance and a valid photo identification card are required for service.

The International Student Center on Gayley Avenue helps international students find housing and may also provide temporary facilities until suitable permanent housing arrangements are made.

UCLA Housing Options and Opportunities: Information and Application, a booklet which covers housing options in much greater detail, is mailed to all students when they are accepted for admission.

On-Campus Housing

Living on campus can add an extra dimension of academic support, enjoyment, and convenience to your UCLA experience. Four residence halls (Dykstra, Hedrick, Rieber, and Sproul Halls), two residential suite complexes (Hitch and Saxon Residential Suites), and Sunset Village accommodate nearly 6,000 undergraduates, while Hershey Hall houses 334 graduate students. All on-campus housing is coed and within walking distance to classrooms.

Residence hall rooms are shared by two or three students. Residential suites — shared by four or six students — consist of two bedrooms, a full bathroom, and a common living room. Sunset Village has one- and two-bedroom units, each with a full bath, shared by two or three students per bedroom. The four residence hall cafeterias and the dining commons in Sunset Village accommodate all on-campus residents and serve 19 meals per week. Residents may also select a 14- or 11-meal plan.

Applications for on-campus housing are contained in the UCLA Housing Options and Opportunities: Information and Application booklet, available at the UCLA On-Campus Housing Assignment Office, 270 De Neve Drive, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1381, (310) 825-4271. To apply for on-campus housing, your completed application must be postmarked by the following deadlines:

- March 31 (June 1 for graduate students) for Fall Quarter 1994
- October 27 for Winter Quarter 1995
- January 26 for Spring Quarter 1995
- March 31, 1995 (June 1 for graduate students) for Fall Quarter 1995

Following each of these dates, the Housing Assignment Office randomly designates a number to each application received; the number determines the order in which you are offered assignment to on-campus housing. All new freshman and transfer students who are admitted for Fall Quarter and apply for on-campus housing by the stated deadline are guaranteed on-campus housing.

The full cost per student for the 1994-95 academic year (Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters, excluding vacation periods) is $4,835 (triples) or $5,580 (doubles) for residence halls, $5,980 (six persons) or $6,625 (four persons) for suites and Sunset Village, and $6,055 (triples) or $6,700 (doubles) for Sunset Village, plus a $22.44 membership fee in the On-Campus Housing Student Association. These rates include 19 meals per week.

The Office of Residential Life, in the Residential Life Building near Sproul Hall (310-825-3401), is responsible for the conduct of students in residence halls and suites and provides professional and student staff members to counsel residents on programming and other problems. The office is also a designated Sexual Harassment Information Center, as well as a campus Harassment Information Center, available to all UCLA students (see "Harassment" in the Appendix for more information).

University Apartments for Single Graduate and Family Students

UCLA maintains nearly 1,200 off-campus apartments about five miles from campus for married, single-parent, and single graduate students. Unfurnished one-, two-, and three-bedroom units are available. One-bedroom rentals for 1994-95, excluding utilities, are expected to range from $516 to $671 per month. Since waiting lists for family student housing are long, do not wait until you have been accepted to UCLA to apply. Verification of marriage and/or copies of children's birth certificates (English translation) must accompany your application. Call University Apartments South at (310) 398-4692 for up-to-date information.

University Apartments for Single Students

Over 230 apartments for single students in four off-campus facilities are maintained by the University; all are located within walking distance of campus. One-bedroom rentals for 1994-95, excluding utilities, are expected to range from $750 to $895 per month. All occupants must be full-time UCLA students; rental agreements are month-to-month. An application is included in the UCLA Housing Options and Opportunities: Information and Application booklet, available at the UCLA On-Campus Housing Assignment Office. Apartments are available throughout the year, especially at the end of each term, on a first come, first served basis. Call University Apartments North at (310) 825-2293 for current availability information (best selection is in June and July). Roommate vacancies in University apartments are routinely posted in the UCLA Community Housing Office.

Cooperatives/Boarding Houses

There is one student cooperative within walking distance of campus which provides an atmosphere similar to residence halls except that you must work three to four hours per week as partial payment for room and board. There are also several boarding houses and private residence halls convenient to UCLA. Phone numbers are available from the UCLA Community Housing Office.

Fraternities and Sororities

Many of the 50 fraternities and sororities at UCLA own chapter houses on the west and east sides of campus respectively. For sororities, you must be a member to live in the house and generally will be able to move in after your first year of active membership. For fraternities, living in the house depends on the number of housing spaces available. Room, board, and dues are about the same as the monthly residence hall fee. During the summer break, most fraternities with chapter houses lease rooms to students, Greek or not (check listings at the UCLA Community Housing Office). For more information, contact Fraternity and Sorority Relations, 118 Men's Gym (310-825-6322).

Apartments

If you would like to rent an apartment off campus, you must carefully consider the kind of living arrangements you can afford. Your financial situation may dictate how close you live to UCLA and whether you can live alone or must share an apartment. Apartments within three miles of UCLA (Westwood, West Los Angeles, parts of Brentwood and Santa Monica) average $600 per month for single units and $850 for one-bedroom units. Apartments more than four miles away (Palms, Mar Vista, Culver City) usually cost $100 to $150 less. Listings change daily and are posted in the UCLA Community Housing Office. A roommate share board is also available.

Short-Term Housing

If you need temporary quarters until you find something permanent, there are several hotels and motels within five miles of campus with varying rates and accommodations. Most short-term housing is available for no more than one to three months, though some may be for longer periods. Sublets are most readily available from May to August. Hotel and motel listings, which may be requested by mail or phone, are available in the UCLA Community Housing Office.

Transportation

Parking Services

A limited number of parking permits are available for the main campus. Unfortunately, not all students who request a permit can be offered space in their area of preference. You may obtain an application and instructions at Parking Services (555 Westwood Plaza, Structure 8, Suite 100, 310-825-9871). To be considered, apply by the deadline dates listed on the Calendar at the beginning of this catalog or in the quarterly Schedule of Classes.

Students with permanent or temporary disabilities who have DMV-issued disabled persons' license plates or placards may apply to the Office for Students with Disabilities for parking assignments and on-campus transportation assistance. Students with short-term disabilities (usually less than three months) who do not have DMV-issued disabled persons' license plates or placards may obtain authorization for disabled parking through Student Health Service.

The application process for parking includes Parking Services' evaluation of your personal transportation needs. Parking assignments are based on a number of factors, including distance you live from campus, employment obligations, and other transportation and educational-related factors. Once evaluated, you are notified of your assignment or denial. You must accept and submit the parking offer by the published deadline. If you are not offered a permit for a particular term, you must reapply each term to be reconsidered. For more information, call Parking Services at (310) 825-9871.

Commuter Assistance-Ridesharing

The Commuter Assistance-Ridesharing (CAR) Office can help you find alternative means of transportation to and from campus other than driving alone in your car.

Many students form or join existing UCLA carpools and vanpools to save time and money and make the daily commute more pleasant. A carpool matchlisting service is free to all students and can be requested by contacting CAR at (310) 794-RIDE. Students who form a three-person carpool may apply for a student carpool permit through Parking Services (310-825-9871). There are over 100 vanpools serving over 65 communities throughout Southern California. Students can sign up for vanpools on a full-time (month-to-month) or part-time (occasional) basis. To find out whether a vanpool currently operates from your area, call the vanpool coordinator at (310) 794-RIDE.

An Emergency Ride Home (ERH) program has been developed to aid full-time UCLA vanpoolers and qualified part-time vanpoolers in the event of an emergency or other unscheduled need to get home quickly. The service consists of three options — night rider vans which are vanpools that arrive on campus at 9 and 9:30 a.m. and leave at 6 or 7 p.m., overnight rental car service, and emergency carpool matchlist service. For detailed information, contact CAR at (310) 794-RIDE.

Public bus lines connect UCLA to Santa Monica, Culver City, Beverly Hills, and most of the greater Los Angeles area. Bicycles, mopeds, and motorcycles are other popular ways to get to campus; several bike paths in the local area make your ride easier and safer, and there are special parking areas on campus specifically marked and equipped for these vehicles.

All of these transportation alternatives are described in the UCLA Commuter Guide, a booklet which also contains a carpool matchlist form, information on public bus routes, and helpful hints on getting to UCLA without using your car. It is available at the Commuter Assistance-Ridesharing Office (555 Westwood Plaza, Structure 8, Suite 200). CAR is open weekdays from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. (310-794-RIDE).

ASUCLA

Every registered UCLA student is a member of the Associated Students of UCLA (ASUCLA), one of the nation's largest such enterprises in terms of size, scope, and range of programs. The undergraduate and graduate student governments are integral parts of ASUCLA, which supports the following activities and services.

Food Service

ASUCLA operates the food service on the general campus and provides a number of innovative menu options at a variety of locations. Catering for special events is also available. Hours listed are for regular school sessions and vary during the summer and holiday periods.

BOMBSHELTER DELI AND BURGER BAR — This unique food service in the center of the Court of Sciences offers an assortment of traditional deli sandwiches, snacks, rice bowls, sushi, broiled hamburgers and chicken, and salads at reasonable prices. Hours are weekdays 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. (4 p.m. Friday).

CAMPUS CORNER — The oldest of the ASUCLA food facilities, Campus Corner is located just across Bruin Walk from Kerckhoff Hall. Taco Bell Express is on the north side, while the south side is being remodeled to offer a 1950s-style cafe menu of burgers, fries, and shakes. Hours are weekdays 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

COOPERAGE — On the A Level of Ackerman Union, the Cooperage offers Mexican food, pizza, grill items, gourmet salad bar, pastries, gourmet coffees, soft ice cream, and pocket sandwiches. A stage and sound system for live entertainment and a large-screen TV for major events are available. Hours are weekdays 9:30 a.m. to 10:30 p.m., Saturday 11 a.m. to 10:30 p.m., Sunday 11 a.m. to 10 p.m.

KERCKHOFF COFFEE HOUSE, on the second floor of Kerckhoff Hall, offers Baskin-Robbins ice cream specialties and a variety of teas, coffees, fresh pastries, and potages (hearty soups). Live entertainment is featured Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday nights. Hours are weekdays 7 a.m. to midnight, weekends 10 a.m. to 11 p.m.

LU VALLE COMMONS, located between the Anderson Graduate School of Management and the School of Law, features deli food, international entrees, hamburgers, and other grilled specialties. Hours are weekdays 7:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. (8 p.m. Friday), Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Sunday 11 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Within Lu Valle Commons is Jimmy's Coffee House, featuring specialty beverages, cheesecakes, and desserts. Hours are weekdays 7 a.m. to midnight (9 p.m. Friday), Saturday 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., Sunday 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

NORTH CAMPUS STUDENT CENTER — This facility, just southwest of the Research Library, offers a variety of Mexican entrees, frozen yogurt, fresh-baked cookies, pizza, deli and garden sandwiches, a wide selection of international-style entrees, hamburgers, and a salad bar. North Campus is open for breakfast, lunch, and dinner. Hours are weekdays 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. (8 p.m. Friday), Saturday 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., Sunday 11 a.m. to 8 p.m.

TREEHOUSE — Located on the first floor of Ackerman Union, the Treehouse offers a wide variety of choices. Tout de Suite has candy by the pound and frozen yogurt. Panda Express features quick-serve Asian specialties. Hansen's fresh fruit juices and smoothies are served at the Tropix beverage bar. On the east side of the dining room, the servery offers entrees and sandwiches, including ranch-fried chicken, chili, Italian-style dishes, deli salads, and traditional American favorites. The Treehouse servery is open weekdays 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Hours vary for Tout de Suite, Tropix, and Panda Express; they generally are open later than the servery and on weekends.

Students' Store

The ASUCLA Students' Store, the largest on-campus retail store in the nation, operates five campus locations. The oldest location, the Ackerman Union Students' Store (B Level of Ackerman Union, 310-825-7711), is undergoing seismic renovation, so some store departments are operating out of temporary quarters this year. Textbooks for most undergraduate and graduate programs are located in the Plaza Building, diagonally across from Ackerman Union. Other books, including reference, fiction, technical, and study aids, are stocked in the Bookzone on the A Level of Ackerman Union. Still on B Level are school and art supplies, calculators and other electronic items, UCLA insignia merchandise (Bearwear), men's and women's sportswear, and convenience store items. The Computer Store (on B Level) administers the University's computer purchase program; Macintosh and IBM computers are available to students, faculty, and staff at discounts up to 40 percent. Educational editions of software are discounted as much as 75 percent off retail prices. Hours during regular school sessions are weekdays 7:45 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. (6 p.m. Friday), Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Sunday noon to 5 p.m.

The Health Sciences Store on the first floor of the hospital (13-126 CHS, 310-825-7721) specializes in books and supplies for students in dentistry, medicine, public health, and related areas. The Lu Valle Commons Students' Store (just north of the School of Law, 310-825-7238) carries convenience items, magazines, and books, as well as textbooks for selected graduate programs (law, management, architecture, urban planning, social welfare). A dry cleaning service and copy center are also available. The North Campus Shop (in the North Campus Student Center, 310-206-0751) is a small convenience store offering snacks and stationery items. The Hill Top Shop (in Delta Terrace, Sunset Village, 310-206-4306) carries items specifically for dorm residents, including laundry detergent, closet organizers, and groceries. An automatic teller machine and photocopier are also available.

Lecture Notes/Academic Publishing Service

Lecture Notes is a subscription service that publishes concise weekly summaries of about 130 of UCLA's large lecture classes. Notes can be picked up in the Ackerman Union Students' Store (B Level of Ackerman Union, 310-206-0882). Academic Publishing Service (second floor of Ackerman Union with Graphic Services, 310-825-2831) reproduces course materials for professors, obtaining 5,000 copyright authorizations each year.

Job Opportunities on Campus

ASUCLA reserves over 2,500 part-time jobs for UCLA students in food service, the students' stores, Graphic Services, Travel Service, the student union, and other departments. Listings are posted outside the Personnel Office, 205 Kerckhoff Hall (310-825-7055).

The residence halls offer a number of positions, as do the University libraries; check at the residences and the Personnel Office in the University Research Library (310-825-7947). Other on-campus jobs may be available through the Placement and Career Planning Center (see "Student Services" later in this chapter).

Yearbook portraits, portrait photography, and passport photographs are available from the Campus Photo Studio (second floor of Ackerman Union, 310-206-0889), as are film, darkroom supplies, and discount photofinishing. Hours are weekdays 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Check Cashing/Banking

Cash is available via on-campus automatic tellers. On the A Level of Ackerman Union are automatic tellers for Bank of America, First Interstate Bank, and Wells Fargo Bank. Great Western Bank and Bank of America have automatic tellers on the patio between Campbell Hall and the North Campus Student Center. The Hill Top Shop in Delta Terrace has a Wells Fargo Bank automatic teller, and there is a First Interstate Bank automatic teller at the Health Sciences Store. Automatic tellers give access to the Star, Plus, or Cirrus network, but most banks charge fees for network access.

Students, faculty, and staff with current UCLA identification may also write checks for $20 over the amount of purchase at all Students' Store locations; a $2 minimum purchase is required.

Bruin Gold

Bruin Gold is a program that lets UCLA students use their official photo Student I.D. Cards as debit cards. You make a deposit ($20 minimum) into a Bruin Gold account linked to your photo I.D. Then your photo I.D. can be used for payment at virtually all ASUCLA locations — Students' Stores, Food Service, Travel Service, and Graphic Services. Thousands of students use Bruin Gold instead of credit cards or checks. Unlike credit cards, Bruin Gold helps you keep track of expenses — the current balance shows on the card reader after each transaction. Unlike checks, Bruin Gold can be used for small purchases, even those under $1. For complete information, contact the Bruin Gold Office on the first floor of Ackerman Union, (310) 825-2336.

Graduation Et Cetera

Caps and gowns may be purchased (bachelor's degree) or rented (advanced degrees) at Graduation Et Cetera in the Ackerman Union Students' Store (B Level of Ackerman Union, 310-825-2587). Graduation announcements, diploma mounting, and other services are also offered. Hours during regular school sessions are weekdays 7:45 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. (6 p.m. Friday), Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Sunday noon to 5 p.m.

Graphic Services

ASUCLA Graphic Services (second floor of Ackerman Union, 310-206-0894) is the campus center for printing, copying, typesetting, and other graphic services. Hours are weekdays 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. A smaller Graphic Services Center is located downstairs in Lu Valle Commons (310-825-7568).

The Graphic Services Ackerman Union office features a public fax machine and the Computer and Laser Rental Service (310-206-8454). Macintoshes and an IBM-compatible computer are available for hourly rental; term papers, newsletters, and flyers may be output on Postscript laser printers. A Linotronic 500 imagesetter for high-resolution work and a color thermal printer are also available.

Meeting Rooms

A variety of meeting rooms is available for use by the entire campus community. To reserve space in Ackerman Union, Kerckhoff Hall, or Lu Valle Commons, contact the Student Union Operations Office on the A Level of Ackerman Union (310-206-0836).

Shipping

The ASUCLA Service Center (211 Plaza Building, 310-825-2423) offers shipping via UPS and Federal Express. Hours are weekdays 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Travel Service

The ASUCLA Travel Service, located on the A Level of Ackerman Union (310-825-9131), offers a wide range of domestic and international airline flights and rail tickets, land arrangements and charter packages, student tours, and other travel-related services. Students may call UCLA-FLY (310-825-2359) for reservations. Hours are weekdays 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., Saturday noon to 4 p.m.

Student Activities

The opportunities to participate in extracurricular activities at UCLA are virtually unlimited. Though it is impossible to list all the activities here, the following are just a few of the many ways you can get involved in campus life and expand your horizons beyond classroom learning.

Student Government

In addition to its Services and Enterprises division, which is responsible for the services described above, ASUCLA includes the Undergraduate Students Association, the Graduate Students Association, and the Communications Board, which publishes the Daily Bruin and other campus student publications. Governed by a student-majority Board of Directors, ASUCLA operates and manages Ackerman Union, Kerckhoff Hall, North Campus Student Center, and Lu Valle Commons.

Many facets of student life at UCLA are sponsored or organized in some way by student government. Getting involved in the decision-making process can be extremely rewarding and can offer avenues of expression you may not find in other aspects of your university experience.

Undergraduate Student Government — The Undergraduate Students Association (USA), with offices in Kerckhoff Hall (310-825-7068), is governed by the Undergraduate Students Association Council. USAC administers the association's operating budget through a network of seven student commissions (Academic Affairs, Campus Events, Community Service, Cultural Affairs, Facilities, Financial Supports, and Student Welfare).

Many student government programs benefit both campus and community. The Community Service Commission (310-825-2333) serves Los Angeles through more than 20 programs such as Amigos del Barrio, offering academic and emotional support for Latina/Latino students; the UCLA Prison Coalition, providing tutoring for inmates of juvenile correctional institutions; and the UCLA Special Olympics, to name just a few. Over 2,500 students offer their services on a volunteer basis.

Student government also supports approximately 20 student advocacy groups on campus, such as the African Student Union, American Indian Students Association, Asian Pacific Coalition, Gay and Lesbian Association, International Students Association, MEChA, UCLA Jewish Student Union, and the Union of Students with Disabilities.

The Campus Events Commission (310-825-1958) provides the campus with free and low-cost entertainment programming, as well as opportunities for student involvement. The commission is responsible for the Speakers and Concert Programs, the Ackerman Film Program, and Mardi Gras.

The ASUCLA Library (304D Kerckhoff Hall, 310-206-7997; E-mail: library@asucla.ucla.edu) houses materials related to students and campus governance and aims to enhance understanding among students about University issues and to increase student involvement within the UCLA community.

Graduate Student Government — The Graduate Students Association is the official organization representing the interests of UCLA graduate students in academic, administrative, campus, and statewide areas. GSA appoints or elects graduate student members to important campus organizations and committees, including the ASUCLA Board of Directors and the Student Fee Advisory Committee, as well as to departmental student organizations and committees of the Academic Senate. In addition, GSA sponsors various graduate student journals, programs, and social events, including Melnitz Movies (UCLA student film program). GSA also maintains an electronic mail listserver for graduate student government bulletins, agendas, and general graduate student information. The GSA Office is located in 301 Kerckhoff Hall (310-206-8512; E-mail: gsa@asucla.ucla.edu).

Clubs and Organizations

Joining a club or organization is a wonderful way to become involved on campus. UCLA currently has about 500 different registered organizations — more than you will find on almost any other university campus in the country. Political, recreational, community service, cultural, academic, religious, and residential clubs can be found at UCLA. And it only takes three people to start your own if you can't find one that suits your interests.

Clubs focusing on sports and recreation are listed in the Department of Cultural and Recreational Affairs, located in the Wooden Center (310-825-3701). For a full listing of registered organizations, contact the Center for Student Programming (CSP), 337 Plaza Building (310-825-7041). This office can help you start a club or join an existing one, and serves as the official registry for all campus organizations. CSP assists students with program and leadership development and fund-raising, interprets and enforces University rules and regulations, and administers official and general purpose bulletin boards on campus.

All student organizations are eligible to use the services of Student Event Management (SEM), located in 337 Plaza Building (310-825-6690). SEM offers technical and logistical consulting for student events, including cost estimates and event management.

Complaints Against Student Organizations

Complaints of misconduct against officially recognized student organizations may be made at the Center for Student Programming (337 Plaza Building), Student and Campus Life (1104 Murphy Hall), or the Office of the Dean Students (1206 Murphy Hall).

Fraternities and Sororities

The 50 Greek letter social organizations and their four governing councils — Asian Greek Council, Interfraternity Council (IFC), National Pan-Hellenic Council, and Panhellenic Council — are sponsored by a component of the Center for Student Programming — Fraternity and Sorority Relations (FSR), 118 Men's Gym (310-825-6322).

Greek letter social organizations registered and officially recognized by FSR are eligible to participate in programs such as the Greek Leadership Conference, Membership Recruitment, Greek Week, New Member Forums, Dating Expectations Programs, intramural tournaments, and all University-sponsored programs. Individual student members of IFC and Panhellenic Council are eligible for scholarships offered by the Intersorority Mothers' Club, Los Angeles Alumnae Panhellenic, and their own councils. The FSR staff assists organizations in campus and community programming, fund raising, membership recruitment and development, training, and philanthropic activity.

FSR is also a designated campus Harassment Information Center available to all UCLA students (see "Harassment" in the Appendix for more information).

Fraternities and sororities provide the security of friendship and academic support while encouraging personal development and expansion. Members have group and individual responsibilities related to their particular interests and talents, and all take part in the group's programs and support networks. "Greeks" follow their founding principles of service, scholarship, and friendship. There is a place for anyone who will contribute to a group experience, and the cost to live in a chapter house is no more than living in a campus residence hall, although many members "live out" (not all chapters have houses). More than 3,000 UCLA students participate in "Greek life."

Mardi Gras

UCLA's annual Mardi Gras is the world's largest student-operated collegiate activity. Each Spring Quarter over 5,000 Bruins from all types of campus organizations help to prepare and present this carnival. Students design and operate more than 70 booths featuring games, food, and live entertainment. There are celebrity judges, carnival rides, clowns, balloons, fireworks, and much more. Mardi Gras is open to the campus community on Friday evening; the public is invited during the day on Saturday and Sunday.

The event generates about $50,000 annually for UCLA's official charity, UniCamp, a summer camp for underprivileged Los Angeles children. For more information, contact the Mardi Gras Committee in 346 Plaza Building (310-825-8001) or the Campus Events Commission in 300A Kerckhoff Hall (310-825-1958).

UCLA Campus Events Speakers and Concert Programs

The Speakers Program, now over 25 years old, brings the world's foremost entertainers, politicians, and literary figures to campus. It also presents two annual awards programs — the Jack Benny Award for comedic excellence and the Spencer Tracy Award for outstanding screen performance. Past speakers and awardees have included Johnny Carson, David Letterman, Whoopie Goldberg, John Cleese, Robin Williams, Jessica Lange, James Stewart, Spike Lee, William Hurt, Patricia Schroeder, Jesse Jackson, Matt Groening, Studs Terkel, Shimon Peres, Walter Cronkite, Dustin Hoffman, Candice Bergen, and Denzel Washington.

The Concert Program brings new and name performing artists like the Talking Heads, Guns N' Roses, 10,000 Maniacs, Public Enemy, and Hammer to UCLA for free and affordably priced concerts at noon in Westwood Plaza and at night in the Cooperage and Ackerman Grand Ballroom.

Publications and Broadcast Media

UCLA's publications and broadcast media, operated by the ASUCLA Communications Board, provide excellent training ground for aspiring writers, journalists, photographers, and radio announcers while serving the communication needs of the campus community. The following are the major student-operated sources of information on campus:

The Daily Bruin, with a circulation of 22,000, is one of the largest daily newspapers in Los Angeles. As the principal outlet for campus news, the Bruin is published each weekday of the regular academic year (once a week during the summer) and is distributed free from kiosks around campus and in Westwood and Brentwood. Students work as reporters, editors, designers, photographers, and advertising sales representatives; new staff members are always welcome. Bruin offices are located in the Alumni Lounge (227 Kerckhoff Hall, 310-825-9898).

Seven newsmagazines reflecting the diversity of the campus community are published twice each term. Al-Talib is a publication devoted to Muslim issues; Ha'Am deals with Jewish issues; La Gente treats Chicano, Latino, and Native American issues; Nommo explores African issues; Pacific Ties is devoted to Asian issues; TenPercent covers gay, lesbian, and bisexual issues; and Together reports on women's issues. Each includes news and features on political and cultural affairs both on and off campus. Prospective staffers are welcome. The offices of these newsmagazines are located in 210 Kerckhoff Hall.

The UCLA yearbook, Bruin Life, is one of the largest student publication efforts on campus. Available each spring, it contains photographs and information on undergraduate students, graduating seniors, athletic teams, fraternities and sororities, and campus activities. A separate publication, the Freshman Record, is produced for new UCLA students. If you would like to participate, contact the yearbook staff in 212K Kerckhoff Hall (310-825-2640).

Like many other large universities, UCLA has its own radio station. KLA Radio provides music, news, public service programming, and sports coverage during the academic year. The carrier current signal is sent to the residence halls and parts of Ackerman Union and Kerckhoff Hall on 530 AM and to many parts of the Los Angeles area on 99.9 Century Cable FM. The studios are located at the rear of the Grand Ballroom in 2400A Ackerman Union (310-825-9107; request line: 310-825-9999). All positions, including on-air, news staff, and advertising representatives, are open to students.

The Performing Arts

UCLA offers a rich variety of concerts, art exhibits, dance recitals, and theater productions as an integral part of University life. A full calendar of exceptional programs by the Music, Ethnomusicology and Systematic Musicology, and Dance Departments of the School of the Arts and the Theater and Film and Television Departments of the School of Theater, Film, and Television provides opportunities for student involvement and personal growth.

The Music Department offers more than 15 performance organizations. Instrumentalists are invited to play with one of seven different bands and orchestras. Campus choral organizations include a Concert Choir, Chamber Singers, Women's Chorus, Men's Glee Club, and the Collegiate Chorus which, with 120 members, is the largest of the groups.

The Ethnomusicology and Systematic Musicology Department provides students with the opportunity to perform in various non-Western and ethnic groups.

The Dance Department presents afternoon and evening modern dance concerts and demonstrations both on and off campus, and folk and ethnic performing groups meet regularly. Dance students have the opportunity to design and choreograph as well as perform.

Each year the Theater Department presents a series of major productions to the general public, and the Film and Television Department produces about 300 student-directed films in addition to hundreds of television programs. Professionals appearing on campus frequently visit classes to share their skills, and many have established awards and scholarships in the performing arts at UCLA.

Be a Spectator

Since its founding in 1936, the UCLA Center for the Performing Arts has served as the premier West Coast showcase for world-class performers and innovative new work in dance, music, theater, and performance art. The center stages more than 250 public concerts and events each year, often sponsoring debut performances of new works by major artists. Through the center, UCLA's Royce Hall hosts a varied and active performance program, ranging from regular concerts by the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra to special appearances by Luciano Pavarotti, Marcel Marceau, Isaac Stern, performance artist Karen Finley, Kathleen Battle, Bella Lewitzky Dance, and Branford Marsalis. Discount tickets for students, faculty, and staff are available to all events.

Sports and Athletics

Athletics play a major role in the University's mission to provide a well-rounded education both in and out of the classroom. UCLA continues to live up to its reputation as a national leader in intercollegiate sports. In 1993-94 the UCLA athletic programs (men and women) placed third in the Sears Directors Cup national all-around excellence survey. In the 23-year history of the former USA Today survey, the men's program placed first 11 times, while the women's program placed first five times in the past nine years. UCLA is the only university in the country to win five National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) men's and women's championships in a single year (1981-82).

MEN'S INTERCOLLEGIATE SPORTS — UCLA is a member of the Pacific-10 Conference, which includes Arizona State University; University of Arizona; University of California, Berkeley; Stanford University; University of Southern California; University of Oregon; Oregon State University; Washington State University; and the University of Washington. UCLA teams have won an overall total of 56 NCAA men's championships — second highest in the nation — including 15 in tennis, 14 in volleyball, 10 in basketball under the legendary John Wooden, and eight in track and field. In addition, the soccer team won the 1990 NCAA title. You can participate on the varsity level in football, basketball, track, baseball, tennis, volleyball, water polo, golf, soccer, and cross-country. For more information, contact the Men's Athletic Office at (310) 825-8699.

WOMEN'S INTERCOLLEGIATE SPORTS — With 11 different varsity sports, the UCLA women's program is one of the most extensive in the country, and UCLA has played an important role in establishing women's sports as part of the NCAA. Women's teams have won an overall total of 13 NCAA titles — third highest in the nation — including the 1981-82, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90, and 1991-92 NCAA championships in softball, the 1981-82 and 1982-83 track and field crowns, the 1984, 1990, and 1991 volleyball titles, and the 1991 golf title.

Other nationally ranked teams are those in basketball, swimming, tennis, cross-country, soccer, and gymnastics. Beginning this year, you can also participate in water polo. For more information, contact the Women's Athletic Office at (310) 825-8699.

INTERCOLLEGIATE ATHLETIC FACILITIES — UCLA's major indoor arena is the famed Pauley Pavilion, which seats 12,543 for UCLA basketball, volleyball, and gymnastics events. It was the site of the 1984 Summer Olympics gymnastics competition. Immediately adjacent, Drake Stadium is the home of UCLA track and field competitions and site of many outdoor events, including the U.S. Olympic Festival '91. The Los Angeles Tennis Center, a 5,800-seat outdoor tennis stadium and clubhouse, was the site of the 1984 Olympic tennis competition. The Morgan Intercollegiate Athletics Center houses the UCLA Athletic Hall of Fame. Off-campus facilities include Robinson Stadium for varsity baseball and the renowned Rose Bowl in Pasadena, home of the UCLA football team.

Campus Recreation

UCLA offers a wide variety of recreational opportunities to meet the needs of the campus community. The Department of Cultural and Recreational Affairs (CRA), 2131 Wooden Center (310-825-3701), serves as the administrative center for the coordination of programming, facilities, and equipment and supervision of campus recreational activities and services.

INTRAMURAL/CLUB SPORTS — The Intramural Sports Program offers over 40 activities, ranging from basketball and badminton to volleyball and water polo, in men's, women's, and coed competition with team and individual play; many are divided by skill levels so participants of any ability level can get involved. The Club Sports Program offers you the chance to organize, coach, or participate in sports that fall beyond the scope of intramurals but are not offered at the varsity level. Annually over 18 club teams participate in a competitive schedule of league and tournament play with other college, university, and local area teams.

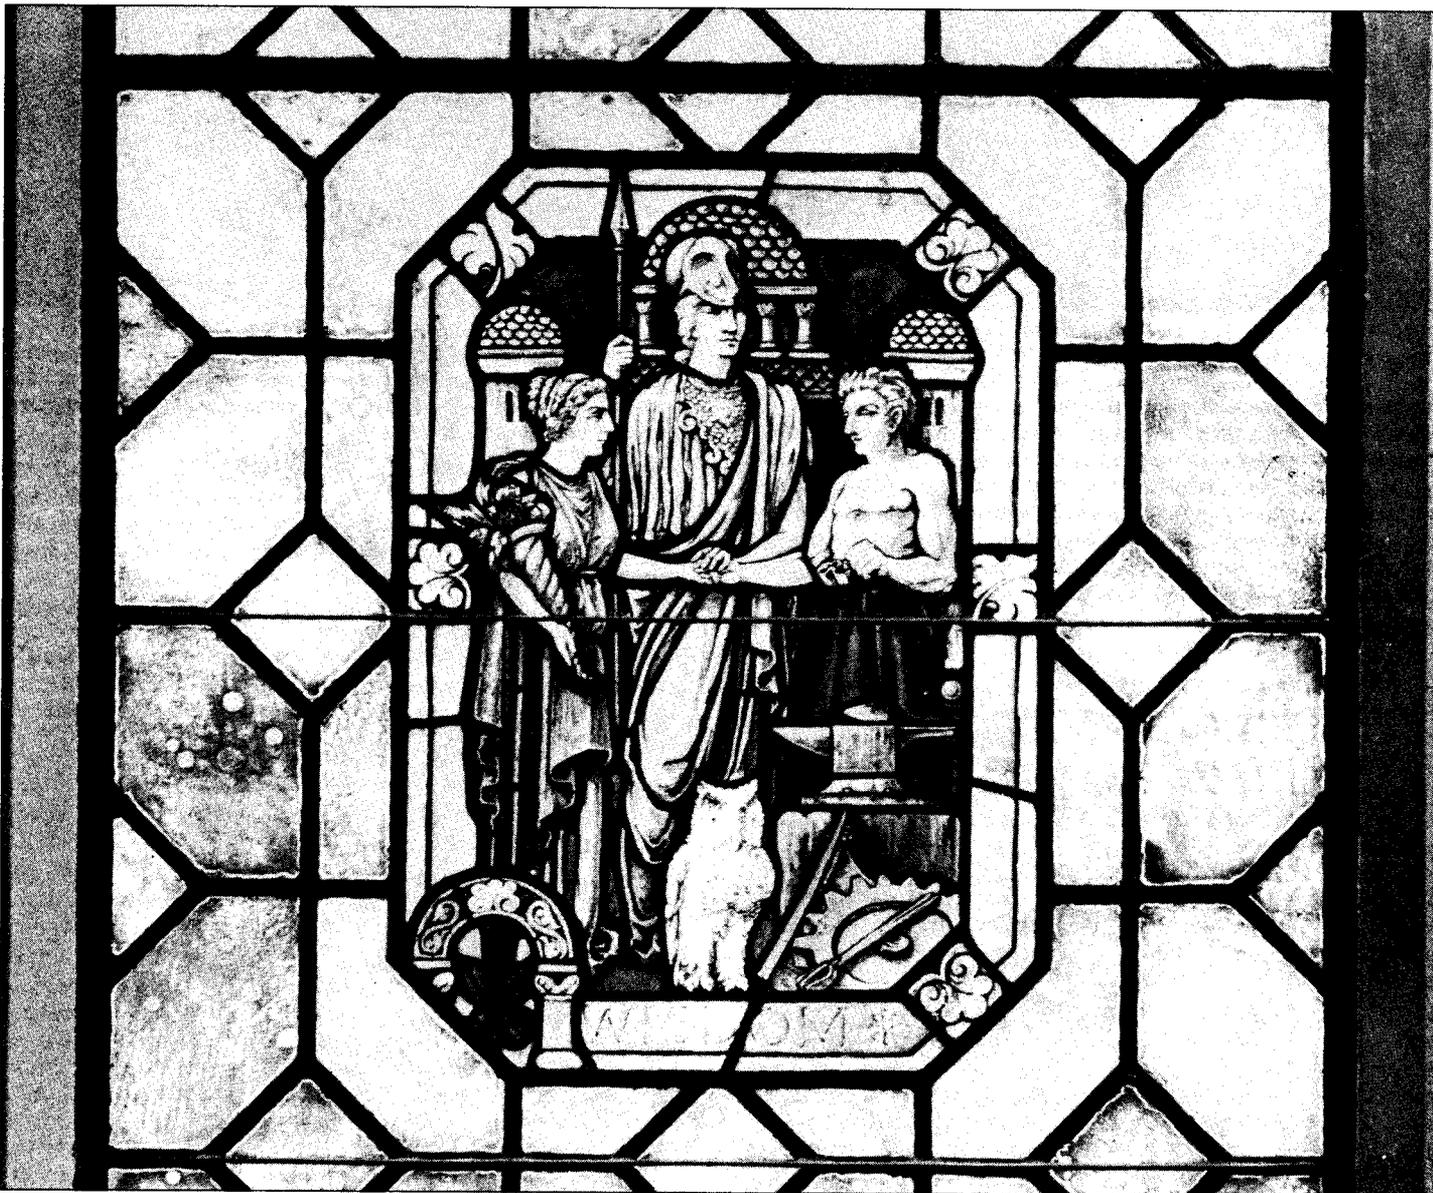

Recognized teams exist in ice hockey, men's and women's rugby and lacrosse, cycling, rowing, waterskiing, sailing, snow skiing, and surfing.

RECREATION CLUBS — Students with special interests in activities that are primarily instructional or social in nature have the opportunity to pursue their interests through clubs such as amateur radio, dance, fishing, snow skiing, and a variety of martial arts.

RECREATION CLASS PROGRAM — A broad range of noncredit recreation classes is available in aquatics, dance, fine arts, outdoor studies, fitness, tennis, and sports skills. Most classes are designed for beginning and intermediate skill levels. You can also participate in cultural events through art exhibitions, the poetry reading program, museum tours, and theater in Los Angeles outings.

BRUIN KIDS — Summer and winter day camps, recreation classes, enrichment programs, and year-round weekend activities are offered for children of the UCLA community aged four to 16. Employment opportunities for UCLA students and a chance to work with children in a learning environment are provided through the Bruin Kids Program.

RECREATION FACILITIES/INFORMAL RECREATION — A popular attraction of CRA is the opportunity for independent recreation and exercise. UCLA students with appropriate identification have several major facilities in which to practice and play. The Wooden Recreation and Sports Center is a comprehensive student activities building with multiple gymnasias, 10 racquetball/handball courts, two squash courts, a weight training facility, exercise/dance and martial arts rooms, and a games lounge. The Sunset Canyon Recreation Center offers year-round activities in an outdoor park setting and features a 50-meter swimming pool, 25-yard family pool, picnic/barbecue areas, multipurpose play fields, an outdoor amphitheater, 10 lighted tennis courts, and various meeting rooms and lounges. The UCLA Aquatic Center in Marina del Rey offers sailing, windsurfing, and rowing classes and activities, as well as the opportunity to sail or row on your own. The competitive sailing and rowing club teams are administered through the center. Students also have the use of Pauley Pavilion, Drake Stadium, Sycamore Tennis Courts, Los Angeles Tennis Center, Intramural Fields, Men's Gym, and Dance Building for recreational sports and activities.

Student Services

UCLA students enjoy an extremely broad range of benefits and support services which enrich their college careers and help them attain their academic and career goals.

Academic Counseling

Many sources of academic counseling are available. Faculty advisers and counselors in each college and school help students with major selection, program planning, academic difficulties, degree requirements, and petitions for exceptions to these requirements.

Advisers in each major department counsel undergraduates concerning majors offered and their requirements, and possible career and graduate school options (see "Academic Resources and Assistance" in Chapter 2 of this catalog). In addition, special graduate advisers are available in each department to assist prospective and currently enrolled graduate students.

Placement and Career Planning Center

The Placement and Career Planning Center (PCPC) offers career planning and employment assistance free to UCLA students. Services are located in the PCPC Building (310-825-2981) and in two satellite locations: EXPO Center in 311 Plaza Building (specializing in local, national, and international internships, 310-825-0831) and Engineering and Science Career Planning Office in 5289 Boelter Hall (specializing in engineering and the physical sciences, 310-825-4606).

Career Planning and Exploration — Career advisers and counselors provide assistance in selecting your major, setting realistic career goals, investigating career options, evaluating graduate and professional school programs, and developing skills to conduct a successful job search. Information on local, national, and international internship opportunities and cooperative education programs can assist you in exploring different career possibilities, making important professional contacts, and obtaining valuable on-the-job experience. The Career Resources Library offers a collection of over 2,000 career-related books and directories, videos, periodicals, and other materials. In addition, PCPC offers workshops, seminars, and group meetings on a variety of career-related topics; many are repeated several times each term.

Employment Assistance — If you need extra money to finance your college degree, you will find a large volume of part-time, temporary, and seasonal employment leads at PCPC. Information on room and board opportunities in exchange for work also is available. Students and recent graduates looking for full-time, entry-level career positions may access hundreds of current professional, managerial, and technical openings in numerous career fields. Seniors and graduate students may participate in on-campus interviews for positions in corporations, government, not-for-profit organizations, elementary and secondary schools, community colleges, and four-year academic institutions.

Student Health Service

The Student Health Service (SHS) is an outpatient clinic designed especially for UCLA students. Because it is supported by your registration fees, your current Registration Card and a photo I.D. are required for service. Most services are prepaid by your registration fees, and you may be seen by appointment or on a walk-in basis. Call (310) 825-4073 for the most up-to-date fee information. Core (prepaid) services include visits, most procedures, X rays, and some laboratory procedures. Noncore (fee) services, such as pharmaceuticals, injections, orthopedic devices, and some laboratory procedures, are less costly than elsewhere. If you withdraw during a school term, all SHS services will continue to be available on a fee basis for the remainder of that term, effective from your date of withdrawal.

The cost of services received outside of SHS (e.g., the Emergency Room) is your financial responsibility. You are strongly encouraged to purchase supplemental medical insurance either through the UCLA-sponsored Medical Insurance Plan (see below) or other plans that provide adequate coverage. For more information on SHS, call (310) 825-4073.

Location and Hours — General and emergency SHS care is available in A2-130 Center for the Health Sciences. Office hours weekdays are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. except Tuesday, when service begins at 9 a.m. A satellite clinic is located along Bruin Walk between Gates 10 and 11 in Pauley Pavilion (310-825-5704). For emergency care when SHS is closed, you may obtain treatment at the UCLA Medical Center Emergency Room or UCLA Family Practice on a fee-for-service basis.

Primary Care Clinic provides outpatient diagnoses and treatment for most health care needs of both men and women. Care is provided by board certified physicians and nurse practitioners. Though complete physicals are available for a fee, a prepaid "Well Exam" is available if you have general health questions or concerns. You are encouraged to select a clinician who will provide ongoing health care. Call (310) 825-2463 to schedule an appointment.

Specialty Clinics provide specialized care when you are referred by the Primary Care Clinic. Services include dermatology, orthopedics, surgery, gynecology, internal medicine, allergy, ENT (ear, nose, and throat), ophthalmology, urology, and neurology. Health clearances, immunizations, and travel shots are available for a moderate fee. Call (310) 825-0861.

Women's Health Service offers comprehensive health care and counseling. Services include routine gynecological examinations, evaluation of gynecologic problems, abnormal pap smear evaluation and treatment, contraception, and pregnancy testing. Counseling for relationships and sexual concerns is also available. Call (310) 825-0854 for appointments and (310) 825-7000 to speak to clinicians.

Men's Health Clinic treats male genital and urinary problems, both sexual and nonsexual in nature. The clinic also provides sexual counseling for UCLA's male students. Call (310) 825-0861.

Dental Care arrangements are available. Call (310) 825-4073 for further information.

Health Education offers many types of services and programs that will interest, inform, and help you to lead a healthier lifestyle. Outreach programs, such as the Peer Health Counselor and Student Health Advocate Programs, provide peer care and educational counseling for health concerns. The programs allow students to be involved in the planning and delivery of many aspects of health care. Call (310) 825-4730.

Supplemental Medical Insurance — UCLA offers a student Medical Insurance Plan (MIP) which is available as a supplement to the services offered in SHS. MIP provides benefits for certain major medical expenses not covered by SHS, such as hospitalization, surgery, and emergency room costs.

All international students (graduate and undergraduate) on nonimmigrant visas and all graduate students must maintain adequate medical insurance coverage during all periods of enrollment at UCLA. MIP fulfills the medical insurance requirement. For graduate students the MIP fee is included each term in the amount due on the UCLA Billing Statement. For undergraduates the MIP fee appears as a voluntary option to be added each term to the amount due on the UCLA Billing Statement. This is the only method by which MIP can be purchased.

Graduate and international students who are insured under adequate private medical insurance may waive out of MIP. See "Mandatory Medical Insurance Requirement" in the "Registration and Enrollment" sections of Chapters 2 and 3 for a description of what constitutes adequate private medical insurance and instructions for waiving out of MIP. For further information on medical insurance, call the SHS Insurance Office at (310) 825-1856.

Student Psychological Services

Student Psychological Services (SPS) offers short-term personal counsel and psychotherapy at two locations. The Mid-Campus Office is located in 4223 Math Sciences (310-825-0768); the South Campus Office is in A3-062 CHS (310-825-7985).

Psychologists, clinical social workers, and psychiatrists are available at both locations, offering assistance with situational stresses and emotional problems from the most mild to the most severe. These may include problems with interpersonal relationships, academic stress, loneliness, difficult decisions, sexual issues, anxiety, depression, or other concerns affecting the personal growth of students.

The service is confidential and free to regularly enrolled students. Students are seen individually or may choose from a number of groups offered each term. Appointments are made on weekdays between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Emergency counseling is also available.

SPS is also a designated Sexual Harassment Information Center, as well as a campus Harassment Information Center, available to all UCLA students (see "Harassment" in the Appendix for more information).

Helpline

UCLA Peer Helpline (310-825-HELP) is a crisis intervention and referral hot line staffed by UCLA students and staff members. You can call and talk to a trained peer counselor about school stress, relationship problems, loneliness, depression, drug problems, suicide, or anything else that is on your mind. Hours are weekdays 5 p.m. to midnight, Saturday and Sunday 8 p.m. to midnight. For more information, contact Clive D. Kennedy, Student Psychological Services, 4223 Math Sciences (310-825-0768).

Office of the Dean of Students

The Office of the Dean of Students, located in 1206 Murphy Hall (310-825-3871), exists to help you, either directly or by referral, with whatever needs you might have. Direct services include general counseling; sending emergency messages to students; and assisting in understanding University policies and procedures, including grievance procedures regarding student records, discrimination, and student debts.

In addition, the office publishes "Official Notices" in the Daily Bruin at various times during the year. Such notices are important, and all students are held responsible for the information in them.

The Office of the Dean of Students also plays a role in administering campus discipline and applying the standards of citizenship which you are expected to follow at UCLA. Those standards involve complying with the policies and regulations governing this campus and being aware that violation of those policies or regulations can result in disciplinary action. See "Student Conduct: Violation of University Policies" in the Appendix for more information.

Campus Ombuds Office

The ombudsperson is responsible for listening and responding to grievances or concerns from any member of the campus community (i.e., students, staff, faculty, administrators). Acting impartially, the ombudsperson may investigate unresolved grievances or facilitate the resolution of problems for which there are no established guidelines and may also, where possible and when requested by the grievant, assist in resolving an issue through mediation (including sexual harassment cases). The ombudsperson is empowered to recommend changes to the University Policies Commission and/or to the chancellor regarding University policies and procedures. The office is located in 1172 PCPC Building (310-825-7627); hours are weekdays 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The office is also a designated Sexual Harassment Information Center for students, faculty, and staff, as well as a campus Harassment Information Center available to all UCLA students (see "Harassment" in the Appendix for more information).

Established through the Campus Ombuds Office, the Conflict Prevention and Mediation Program (CPMP) is composed of a select group of student, faculty, and staff volunteers trained specifically to address diversity-related disputes. CPMP mediators specialize in conflicts dealing with issues of race, ethnicity, culture, sexual orientation, disability, and gender. The variety of conflict management services offered seeks to promote constructive interaction and dialogue through a culturally relevant, need-based, and community-centered approach. Services include designing and/or facilitating forums on topics of concern, serving as discussion facilitators, intervening as mediators in designated disputes, offering educational and skills-oriented workshops, providing conflict management assessment, and offering informational presentations on CPMP. Services are neutral, independent of the administration, confidential, and free. For more information, call (310) 825-9840.

Student Legal Services

If you are a currently registered and enrolled student with a legal problem, you can get assistance free of charge from attorneys or law students under direct supervision of attorneys. They will help you solve legal problems, including those related to landlord/tenant relations, domestic relations, accident and injury problems, criminal matters, and contract and debt problems. Assistance is available by appointment only from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays in 70 Dodd Hall (310-825-9894).

Central Ticket Office

Tickets for all UCLA events are available at the Central Ticket Office (CTO) in the West Alumni Center (310-825-2101).

CTO also offers student discount tickets to campus athletic and cultural events and local motion picture theaters (current Registration and UCLA Student I.D. Cards must be presented at the time of purchase). You may also purchase tickets to off-campus events through Ticketmaster, as well as student discount tickets for RTD buses and tokens for the Santa Monica and Culver City bus systems.

Services for International Students

The Office of International Students and Scholars (OISS) and the International Student Center (ISC) provide services and programs for UCLA's international community, particularly for 2,000 nonimmigrant students. A comprehensive orientation program for these students assists them in achieving their academic objectives. Programs throughout the year allow them to share their viewpoints with American students and the community.

The OISS staff, located in 105 Men's Gym (310-825-1681), includes professional and peer counselors specially prepared to assist you with questions about immigration, employment, government regulations, financial aid, academic and administrative procedures, cultural adjustment, and personal matters. OISS is also a designated Sexual Harassment Information Center for international students, as well as a campus Harassment Information Center available to all UCLA students (see "Harassment" in the Appendix for more information).

OISS also provides visa assistance for faculty, researchers, and postdoctoral scholars.

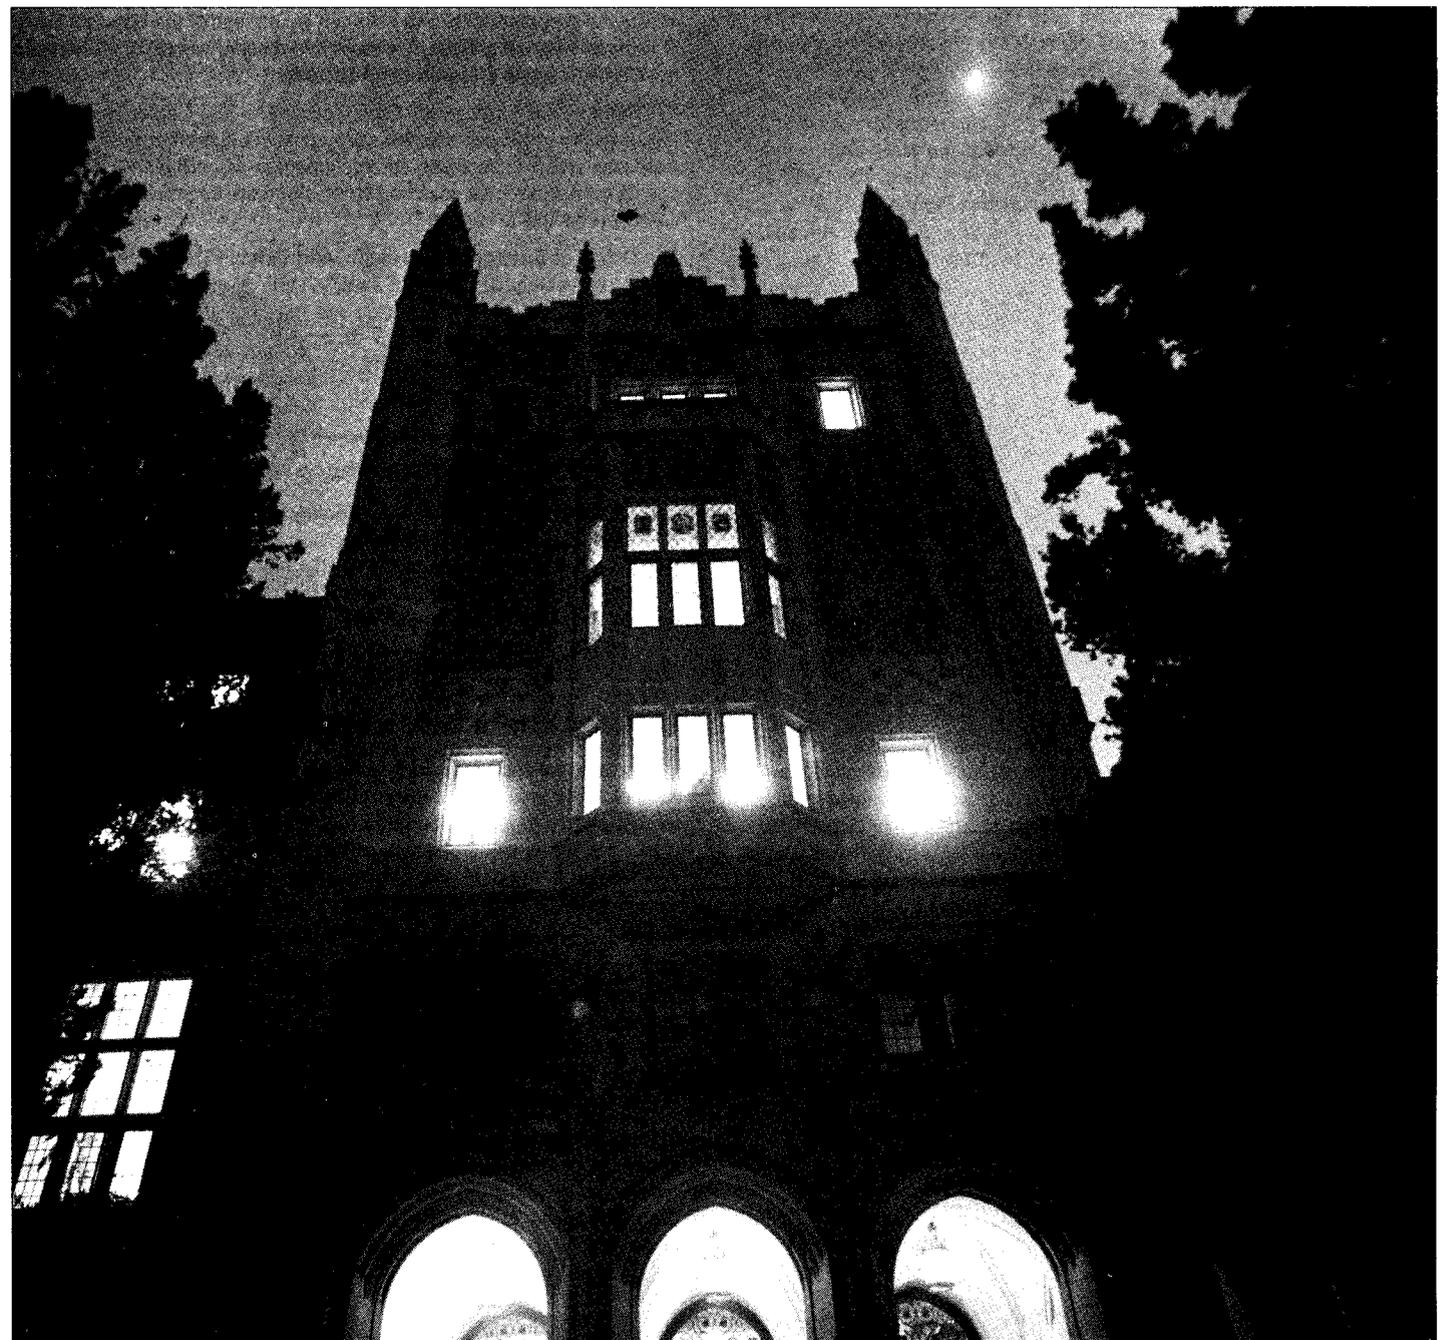

The International Student Center, 1045 Gayley Avenue, Suite 200 (310-794-8138), seeks to improve student and community relationships and assists international students with language, housing, and personal concerns in addition to sponsoring cultural, educational, and social programs for UCLA students and community members. OISS and ISC frequently offer programs with interethnic and international themes.

Services for Students with Disabilities

The Office for Students with Disabilities (OSD), A255 Murphy Hall (Voice 310-825-1501 or TDD 310-206-6083), provides a wide range of academic support services to students with permanent or temporary disabilities in compliance with Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990. Free support services include readers, note takers or purchased ASUCLA Lecture Notes, sign language interpreters, Learning Disabilities Program, special parking, registration assistance, fee deferments authorized by the California Department of Rehabilitation, on-campus transportation, campus orientation and accessibility, proctor and test-taking arrangements, tutorial referral, housing assistance, support groups, workshops, special materials, adaptive equipment, and referral to the Disabilities and Computing Program. Accommodations are varied and specifically designed to meet the disability-related needs of each student. All contact and assistance are handled confidentially.

The Disabilities and Computing Program (DCP) offers consulting and training on adapted computer equipment to assist students with disabilities in their academic work. Special equipment includes reading machines, voice-controlled computers, outlining software, large print monitors, and more. For further information, call Voice (310) 206-7133 or TDD (310) 206-5155.

Veterans' and Social Security Services

Academic Record Services, 1134 Murphy Hall, provides information for veterans and eligible dependents about VA educational benefits, tutorial assistance, the work-study program, and emergency loans; issues fee waivers to dependents of California veterans who are deceased or disabled because of service-connected injuries and who meet the income restrictions in Education Code Section 10652; and certifies student status for recipients of Social Security benefits.

Women's Resource Center

The Women's Resource Center (WRC), located in 2 Dodd Hall (310-825-3945), offers services to all UCLA students, with special focus on women's needs.

The center presents workshops and support groups on many topics, including child care, self-defense, assertiveness training, rape prevention and education, career development, single parenting, health, returning to school, and personal relationships. It also offers referrals for medical, legal, career planning, personal counseling, and other services both on and off campus. In addition, rape services consultants (RSCs) — individuals who provide information, support, and resources for UCLA students who have been raped or sexually assaulted — can discuss options and alternatives, help identify and assist in contacting the most appropriate support services, and answer any questions that may arise. The WRC is also a designated Sexual Harassment Information Center, as well as a campus Harassment Information Center available to all UCLA students (see "Harassment" in the Appendix for more information).

A library includes specialized publications on women's issues. Volunteer opportunities are offered in areas such as creative writing, legislative research, graphic arts, and publicity. The WRC, committed to improving the status of women on campus, works with other campus agencies to help women reach their full potential.

Child Care Services

Two Child Care Centers provide full- and part-time care for children two months to five years old. Fees range from $240 to $775 per month depending on the age of the child, the schedule selected, and the site chosen. A limited number of grants are available at the Bellagio center for eligible student families. The Bellagio center is located in the northwest corner of campus at Sunset Boulevard and Bellagio Drive; the Fernald center is located at the corner of Stone Canyon Drive and Circle Drive North. A satellite day-care center for children two to five years old is located in the Colina Glen faculty housing area; priority is given to Colina Glen residents. Call (310) 825-5086 for more information.

The Outreach Program helps parents make off-campus child care arrangements. The program coordinator meets parents each Monday from noon to 1 p.m. in 2 Dodd Hall. For more information, call (310) 825-8474.

The University Parents Nursery School is a multicultural cooperative school for two- to five-year-old children of UCLA students, faculty, and staff; priority is given to students living in Family Student Housing. Experienced teachers, assisted by co-oping parents, provide a gradual transition from the home to the school environment. Hours are weekdays 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Part-time spaces are available (the morning program ends at 12:30 p.m.). The nursery school is located in the UCLA Family Student Housing Community Center, 3327 South Sepulveda Boulevard (310-397-2735).

Safety and Security

Emergency (Police, Fire, or Medical) — Dial 911 from any campus phone (do not dial an additional 9 to establish an outside line). For non-emergency information, contact the UCLA Department of Community Safety at 601 Westwood Plaza (310-825-1491).

Campus Escort Service — The Department of Community Safety provides a free escort service every day of the year from dusk to 1 a.m. Uniformed community service officers (CSOs) — specially trained UCLA students — are available to walk students, staff, faculty, and visitors between campus buildings and local living areas or Westwood Village. To obtain an escort, call (310) 825-1493 about 20 minutes before you need one.

Evening Van Service — The free service provides a safe and convenient mode of transportation around campus at night. Seven vans driven by CSOs operate Monday through Thursday from 6 p.m. to midnight and provide transportation between Ackerman Union, apartments on the west side of campus, Lot 32, the campus libraries, and the residence halls. For further information or a free brochure, call (310) 825-9800.

UCLA Rape Prevention and Education Services are cosponsored by the Women's Resource Center and the Department of Community Safety. Services include workshops, self-defense classes, intake counseling, and referrals to offer practical safety suggestions, increase physical and psychological preparedness, and heighten awareness of the complex issues of rape and sexual assault. For more information, call (310) 206-8240 or the Crime Prevention Unit at (310) 825-7661.

CPR and Basic Emergency Care Courses — The Center for Prehospital Care offers medical education programs in basic emergency care and American Heart Association cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) which can be organized most days and times. For more information or to schedule a course, call (310) 206-0176.

The Office of Environment, Health, and Safety (EH&S) provides for the health and safety of all UCLA faculty, staff, students, and visitors and ensures that UCLA operations do not have an adverse impact on the environment. In addition, EH&S promotes the University's compliance with applicable health, safety, and environmental regulations. For further information, call (310) 825-5689.

UCLA Alumni Association

Celebrating its sixtieth year of serving the UCLA community, the UCLA Alumni Association has nearly 60,000 members, making it one of the largest alumni groups in the nation. Whether you are a recent graduate, a pioneer Bruin, or somewhere in between, membership in the Alumni Association is the best way to stay connected to UCLA and its growing excellence.

Membership dues enable the Alumni Association to serve as an advocate on campus and to play the vital role of guardian of the value of every UCLA degree. Dues also support programs such as Homecoming Week, Spring Sing, class reunions, and the scholarship program. The Alumni Association was instrumental in developing the UCLA Bruins California license plate; all proceeds go directly to fund need-based scholarships administered by the association.

The association also offers a plethora of benefits and services. Members can make new friends, pursue lifelong learning, save money, and make a difference. Recently the association greatly expanded its career services program to meet the needs of members. UCLA graduates, Bruin parents, and friends of the University are invited to take advantage of all the association has to offer. It is located in the West Alumni Center, 325 Westwood Plaza (310-825-ALUM; 800-825-ALUM outside Los Angeles County).

Undergraduate Admission

Information:

Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools (UARS)
1147 Murphy Hall
(310) 825-3101

The Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools (UARS) invites you to visit UCLA to discuss your prospects as a student and to experience the campus firsthand. The UARS Office offers student-guided individual and group tours of the campus at 10:15 a.m. and 2:15 p.m. daily during the academic year; reservations are required. Call (310) 825-8764 for tour reservations; (310) 825-3101 for general UCLA admission information.

Applying for Admission

The first step in applying for admission is to obtain the UC Application for Undergraduate Admission and Scholarships containing all necessary forms and instructions from your California high school or community college counselor or from any University of California Undergraduate Admissions Office. One application is used to apply to all UC campuses. You apply to one UC campus for the basic $40 application fee; for each additional campus you select, you must pay an additional $40 fee.

Complete the application, taking care to list your desired major and the correct major code for the campus(es) to which you are applying. Mail the completed application and the nonrefundable application fee in the self-addressed envelope included in the application packet.

If you are in high school when you apply (freshman applicant), your self-reported application information is used to make preliminary admission decisions. Do not send your sixth and/or seventh semester high school transcripts. Once admitted, you must submit a final transcript, including a statement of graduation or proficiency, which will be used to verify your application information. You must submit official results of the Scholastic Assessment Test (SAT) or American College Test (ACT) and three subject tests; request that test results be sent directly to UCLA when you take each test. You should take these tests by the December test date, as they are part of the review process for admission.

If you have ~~attended~~ or are attending another college when you apply (transfer applicant), your self-reported application information is used to make preliminary admission decisions. Once admitted, you must submit official transcripts from all colleges and universities attended (high school transcripts may also be required), which will be used to verify your application information. Transcripts and other documents cannot be returned or forwarded to other institutions.

When to Apply

The filing periods for applications are as follows:

Winter Quarter 1995:

Closed to new applicants

Spring Quarter 1995:

File October 1-31, 1994 (If open to new applicants, junior-level applicants only)

Fall Quarter 1995:

File November 1-30, 1994 (Freshmen and transfers)

(Applications for admission to Fall Quarter 1994 were accepted only during November 1993.)

All majors are open for Fall Quarter. For Spring Quarter all majors in the College of Letters and Science, except communication studies and world arts and cultures, are open. Majors in the Schools of Engineering and Applied Science, Nursing, Arts, and Theater, Film, and Television are closed.

Notification of Admission

You will be mailed a notice from the UC Undergraduate Application Processing Service acknowledging receipt of your application. Later, you will receive a letter from the UCLA Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools regarding the admission decision. The length of time before admission notification varies. In general, Fall Quarter applicants are notified beginning March 1; Spring Quarter applicants are notified in mid-December.

If you are accepted for admission, you will be asked to sign and return a Statement of Intent to Register and a Statement of Legal Residence. A nonrefundable $100 deposit, also required at this time, will be applied to your University registration fee as long as you register in the term to which you are admitted.

Entrance Requirements

All campuses of the University of California have the same minimum freshman admission requirements. The requirements are based on two principles: (1) the best indicator of success at the University is a record of high grades in previous schoolwork and (2) the completion of certain academic courses in high school prepares you to begin University work and choose a general field of study.

Fulfilling the minimum admission requirements, however, does not necessarily assure admission to UCLA. The selection of applicants is based on demonstrated high scholarship in preparatory work, which often goes well beyond the minimum eligibility requirements. UCLA offers admission to those students with the best overall academic preparation.

In addition to the primary criteria for admission selection, other elements are considered to ensure a diverse student body which serves the interests of California. If you present evidence of educational and economic disadvantage or a disability, that will be taken into account. If you belong to an ethnic group which has low UC eligibility rates and historically low participation in higher education, that will also be taken into account. California residency is another factor. While these elements are given consideration, academic performance remains the key factor for admission to UCLA.

Admission as a Freshman

You are considered a freshman applicant if you have not enrolled in a regular session of any college-level institution since graduation from high school (except for summer session immediately following high school graduation). To qualify for admission as a freshman, you must meet three major requirements: the Subject Requirement, the Scholastic Requirement, and the Examination Requirement. These are the minimum requirements for admission to the University; meeting them does not automatically assure admission to UCLA.

Subject Requirement

Outlined below are the high school academic courses required for admission to the University of California. Each course must be completed with at least a grade of C. The requirement consists of 15 year-long courses, seven of which must be taken during your last two years in high school. These are the minimum courses required for admission; you are encouraged to exceed these requirements whenever possible.

- (1) History/Social Science — Two years of history/social science, including one year of U.S. history or one-half year of U.S. history and one-half year of civics or American government; and one year of world history, cultures, and geography.
- (2) English — Four years of college preparatory English that include frequent and regular writing, and reading of classic and modern literature. No more than two semesters of ninth-grade English can be used to meet this requirement.
- (3) Mathematics — Three years of college preparatory mathematics that include the topics covered in elementary algebra, geometry, and advanced algebra (four years are recommended, including trigonometry and calculus). Mathematics courses taken in the seventh and eighth grades may be used to fulfill this requirement if your high school accepts them as equivalent to its own courses.
- (4) Laboratory Science — Two years of laboratory science (three years are recommended) which provide fundamental knowledge in at least two of these areas — biology, chemistry, and physics. Laboratory courses in Earth/space sciences are acceptable if they have prerequisites or provide basic knowledge in biology, chemistry, or physics. No more than one year of ninth-grade laboratory science can be used to meet this requirement.
- (5) Language other than English — Two years of the same language, other than English (three to four years are recommended). Courses should emphasize speaking and understanding and include instruction in grammar, vocabulary, reading, and composition.
- (6) College Preparatory Electives — Two units, in addition to those required above, to be selected from the following subject areas: history, English, advanced mathematics, laboratory science, language other than English, social science, and visual and performing arts.

Scholastic Requirement

Eligibility for admission to the University of California is based on a combination of your grade-point average (GPA) in the academic subject requirements and your American College Test (ACT) or Scholastic Assessment Test (SAT) scores. For detailed scholarship information, see the UC publication Introducing the University or contact Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools (UARS).

Examination Requirement

All freshman applicants must submit scores from the following tests:

- (1) Either the American College Test (ACT) composite score OR the Scholastic Assessment Test I: Reasoning Tests (SAT I) total score.
- (2) Three Scholastic Assessment Test II: Subject Tests (SAT II) which must include
  - (a) Writing AND
  - (b) Mathematics, level 1 or 2, AND
  - (c) One additional test (either English literature, foreign language, science, or social studies).

You should take these tests by the December test date, as they are part of the review process. Request that test results be sent directly to UCLA when you take each test.

Admission Selection

Many elements are considered in the selection process, but the primary ones are (1) academic grade-point average, (2) scores on the SAT I or ACT and the three SAT II tests, (3) quality, content, and level of coursework throughout your entire high school program, including your senior year, and (4) number of and performance in honors and advanced placement (AP) courses.

You should take as many honors and advanced placement courses as possible and should try to exceed the minimum academic subject requirements in all subjects, particularly mathematics, laboratory sciences, and foreign languages. High test scores are necessary in conjunction with strong performance in classes and a consistent pattern of academic courses. Overall performance must be well above average.

For detailed information on admission requirements for freshman students, see the UC publication Introducing the University or contact UARS.

Admission as a Transfer Student

You are considered a transfer applicant if you have been a registered student (1) at another college or university or (2) in college-level extension courses. (This does not include attending a summer session immediately following high school graduation.) You may not disregard your college record and apply for admission as a freshman. Priority is given to junior-level applicants. If you wish to transfer to UCLA, you should follow these general guidelines:

The number of advanced standing students applying to UCLA has increased significantly during the last several years. Students admitted to the University exceed the minimum University of California transfer eligibility requirements, and those with the strongest preparation and performance are offered admission.

In accordance with the Master Plan for Higher Education, UCLA gives first preference to California community college applicants. Applicants transferring from other UC campuses are next in priority, followed by applicants transferring from other colleges and universities. Each application receives a comprehensive review, integrating all available information.

The academic criteria are as follows: grade-point average (GPA) in transferable courses, significant preparation for the major, completion of the English composition and mathematics requirements, and progress toward completion of the Intersegmental General Education Transfer Curriculum (IGETC) or UCLA general education requirements. Applicants who have completed the English composition and mathematics requirements as early as possible in their academic program and who will have 90 transferable quarter units by the time they enroll in the University receive priority admission consideration.

For more detailed information on admission requirements for transfer students, see the UC Application for Undergraduate Admission and Scholarships and the UC Answers for Transfers booklet or contact UARS.

Intercampus Transfers

Undergraduate students registered in a regular session at any campus of the University (or those previously registered who have not since registered at any other school) may apply for transfer to another campus of the University. Obtain the UC Application for Undergraduate Admission and Scholarships and submit the required application fees with the application form. The filing periods are the same as those for new applicants (see "When to Apply" at the beginning of this chapter). If you have attended another UC campus and wish to be considered for admission to UCLA, you must have been in good standing when you left that campus. Intercampus transfers are not automatic; you must compete with all other applicants.

Senior-Level Applicants

Students attaining senior standing are not generally admitted by the University.

Second Bachelor's Degree Applicants

By policy, second bachelor's degrees are not generally granted by the University, except in the School of Nursing.

Transfer Credit and Credit by Examination

The University gives unit credit to transfer students for certain courses completed at other accredited colleges and universities. To be accepted for credit, the courses must be comparable to those offered at the University, as determined by the Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools (UARS). All courses which meet the criteria are used in determining your eligibility for admission. (To convert semester units into quarter units, multiply the semester units by 1.5 — e.g., 12 semester units  $\times$  1.5 = 18 quarter units.)

College credit for examinations given by national testing services is generally not allowed, except for the Advanced Placement (AP) Tests given by the College Board and the International Baccalaureate. Contact UARS for more information.

Applicants from Other Countries

To be considered for admission to the University of California, international students must have completed secondary school with a superior average in academic subjects and have earned a certificate of completion which would enable them to be admitted to a university in the home country.

Your application for admission, copies of official certificates, and detailed records of all secondary schools attended should be submitted as early as possible after the filing period opens (see "When to Apply" at the beginning of this chapter). This will allow time for the necessary correspondence and, if you are admitted, to obtain your passport visa.

Students whose native language is not English must have sufficient command of English to benefit from instruction at UCLA. To demonstrate that command, you are required to take the UCLA English as a Second Language Placement Examination (ESLPE). Depending on your ESLPE results, you may have to complete one or more English as a second language courses. In addition, you are advised to take the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) as a preliminary means of testing your ability. Make arrangements for this test by writing to the Educational Testing Service, 1947 Center Street, Berkeley, CA 94704. Have your test results sent directly to the UCLA Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools.

Mandatory Medical Insurance Requirement

UCLA requires, as a condition of registration, that all international students on nonimmigrant visas have adequate medical insurance coverage during all periods of enrollment. See "Mandatory Medical Insurance Requirement for International Students" in the "Undergraduate Registration and Enrollment" section later in this chapter for a description of what constitutes adequate medical insurance. Most travel insurance plans are NOT acceptable; medical insurance plans from foreign countries (including Canada) also are NOT acceptable.

UCLA offers a student Medical Insurance Plan (MIP) which fulfills the requirement. For undergraduates the MIP fee appears as a voluntary option to be added each term to the amount due on the UCLA Billing Statement. This is the only method by which MIP can be purchased.

You are required to provide written proof of adequate medical insurance coverage in response to an annual written notice from the Student Health Service (SHS) Insurance Office. For further information on MIP or adequate medical insurance requirements, call the SHS Insurance Office at (310) 825-1856.

Readmission

Undergraduate students are required to apply for readmission only if they are absent from the University for more than one term. Thus, if you complete a term and then withdraw, cancel, or fail to register for the next term, registration information will be available for you for the term immediately following.

If you are absent for two or more consecutive terms, you must complete an Undergraduate Application for Readmission form and file it with the Registrar. During the 1994-95 academic year, all such students returning in the same standing (undergraduate) must file readmission applications as follows:

Filing Deadlines

August 15 for Fall Quarter 1994
November 28 for Winter Quarter 1995
February 27 for Spring Quarter 1995

Application forms are available at 1113 Murphy Hall. Your completed application must be accompanied by a $40 application fee (nonrefundable) and transcripts of records from any other institutions (including UCLA Extension) you attended during your absence. Readmission is generally approved if you were in good academic standing (2.0 grade-point average) when you left the University, if coursework completed elsewhere in the interim is satisfactory, and if readmission applications are filed on time. Your college or school may have other academic regulations governing readmission (consult the appropriate counseling office). Contact the readmission clerk at (310) 825-1091 for further information.

Undergraduate Registration and Enrollment

Information:

Registration/Enrollment Office
(310) 825-1091

Detailed information on registration (fee payment) and enrollment procedures is contained in the quarterly Schedule of Classes, available for purchase at the Students' Store several weeks before the beginning of each term. To obtain a copy by mail, write to ASUCLA Students' Store, 308 Westwood Plaza, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1645, Attn: Mail Out. Include a check or money order for $4.50 payable to ASUCLA.

Registration consists of paying fees and enrolling in classes. The UCLA Billing Statement, mailed monthly to your UCLA mailing address by the Student Accounting Office, is used to pay registration fees and other University charges. Enrollment in classes is completed through URSA (University Records System Access). You must complete both processes by the established deadlines to be officially registered and enrolled for the term.

Payment is required of all eligible students by the applicable deadlines. Payments may be mailed or deposited in the Main Cashier's Drop Slot (1125 Murphy Hall). Payments submitted after the published deadline must be made in person at 1125 Murphy Hall and will be assessed an additional $50 late payment fee. Students on financial aid may be eligible for a waiver of the $50 fee if funds are delayed by the University.

Deadline Dates

Registration Fee Payment Deadlines:

September 20 for Fall Quarter 1994
December 20 for Winter Quarter 1995
March 20 for Spring Quarter 1995

Classes Dropped for Failure to Pay Registration Fees:

October 7 for Fall Quarter 1994
January 13 for Winter Quarter 1995
April 7 for Spring Quarter 1995

Mandatory Medical Insurance Requirement for International Students

UCLA requires, as a condition of registration, that all international students on nonimmigrant visas have adequate medical insurance coverage during all periods of enrollment.

UCLA offers a student Medical Insurance Plan (MIP) which fulfills the requirement. For undergraduates the MIP fee appears as a voluntary option to be added each term to the amount due on the UCLA Billing Statement. This is the only method by which MIP can be purchased.

You are required to provide written proof of adequate medical insurance coverage in response to an annual written notice from the Student Health Service (SHS) Insurance Office.

If you do not purchase the UCLA Medical Insurance Plan, you must have an adequate private medical insurance plan that provides all of the following minimum benefits:

- (1) A minimum of $50,000 in "Lifetime Maximum" benefits.

- (2) At least 75 percent of the cost for eligible medical expenses, with no more than a 25 percent out-of-pocket cost to you (patient copayment).

- (3) A claims representative located in the U.S. In addition, you must be provided with an identification card (or reasonable alternative) written in English, which includes payment provisions listed in U.S. dollars and the U.S. telephone number of the U.S. claims representative.

If your private medical insurance plan does not meet all of the above requirements, you must purchase MIP. For further information on MIP or adequate medical insurance requirements, call the SHS Insurance Office at (310) 825-1856.

Enrollment in Classes

The quarterly Schedule of Classes contains up-to-date listings of class times, meeting rooms, instructors, and all information necessary for enrolling in classes. Using the Schedule and with the aid of academic counseling from your school or college advisers, you can assemble a program of courses (see "Choosing Your Major" and "Planning a Program" later in this chapter).

You should plan two or three alternate programs in case your first choice of courses is not available. You may not choose two courses in the same final examination group and should not select classes that conflict in meeting times. If conflicts are unavoidable, consult with the instructor of each course at the first class meeting.

University Records System Access (URSA)

URSA (310-208-0425) enables all UCLA students to acquire information via a touch-tone telephone from their University academic records stored on the Registrar's Student Records System computer database.

URSA allows you to process your class enrollment, to obtain course confirmation (including day/time, location, examination code, instructor name), UCLA grades for any completed term, GPA, completed units, and outstanding holds (i.e., restrictions from receiving services), to confirm registration fee payment and Registration Card mailing, to update or review selected student information ("degree expected term," telephone number, residence hall address, privacy release, ethnic-based mailing option, and ethnic background), and to change the security code used to access URSA.

URSA is operational Monday through Saturday from 5 a.m. to midnight, including holidays. You may access the system for grades, GPA, units, and holds information for up to 10 years after your graduation or your last term of attendance. If you have outstanding holds, you will be informed at the beginning of your call.

Telephone Enrollment

By using URSA, you can enroll in classes, add, drop, or exchange classes/sections, put yourself on the wait list for a class, add a class using a PTE Authorization Number, change the grading basis for a class (i.e., Passed/Not Passed), obtain a reading of your Study List, check your wait-list position, and obtain instructor names for all courses. You enroll during your assigned appointment periods, which you also obtain by calling URSA. Consult the Schedule of Classes for full enrollment details.

In-Person Enrollment

For classes that require written approval or specialized processing, you may enroll at computer terminals at 1113 Murphy Hall Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Study Lists

At 5 p.m. on Friday of the second week of instruction the Study List of enrolled courses becomes "official," and all wait lists are eliminated. You should obtain a reading of your Study List through URSA after all enrollment transactions. You are responsible for all courses and the grading basis as listed on URSA, and you cannot receive credit for courses not listed. Errors or omissions should be corrected before your academic dean's deadline for changes by petition. Unapproved withdrawal from or neglect of a course entered on the Study List will result in a failing grade.

Beginning with the third week of instruction, changes to your Official Study List require an Enrollment Petition which is available for purchase in the school supplies section at any ASUCLA Students' Store. Approval signatures are required before processing. If you add a special studies (199) course, you must also bring an approved copy of the Petition for Enrollment in Special Studies 199 Course. Consult the Schedule of Classes for deadlines and complete instructions. Note: When retroactive approval is given, in exceptional cases, to drop a course or to change the grading basis, the course and action will appear on the official transcript.

Change of College/School or Major

Changing your college/school or major requires the approval of the college/school or department you want to attend. Applications for change of college/school are made by petition, which is available without charge from your college or school office. Change of major petitions are available from the department you want to attend. You may not change majors after the opening of the last term of your senior year.

Undergraduate Fees and Financial Support

Fees

Although the exact cost of attending UCLA will vary according to personal habits, tastes, and financial resources, there are some fees that all UCLA students must pay. Each entering and readmitted student is required to submit a Statement of Legal Residence to the Registrar's Office. Legal residents of California are not required to pay tuition at the University. Students classified as nonresidents must pay tuition of $2,566 per term (for a full definition of residence and nonresidence, see the Appendix of this catalog).

At the time of registration each term, all undergraduates must pay the following fixed fees. Fees for Fall Quarter 1994 are current as of publication date but are subject to change without notice by The Regents.

Term Expenses, Fall 1994
University registration fee .....	$ 237.00
Educational fee .....	1,120.00
Ackerman Student Union fee .....	2.50
Undergraduate Students Association fee .....	18.00
Wooden Recreation Center fee .....	11.00
Total for California residents .....	$1,388.50
Nonresident tuition fee .....	$2,566.00
Total for nonresidents .....	$3,954.50

The registration fee covers certain student expenses for counseling service, all laboratory and course fees, athletic and gymnasium facilities and equipment, lockers, registration, graduation, and care and treatment on campus by the Student Health Service. This fee is charged whether or not you make use of these services. A duplicate degree fee of $2,000 per term is assessed to students admitted for a second baccalaureate degree program.

Other Fees

Miscellaneous fees charged to UCLA undergraduates include a $50 charge for late payment of registration fees (after the fee deadline) or late filing of the Study List (after Friday of the second week of classes) and a $20 late fee if the UCLA Billing Statement has an unpaid balance in excess of $25. A $60 fine will be assessed if any check for registration fee payment is returned by a bank (i.e., stopped payment, insufficient funds, etc.). Minimal charges of $5 or less are assessed for most petitions and other special requests. A complete list of fees may be found in the Schedule of Classes.

Fee Refunds

Students who formally withdraw from the University during the first five weeks of instruction may receive partial refunds of fees. For the refund schedule and more information, see "Withdrawal" in Chapter 4 of this catalog or consult the Schedule of Classes for policy details and specific refund dates for each term.

Reduced Fee Programs

UCLA recognizes the need for undergraduate part-time study in special circumstances. If you have ongoing family or employment responsibilities or health problems which preclude full-time study, you may qualify for part-time enrollment.

If you have approval from your college or school to enroll in 10 units or less, you may qualify for a fee reduction. Nonresident students pay only half the nonresident tuition fee; residents pay half the educational fee. You must file the Request for Fee Reduction form with your college or school by Friday of the second week of instruction. Fee assessment is based on total units enrolled as of Friday of the third week of instruction. If you receive the part-time fee reduction from your academic dean, you may not also use the UC employee reduction; you must use one or the other.

Living Expenses

Printed below are the estimated yearly budgets for undergraduate California residents. Nonresidents must add the $7,699 annual tuition fee to their total expenses for an accurate estimate. Expenses cover the three regular session terms of the 1994-95 academic year and do not include Summer Sessions. The budgets are designed to serve as a guide and are subject to change.

Estimated Annual Budgets for Undergraduate California Residents

	Commuter, Living in Parents' Home	Living in UCLA Residence Hall, Co-Op, Sorority, or Fraternity	Living in Off-Campus Apartment or House
University fees	$ 3,893.50	$ 3,893.50	$ 3,893.50
Books and educational supplies	850.00	850.00	850.00
Food and rent	2,975.00	5,975.00	6,350.00
Transportation	2,580.00	155.00	1,875.00
Personal	—	1,100.00	885.00
Total budget	$10,298.50	$11,973.50	$13,853.50

For more information on housing, see Chapter 1 or contact the UCLA Community Housing Office, 350 De Neve Drive (310-825-4491).

Financial Support

Information:
Financial Aid Office
A129J Murphy Hall
(310) 206-0400

It is not required that you come from a low-income family in order to qualify for financial aid. You must, however, demonstrate "financial need," which is defined as the difference between the cost of attending UCLA and the amount that you and your family should be able to contribute. The University expects that students and their families will bear as much of the necessary cost of a student's education as their circumstances will permit.

The Financial Aid Office publishes a Financial Aid Handbook which provides more complete information than this catalog can give. You can get a copy free of charge from the Financial Aid Office, A129J Murphy Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1435.

Applying for Financial Aid

The deadline for filing all undergraduate financial aid applications for academic year 1995-96 is March 2, 1995 (applications for 1994-95 would have had to be filed by March 1994). Because of the limits being placed on financial aid funding, meeting deadlines is more crucial than ever. Applications received after the deadline will be considered only if funds are still available. The Daily Bruin and other campus media publish information on deadline dates.

Prospective students must first apply for admission to UCLA by filing the UC Application for Undergraduate Admission and Scholarships during the filing period (see "Undergraduate Admission" at the beginning of this chapter). You can also use the admissions application to apply for undergraduate scholarships.

Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA)

One of the key assumptions of financial aid is that parents, to the extent that they can contribute, have primary responsibility for financing the cost of a student's education. To permit an evaluation of need, all students who apply for need-based aid must provide financial information on the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA). If you are financially independent according to financial aid guidelines, your own financial circumstances are analyzed rather than those of your parents.

The FAFSA is used to apply for all federally funded programs, funds administered by UCLA, and Cal Grants administered by the California Student Aid Commission. The FAFSA is available from California high schools and colleges and from the UCLA Financial Aid Office, and should be filed by March 2. Be sure to indicate that a report is to be sent to UCLA.

Continuing students may obtain UCLA Scholarship and Financial Aid Application Packets beginning in January of each year at the Financial Aid Office. Continuing undergraduate students from foreign countries may pick up a Financial Aid Application for International Students at the same office. No financial aid can be awarded to international students in their first year of attendance at UCLA.

Types of Financial Aid

There are four basic types of aid: scholarships, grants, loans, and work-study employment. Since most students are eligible for several of these, the Financial Aid Office usually offers a combination "package" consisting of some funds that are a gift (scholarship or grant) and some that will have to be paid back or earned through employment. If you indicate a preference for work or loan, the Financial Aid Office will attempt to honor your request.

Unless otherwise stated, you must demonstrate financial need to qualify for aid, and you must be making normal academic progress as defined by your college or school, your department, and the Financial Aid Office (for a full definition of financial aid minimum progress standards, see the Appendix of this catalog).

Scholarships

Scholarships are gifts that do not have to be repaid. The Undergraduate Scholarship Program at UCLA rewards academic excellence and promise and provides assistance in meeting the expenses of an undergraduate education. Scholarships are expected to create opportunities for further academic growth and development.

Financial need is a prerequisite only for University and name (endowed) scholarships other than those listed below. Each year approximately $300,000 is awarded from the many different scholarship funds. Awards range from $100 to $2,000 and are not renewable. You must reapply each year for continued consideration.

Regents Scholarships

One of the highest honors that may be conferred on an undergraduate student is the awarding of a Regents Scholarship. Unlike other University scholarships, these are awarded for four years to students entering from high school, and for two years to juniors. A UCLA faculty committee selects Regents Scholars on the basis of their exceptional academic achievement and promise. Financial need is not a criterion for this award; scholars receive a yearly honorarium of $500 if they have no financial need. Scholars who establish financial need by filing the FAFSA receive a yearly stipend to cover the amount of their need. In addition to the monetary awards, Regents Scholars receive special privileges.

National Merit Scholarships

UCLA sponsors a number of four-year scholarships for entering freshmen who are finalists in the National Merit Scholarship competition. Finalists who are admitted to UCLA must select UCLA as their institution of choice and must meet UCLA's scholarship criteria in order to receive a UCLA Merit Scholarship. Awards range from $500 to $2,000.

UCLA Alumni Association Scholarships

Alumni Scholarships are available to California high school graduates who will be UCLA freshmen in the Fall Quarter and to community college transfer students. No financial need is involved, but eligibility requirements exist, and you should have demonstrated leadership ability, be involved in extracurricular activities, and show academic excellence and promise. Alumni Scholarships are merit-based and competitively awarded; amounts range from $500 to $10,000. The Dr. Ralph Bunche Scholarship and Leadership Awards, also presented by the UCLA Alumni Association and named in honor of the Nobel Peace Prize laureate and UCLA alumnus, are given to students from historically underrepresented backgrounds. In addition to the monetary awards, Alumni Scholars receive special privileges. Recipients who receive work-study and/or loans as part of a financial aid package will receive additional alumni grant monies.

ROTC Scholarships

ROTC Scholarships are awarded on a competitive basis to U.S. citizens regardless of parents' income. Scholarships provide tuition, a book allowance, fees, and a tax-free monetary allowance of $100 per month during the academic year. Applications for four-year scholarships may be obtained by calling the appropriate department at UCLA — Army, (310) 825-7381; Air Force, (310) 825-1742; Navy, (310) 825-9075 — or by writing to Armed Forces Opportunities, P.O. Box 2865, Huntington Station, NY 11746-2102. When writing, specify which service (Army, Air Force, Navy/Marine) scholarship is desired. Completed applications should be received prior to July 15 (Army) or August 15 (Air Force and Navy) for early consideration, but no later than December 1 (all services) of the year preceding college matriculation. Three- and two-year scholarship applications may be obtained from the appropriate UCLA department and must be submitted prior to February 1.

Grants

Grants are funds that do not have to be repaid and are based solely on need. Whenever awarding policies and funds permit, your financial aid package will include a grant.

Federal Pell Grants

Federal Pell Grants are federal aid awards intended to be the "floor" of financial aid packages. As such, they may be combined with other forms of aid in order to meet the full costs of education. Amounts for 1994-95 range from $400 to $2,300, depending on federal funding, and are determined by you and your family's financial resources. U.S. citizens and eligible noncitizens may apply by filing the FAFSA. The University requires all eligible undergraduates to apply for a Federal Pell Grant.

Cal Grants A and B

California residents who have not completed more than nine quarters or six semesters of college work prior to September 1994 are eligible to apply for a California Student Aid Commission Cal Grant award. The FAFSA and GPA Verification Form are the official applications for these programs. "Cal Grant A" awards are applied toward registration fees. They are based on need and academic achievement and are renewable each year. "Cal Grant B" awards are intended to assist low-income families and are renewable annually. First-year freshmen receive a quarterly stipend. In subsequent years recipients receive a stipend plus funds toward educational and registration fees.

State University Grants

These grants provide eligible students with financial assistance from state funds. Awards range from $300 to $2,400. All undergraduate students are considered.

Federal Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants

These awards are federally funded and are granted only to undergraduates with financial need. Awards range from $600 to $2,400. Recipients must be U.S. citizens or eligible noncitizens.

Loans

Loans allow you to postpone paying some of the costs of your education until you have completed school. A financial aid offer almost always includes a long-term, low-interest loan.

It is essential that borrowers realize their commitment and responsibility to repay according to repayment schedules. Before accepting a loan, you should assess your total educational debt and your ability to repay following graduation. The University will make every effort to assist you during the repayment of your obligation, but University services, including registration and the release of official transcripts, will be withheld if your loan becomes delinquent. Seriously delinquent accounts are referred to a professional collection agency for action.

All loan recipients must come to the Student Loan Services Office (A227 Murphy Hall) for a loan exit interview before leaving UCLA for any reason. This interview will help you understand your loan agreement and your rights and responsibilities. If you fail to participate in an exit interview, the University will place a hold on your academic records and registration materials. Call (310) 825-9864 for an interview appointment before graduating, transferring, or withdrawing from UCLA.

Federal Perkins Loans

These low-interest loans are available to all students who are U.S. citizens or eligible noncitizens. Repayment begins six or nine months after you terminate at least half-time study. Minimum repayment is $90 per quarter, including interest, up to a maximum of 10 years.

Federal Nursing Loans

To be eligible for a nursing loan, you must be a U.S. citizen or eligible noncitizen and a student in the School of Nursing. Up to $1,500 is available per academic year. For more information, contact the financial aid counselor either in the Financial Aid Office or in the School of Nursing.

Emergency Educational Loans

You need not be receiving financial aid to apply for emergency loans. You may borrow up to $100 for immediate emergency needs; this amount is repayable within five weeks. To qualify, you must be a registered UCLA student with a satisfactory loan repayment record. Applications are available from the Student Loan Services Office, A227 Murphy Hall.

Federal Family Education Loan Program

Federal Stafford Loans are long-term need-based loans made by banks and credit unions. They are available to U.S. citizens and eligible noncitizens who are enrolled in at least a half-time program at UCLA. Freshmen may borrow up to $2,625, sophomores up to $3,500, and juniors and seniors up to $5,500 per academic year, to a maximum of $23,000.

Unsubsidized Federal Stafford Loans for Middle-Income Borrowers are not based on need. You must first apply for a Federal Stafford Loan to be considered for this program.

Federal Parent Loans for Undergraduate Students (PLUS)—Through this program your parents may be eligible to borrow up to the cost of your education for the academic year minus any estimated financial aid.

Work-Study Programs

Work-study is a need-based program designed to expand part-time job opportunities for students. The program allows you to work a maximum of 20 hours per week while attending school. An academic year's work-study award may range from $1,000 to $2,100, but your gross earnings may not exceed the amount awarded to you. There are two basic work-study programs available.

Under Federal Work-Study, the federal government pays a portion of your hourly wage; your employer contributes the balance. Whenever possible, work is related to your educational objectives. Employment may be on or off campus. Hourly pay rates comply with minimum wage laws and vary with the nature of your work, experience, and capabilities. To be eligible you must be a U.S. citizen or eligible noncitizen.

The President's Work-Study program is administered in the same manner as Federal Work-Study except that The Regents of the University and your employer provide funding, and you are limited to on-campus jobs.

Getting Your Bachelor's Degree

The College and Schools

The UCLA campus consists of one college and 12 schools, most of which are subdivided into departments. The courses of instruction are administered within the departments.

The College of Letters and Science provides a broad, nonprofessionally oriented curriculum leading to both undergraduate and graduate degrees.

The schools provide training for specific professions and are authorized to grant professional degrees (e.g., Master of Business Administration, Doctor of Education, Master of Public Health). UCLA has 12 professional schools, four of which offer undergraduate degree programs: School of the Arts, School of Engineering and Applied Science, School of Nursing, and School of Theater, Film, and Television.

Each college and school has its own degree requirements and is headed by a dean or provost who has final academic authority. Thus, when you attend UCLA, you are enrolled not only at the University of California, Los Angeles campus, but in a specific college or school within the University. Your academic life is governed by the college or school which houses your major.

As the chart on the previous pages shows, UCLA offers Bachelor of Arts (B.A.) and Bachelor of Science (B.S.) degrees in a broad range of disciplines. Currently there are no undergraduate minors at UCLA but, if you are in the College of Letters and Science, there are a number of special programs which you may complete as an adjunct to your major. The bachelor's degree (you may earn only one) is the culmination of your undergraduate work; master's and doctoral degrees are earned in graduate study.

Knowing Your Responsibilities

UCLA provides its students with a wide variety of academic assistance and personal support resources, but it is up to you to realize when you need help and to seek it out. It is also your responsibility to keep informed and to comply with the rules, regulations, and policies affecting your academic standing and your life as a UCLA student. Consult this catalog, the college and school announcements, and the Schedule of Classes for the information you need; watch for official announcements in the Daily Bruin and on campus bulletin boards. Meeting academic deadlines, monitoring your Study List for accuracy, completing prerequisites, and fulfilling degree requirements are all part of your academic duties as a student. Living up to your responsibilities will add immeasurably to the value and enjoyment of your education (also see "Student Conduct" in the Appendix of this catalog).

Choosing Your Major

One of the most important decisions you will have to make in college is your choice of major — the field of study which represents your principal academic interest and which possibly will contribute toward your career goals. Some students select their major at the time they fill out the University's application for admission. A far greater number, however, are undecided about their major.

If you are in the College of Letters and Science, you do not need to declare your major in your freshman year. The college allows you to attend with an undeclared major until the end of your sophomore year. In fact, if you are not certain of your specific academic goals, it is often wise to wait and explore the diversity of subject areas offered at UCLA.

Enroll in introductory courses (usually numbered below 100) in a variety of disciplines to learn the scope and vocabulary of the major. It is not unusual for students to become enthusiastic about disciplines previously unfamiliar to them. With careful planning, such courses may also apply toward fulfilling college requirements for whatever major you choose. To narrow your choices further, carefully consider general college requirements, the description of courses offered in the major, and the departmental requirements for completing the program of study. Look at the books required for each course. Sit in on a few classes and talk with professors during their office hours. Discuss your interests and plans with a departmental counselor or faculty adviser, a college counselor, or advisers in the Placement and Career Planning Center.

A few words of caution: certain majors, especially in the arts, theater, film, television, engineering, and the sciences, require early declaration. Some have enrollment quotas and will allow application by new majors only during a specified term. Check with the departmental adviser for the majors that interest you.

In addition, each UCLA undergraduate is limited to between 208 and 216 quarter units, depending on the college or school, to complete the academic program and fulfill all degree requirements. So, if you wait to declare a major, don't wait too long. In any case, you must declare a major by the beginning of your junior year (90 quarter units).

When you are ready to declare your major, or if you wish to change from one major to another, pick up a Petition for Change of Major at the college or school office. There is no fee for this petition.

Planning a Program

Every new student should obtain academic counseling before enrolling in classes at UCLA (counseling is required in the School of Engineering and Applied Science). Working with a tentative major in mind, you need to plan courses to satisfy all of the degree requirements while staying within the maximum number of units required for graduation. The Orientation program for new students will take you through a step-by-step process designed to insure you enroll in an effective program (see "Orientation" later in this chapter). If you cannot attend Orientation, see your college or school adviser or, if you have selected a major, make an appointment with your major department adviser before enrolling in classes.

Undergraduate Degree Requirements

In all campus units except the School of Engineering and Applied Science, you are required to earn a minimum of 180 units from all college-level coursework for the bachelor's degree at UCLA. A maximum of 208 units is allowed in the School of the Arts, School of Nursing, and School of Theater, Film, and Television; in the College of Letters and Science a maximum of 216 units (228 for double majors and special programs) is allowed. In the School of Engineering and Applied Science, the minimum units allowed are between 180 and 200 (depending on the program); 213 maximum units are allowed.

As you work toward a bachelor's degree, be aware that in addition to unit requirements there are three types of requirements which you must satisfy. The first type consists of Universitywide requirements which all undergraduates must satisfy; the rest vary depending on your major and the college or school which offers it.

- (1) University requirements — Subject A or English as a Second Language (ESL), and American History and Institutions;
- (2) College or school requirements (e.g., credit and scholarship, English composition, general education requirements);
- (3) Department requirements (courses in preparation for the major and in satisfaction of the major).

University requirements are described below. Turn to "Requirements for the Bachelor's Degree" in the appropriate school or college chapter for a description of the college or school requirements, and then to the individual departments within each college and school for the department requirements.

University Requirements

The University of California has established two requirements which all undergraduates must satisfy in order to graduate: Subject A or English as a Second Language (ESL), and American History and Institutions. It is your responsibility to see that these requirements are fulfilled.

Subject A

Because proficiency in English composition is so important to successful performance in many courses, Subject A is the only requirement for graduation that you must satisfy before entering UCLA or during your first year in residence. You may meet this requirement by

- (1) Scoring 3, 4, or 5 on one of the College Entrance Examination Board (CEEB) Advanced Placement Tests in English OR
- (2) Scoring 600 or better on the SAT II Subject Test in Writing OR
- (3) Presenting transfer credit for an acceptable college-level course in English composition (passed with a grade of C or better) at another institution OR
- (4) Passing the Subject A Examination. All freshmen from California high schools should have taken the Universitywide Subject A Examination in May 1994; others will take an examination at UCLA early in their first term.

If you do not meet the requirement in one of the ways described above, Academic Senate regulations require you to enroll in either English A or 2 (determined by performance on the Subject A Examination) as early as possible during your first year in residence. Each course must be taken for a letter grade and passed with a grade of C or better. If you receive a final grade of C – or less, you must repeat the course during your next term in residence. Satisfaction of the Subject A requirement is a prerequisite to English 3 and all subsequent English courses.

English as a Second Language (ESL) Students: If your native language is not English, you are required to take the UCLA English as a Second Language Placement Examination (ESLPE) in addition to the Subject A Examination. Results of both examinations will be reviewed to determine which track (Subject A or ESL) better meets your needs. If you are placed in the Subject A track, you may satisfy the Subject A requirement by following the guidelines listed above. If you are placed in the ESL track, you may satisfy the requirement by completing the required courses in the English as a Second Language 33 series — one or more of courses 33A, 33B, 33C — and 35, depending on your ESLPE results. Each course must be passed with a grade of C or better (C – or a Passed grade is not acceptable). You must begin taking the required courses during your first term in residence at UCLA and then proceed in the English as a Second Language 33 series followed by course 35. All units apply toward graduation but cannot be applied toward general education requirements.

Transfer students whose native language is not English are required by the Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools to take the ESLPE if they did not earn a grade of B or better in the courses equivalent to UCLA's English 3 and 4 at the transfer institution prior to entering UCLA. Students without transfer credit for those courses must take both the ESLPE and the Subject A Examination.

American History and Institutions

This requirement is based on the principle that a U.S. citizen attending an American university should understand the history and public institutions of the U.S. under the federal and state constitutions. Candidates for a bachelor's degree must satisfy the requirement in American History and Institutions by one of the following methods:

- (1) Completing a year's course in American history or American government, or a one-year combination of both, in high school with an average grade of B or better OR
- (2) Completing any one of the following UCLA courses with a grade of C or better, or a grade of Passed:

Afro-American Studies M104A, M104B, M158A, M158B, M158C

Asian American Studies M196A

Chicana and Chicano Studies M159A, M159B

English 80, 85, M104A, M104B, 115A, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 176, 177

History 6A, 6B, 6C, 7A, 7B, 145A, 145B, 146A, 146B, 147A, 147B, 147C, 148A, 148B, 148C, 149A, 149B, 150A, 150B, 150C, 151A, 151B, 152A, 152B, M153, 154A, 154B, 154C, 154D, 155A, 155B, 156A through 156H, 157A, 157B, M158A through 158E, M159A, M159B, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164

Political Science 40, 114A, 114B, 140A, 140B, 140C, 142A, 143A, 145B, 145C, 146A

Equivalent courses completed in UCLA Extension or at another college institution, and accepted by the Board of Admissions, may be used to fulfill the requirement OR

- (3) Presenting a satisfactory result of the requirement, by examination, as administered at another college or university within the state OR
- (4) Scoring 500 or better on the SAT II Subject Test in American History OR
- (5) Scoring 3, 4, or 5 on the College Entrance Examination Board (CEEB) Advanced Placement Test in American History.

Candidates for an instructional credential, but not for a degree, must take one of the following courses: History 7A, 7B, 151A, 151B, Political Science 145B, or 145C.

Students attending the University on an F-1 or J-1 visa may petition for exemption from this requirement by showing proof of temporary residence in the U.S.

For more information on this requirement, contact the undergraduate History Department counselor in 6248 Bunche Hall (310-825-3720).

Course Credit and Minimum Scholarship

The grades A through C and Passed denote satisfactory progress toward the bachelor's degree. The grades C – through D – yield unit credit but may not satisfy certain scholarship requirements. Even when they do, they must be offset by grades of C + or better in other courses.

In order to qualify for a bachelor's degree in any college or school at UCLA, you must earn at least a C (2.0) average in all courses taken at any University of California campus. If you fail to maintain this level, you may be placed on academic probation or may become subject to dismissal.

Academic Probation

You will be placed on probation if your overall grade-point average falls between 1.5 and 1.99 or if you do not earn at least a 2.0 GPA in any one term. While you are on probation, you may not take any course on a Passed/Not Passed basis, and you may have to limit your Study List to 12 units.

Your probation will end at the close of a regular term if you have attained a C (2.0) average for the term and a cumulative C average in all University work. If you do not end probation within two terms, you will become subject to dismissal.

Academic Dismissal

You will be subject to dismissal from the University under any of the following conditions:

- (1) If your grade-point average in any one term is less than 1.5 OR
- (2) If you do not earn at least a C (2.0) average in any term when you are on probation OR
- (3) If you do not end probation within two terms.

If you are subject to dismissal, your transcript will carry that notation. You should make an appointment with your college or school counselor. Depending on your situation, you will be given conditions for continuation, or you will be dismissed from the University.

Your college or school counselor can explain the conditions for readmission if you wish to return to the University after dismissal (see "Readmission" earlier in this chapter).

Progress Toward the Bachelor's Degree

The undergraduate curriculum at UCLA is designed as a four-year curriculum. In order to graduate in four years, you need to complete at least 45 units during each academic year, not just the 36 required for "minimum progress." In the absence of special circumstances justifying slower progress, you should plan to complete 45 units per year, in an arrangement of courses appropriate to your needs. Consult your college or school counselor if you have questions or need advice.

Each college and school enforces minimum enrollment or minimum progress regulations. You may be subject to disqualification for failing to meet minimum progress requirements. Check with your college or school counselor. Please read the degree requirements section under each college and school for specific Study List limits. See Chapter 4 for information on concurrent enrollment, credit by examination and credit from other institutions, and special studies (199) course limitations.

Academic Resources and Assistance

Alternative Academics

UCLA has a broad range of options that can lend an added dimension to your undergraduate academic program. You will find other services and programs available to both graduate students and undergraduates in Chapter 1 of this catalog.

Center for American Politics and Public Policy (CAPPP)

The Center for American Politics and Public Policy selects 25 to 30 undergraduates each fall and spring to participate in its Quarter in Washington, DC Program, which offers an exciting opportunity to combine UCLA courses with research and field experience in areas directly related to the policy-making process of the federal government. Students live in the Washington area for 12 weeks, dividing their time between courses taught by UC faculty and a part-time field placement position. They are registered as UCLA students and earn academic credit for the courses taken. Most of the courses emphasize politics and public policy. The core course carries political science credit. Efforts are also made to provide at least one course in a subject other than political science, such as art or history. All courses take advantage of Washington's unique resources for study and research.

CAPPP administrators help students find a field placement, which is central to a research seminar each student takes, in a Washington organization. Washington field placement locations have included the American Enterprise Institute, CNN, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, General Accounting Office, Heritage Foundation, Japan Economic Institute, Justice Department, Office of National Drug Control Policy, Senator Edward Kennedy's Office, Treasury Department, and others. For further information and applications, contact the CAPPP Office in 310 GSLIS Building (310-206-3109).

Council on Educational Development

The Council on Educational Development (CED) offers special courses and programs that encourage educational diversity and enrichment for undergraduates. CED works closely with the college, schools, and research centers on campus to support new academic programs and courses. Many of these courses cover socially important issues which, because they are new, are not addressed in existing academic departments. Many involve nontraditional educational concepts, interdisciplinary topics, and subjects on the leading edge of faculty interest.

Each year several courses focus on medicine, law, and human values. Students analyze ethical, legal, and scientific values in medical and mental health care issues, such as genetic screening, human experimentation, patients' rights, and medical technology.

For information about CED courses, consult the Schedule of Classes. Your college, school, or department can advise you about degree credit for CED courses. The office is located in 80 Powell Library (310-825-5467).

EXPO Center

The Extramural Programs and Opportunities (EXPO) Center offers access to a wide variety of off-campus learning experiences. For more information on any of the programs or services listed below, contact the EXPO Center, 311 Plaza Building (310-825-0831).

UCLA National Internship Program — More than 4,000 UCLA students have learned about the inner workings of government and business while serving in the internship program, the largest of its kind at any university in the nation. Bruins serve full-time internships for one or more terms on the staffs of elected officials, public interest groups, government agencies, and corporate offices in Sacramento and Washington, DC. Stipends for students in the program can be arranged.

Los Angeles Internship Program — Local internships are available throughout the year in fields such as advertising, business, film, media, politics, and television.

International Opportunities — The EXPO Center counsels students on study, travel, volunteer, international internship, and work opportunities outside the U.S., offering information on some 2,400 overseas study programs open to UCLA students. EXPO also maintains a library of current materials related to study, travel, and other opportunities abroad. International Student and Teacher Identity Cards and Youth Hostel memberships are issued at the center.

Field Studies Development

Field Studies Development, a division of the Office of Instructional Development, helps students, faculty, and academic departments to develop meaningful learning experiences outside the classroom. These may be in the form of internships, field studies or research, or community service. The office is located in 80 Powell Library (310-825-7867).

Departmental Field Studies — Academic field study programs have been developed in Afro-American studies, anthropology, Asian American studies, business and administration, communication studies, education, English, film and television, folklore, geography, history, physiological science, psychology, sociology, urban planning, and women's studies. Departmental coordinators work with you to develop field projects and find placements.

Independent Field Studies — You may design internships and field study opportunities to meet your specific academic, personal, and career goals. A field studies coordinator assists you with your plans and helps identify faculty sponsors for your field study. Most departments offer independent field study opportunities.

Community Service — Learning Programs — These programs enable students to perform community service while studying topics related to economics, history, sociology, education, urban planning, or other subjects.

Sequential or Immersion Options — Field Studies Development co-sponsors course sequences (taken during one term or over a period of two or three terms) where students study a single issue from different perspectives. For example, the Sociology Department sponsors a three-course "term" which focuses on the control of crime issues.

Developmental Disabilities Immersion Program (DDIP) — Cosponsored by Field Studies Development, the Department of Psychology, and the Department of Psychiatry and Biobehavioral Sciences, DDIP offers an intensive study and work experience in developmental disabilities. The program is a full two-term sequence offered in Winter and Spring Quarters. For more information, call (310) 825-1627.

Freshman and Sophomore Programs

Honors Collegium

The Honors Collegium is an innovative educational alternative designed primarily for UCLA's promising freshmen and sophomores. Some upper division courses are also offered. For a complete description of this program, see Chapter 5 on the College of Letters and Science.

Lower Division/First-Year Seminars

These departmentally sponsored seminars are designed to provide freshmen and sophomores the opportunity to participate in a small classroom setting to enhance writing, verbal, and analytical skills. Many courses carry general education credit.

Professional Schools Seminar Program (PSSP)

This program offers seminars that explore topics bridging various academic disciplines and professional practice. Students seeking to define their own academic and career goals gain valuable exposure to (1) research frontiers in the professions, (2) policy and ethical issues, and (3) historical and sociological perspectives on professional practice.

Seminars are offered in Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters (consult the Schedule of Classes). Enrollment is limited to allow students close contact with professional school faculty members; lower division students are preferred. You must satisfy the Subject A requirement before enrolling in these seminars. General education credit is granted for most seminars. For further information, contact the PSSP Office in 80 Powell Library (310-825-5467).

Individual Classes

Most departments offer the individual studies (199) course for seniors — or juniors with at least a B average — who want to pursue a particular research interest. Consult your department or the departmental listings in this catalog for further information.

Individual Majors

Highly motivated students who find that no single major accommodates their specific interest in a given subject may propose designing their own major. Proposals are prepared with faculty guidance and sponsorship and are thoroughly examined for cogency, completeness, and academic merit.

The requirements for an individual major vary with each college and school at UCLA, although maintaining a high scholastic average is usually mandatory. Please refer to the appropriate college or school chapter.

Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC)

The University of California, in accordance with the National Defense Act of 1920 and with the concurrence of The Regents, offers courses and programs in military training. This voluntary training allows you to qualify for an officer's commission in the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps while completing your college education. ROTC courses are offered by three departments within the College of Letters and Science: Aerospace Studies (Air Force), Military Science (Army), and Naval Science (Navy and Marine Corps). Equipment, uniforms, and textbooks are provided. The programs carry a monthly stipend in the junior and senior years, and additional financial aid is available to qualified students. Individual programs are described in detail in Chapter 5 on the College of Letters and Science.

Student Research Program (SRP)

The Student Research Program (A265 Murphy Hall, 310-825-6443) invites undergraduates to become directly and fully involved in the University research community through opportunities to participate in faculty research projects. You gain valuable research experience, acquire in-depth knowledge of a specific field or discipline, and establish a "partnership" with a faculty member. The program is available to all undergraduates on a voluntary basis (approval of a proposal for credit is pending). If you participate on a voluntary basis, you receive transcript notation after completing 60 hours of research (approximately six hours per week). There is no required minimum grade-point average. Consult the SRP Information and Faculty Directory Handbook for further information on the enrollment process.

Teaching Careers

Although UCLA has no undergraduate major in education, you may prepare for a career in teaching and/or education on campus. Information is available from the following offices:

- (1) Specialization in Education Program Office, 1009 Moore Hall, for information regarding this specialization. The program is described in detail in Chapter 5 on the College of Letters and Science.
- (2) College of Letters and Science Counseling Service, A316 Murphy Hall, for information regarding the Diversified Liberal Arts Program which is described in detail in Chapter 5 on the College of Letters and Science.
- (3) Placement and Career Planning Center, for information on employment opportunities in teaching and education.
- (4) UCLA Graduate School of Education and Information Studies, Office of Student Services, 1009 Moore Hall, for information on master's and doctoral degree programs in education and current information on requirements for various instructional credentials.

Advising and Academic Assistance

UCLA's academic standards are high, and many students find they need some form of academic assistance. Help is available in several forms: staff and student counselors, faculty advisers, services, and special programs. You need only to seek it out. This section introduces you to the many kinds of assistance available to undergraduates. Refer to the section on "Student Services" in Chapter 1 for other helpful programs.

College and School Advisers

Each college/school and academic department at UCLA has a staff of academic counselors and advisers who are knowledgeable and experienced. They are eager to help you plan your academic program, monitor your progress toward the bachelor's degree, provide information about college and major requirements and prerequisites, and assist you with academic problems, improving study habits, and program planning. Counseling offices for each undergraduate college and school are listed below.

College of Letters and Science — A316 Murphy Hall, (310) 825-1965 or 825-3382 (Honors Programs — A311 Murphy Hall, 310-825-1553 or 825-3786)

School of Engineering and Applied Science — 6426 Boelter Hall, (310) 825-2826

Counseling Assistants

Counseling assistants (CAs) are UCLA graduate students who have been specially trained to help new and lower division students with the transition into University life. Employed by the Division of Honors and Undergraduate Programs in the College of Letters and Science, they represent a number of academic disciplines in the college. CAs help new and lower division students with program planning and course selection and provide assistance in skill building and personal support. You may make an appointment with a CA at the information window at A316 Murphy Hall. CAs are available at the College Counseling Service in Murphy Hall and at Griffin Commons. For additional information, call (310) 206-6681.

ASK Peer Counselors

The ASK program provides an extension to the counseling services available to College of Letters and Science undergraduates. ASK counselors are students trained to provide you with academic information, advisement, and referral in a convenient walk-up setting.

You can find ASK counselors weekdays at these campus locations: Campbell Hall (southwest corner), Royce/Powell Quad, and Schoenberg Hall (vending area) from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., next to A316 Murphy Hall from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., and adjacent to 1105 Murphy Hall from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Orientation

Orientation at UCLA provides a comprehensive introduction to campus life. During the summer and before the beginning of Winter and Spring Quarters, special programs offer new undergraduates extensive academic counseling and educational planning. During Orientation you work in small groups with peer counselors and gain insight into necessary academic skills, learn how to plan and construct your academic program, and become familiar with the educational opportunities, student services, and facilities available at UCLA. Individual counseling sessions help you adjust to University life and fulfill the advising requirements of the college and some schools. Sessions for parents are also offered.

During the summer, Orientation offers three-day, two-night dormitory live-in programs for first-year students and one-day programs for transfer students. Prior to Winter and Spring Quarters, a one-day on-campus program is offered. There is a fee for participation. For more information, contact the Orientation Office in 201 Griffin Commons (310-206-6685).

College Tutorial Services

College Composition and ESL Tutorials

The College Composition Tutoring Lab, in cooperation with the UCLA Writing Programs, offers individual assistance to students enrolled in English A, 2, and 3 and to students writing papers for other UCLA courses. The lab is staffed by trained undergraduate peer tutors who have shown outstanding ability in advanced composition courses and who can help students at any stage of the writing process — from generating and organizing ideas to polishing final drafts.

The College ESL Tutoring Lab assists nonnative-speaking students with English grammar, idioms, pronunciation, listening comprehension, and composition. Priority is given to students enrolled in English as a Second Language 33A, 33B, and 33C, and other ESL courses. Most of the ESL tutors are graduate students pursuing degrees in teaching English as a second language.

Both the Composition and ESL Labs are located in 228 Griffin Commons and offer free individual tutoring by appointment. For tutoring appointments or further information, call (310) 206-1491.

College Math/Sciences Tutorials

The College Math/Sciences Tutorials, located in 230 Griffin Commons, provide an organized by-appointment tutorial program for most introductory courses in biology, chemistry, mathematics, and physics. Trained tutors meet in small group sessions on a weekly basis, teaching methods to improve problem-solving skills and test-taking strategies. Requests for tutors must be made during the first three weeks of the term; early registration is strongly advised. Drop-in tutoring is also offered. Schedules vary each term. For more information, call (310) 206-6965 or 825-7305.

College Tutorials for Student Athletes

The College Tutorials for Student Athletes provide tutoring in the evening and on weekends for intercollegiate athletes whose practice and competition schedules prevent them from participating in other tutorial services. Eligible student athletes can receive regular individual or small group assistance in a wide range of courses, provided they request tutoring within the first four weeks of the term. Trained tutors clarify course content, teach study strategies and, in consultation with course instructors, develop problem-solving exercises and practice examinations to build learning and performance skills.

The coordinator is located in 209 Griffin Commons. For tutoring appointments and further information, call (310) 825-8699.

Academic Advancement Program (AAP)

The Academic Advancement Program, with more than 5,500 students, is the nation's largest undergraduate affirmative action program, a multiracial and multicultural program working to retain and graduate historically underrepresented (African American, Chicano/Latino, Native American, Pacific Islander, and Pilipino), first-generation college, and low-income students. AAP's goals include increasing the number of AAP students who enter graduate and professional schools and developing the academic, political, economic, and community leadership necessary to transform our society in the twenty-first century. AAP encourages and promotes the academic achievement of its students by providing them with support services, academic programs, learning resources, scholarships, and research opportunities.

You are eligible to join AAP, participate in its programs, and use its resources if you are a student who comes from a historically underrepresented population, are the first generation to go to college, or are from a low-income family. All students, except Native Americans, must be California residents. For more information, contact the AAP Office in 1209 Campbell Hall (310-825-1481).

Freshman and Transfer Summer Programs

The six-week Freshman and Transfer Summer Programs prepare students to succeed at UCLA by exposing them to the rigor and demands of academic life and the wide range of campus programs, services, and learning resources.

You enroll in two University courses (both meet UCLA's requirements for graduation) and receive close personal attention, in either small groups or individual sessions, from your teaching assistants and tutors. You are encouraged to live on campus so that you can participate in the many cultural and social events, interact with students of diverse backgrounds, build a network of friends, and broaden your life experiences and world outlook.

Counseling Services

AAP counselors work with students to plan their academic programs, monitor progress toward the bachelor's degree, provide information about requirements and prerequisites for different majors, discuss graduate school and career options, and provide support and assistance for students' personal problems. One counselor is responsible for scholarships and housing and financial aid needs. Upper division AAP peer counselors provide a student perspective on courses, study strategies, educational goals, and stress management to entering students.

AAP counseling services include a special component called the Program Leading to Undergraduate Success (PLUS), which provides retention services such as counseling, tutoring, and a variety of specialized developmental programs for first-generation college students. The PLUS team personalizes the educational process and gives students the opportunity to develop the skills necessary to achieve their academic and career goals.

Tutorial Services

The Tutorial Services unit builds on the premise that critical thinking and intellectual independence are best developed through questioning and active dialogue. Free individual or small group tutoring is offered to all AAP students who wish to improve their critical thinking and analytical reading, composition, quantitative reasoning, and study skills while mastering course materials. AAP provides tutoring for more than 400 courses through its humanities, social sciences, and math/sciences laboratories.

Graduate Mentor Program (GMP)

The primary goal of the Graduate Mentor Program is to increase the number of AAP students who enroll in graduate or professional schools through the encouragement, support, guidance, and advocacy of underrepresented graduate student mentors. Services offered include individual mentoring, meetings with faculty at roundtable discussions, workshops and seminars (on such topics as the graduate application process, financing graduate studies, and GRE preparation), summer undergraduate research stipends, letters of recommendation, and a resource library.

Instructional Media

The Instructional Media Laboratory provides individual student access to course-related interactive and videotape programs. Students, assigned by faculty to study specific supplementary materials, may learn at their own pace and at times that suit their individual schedules. The laboratory is located in 270 Powell Library (310-206-1211).

The Instructional Media Library is UCLA's central resource for the collection and maintenance of educational and instructional media. Materials from the collection are loaned to regularly scheduled UCLA classes and may be rented by organizations and individuals from the campus community. The library is authorized to monitor compliance with University guidelines and federal copyright law governing the use of video recordings. Reference books from educational and feature film distributors are available. The staff assists in researching media on any subject and obtaining materials from outside sources. The library has moved to 160 Powell Library (310-825-0755) for the duration of the seismic renovation project.

The Language Laboratory is a full-service audio facility for teaching and learning languages. Students enrolled in foreign language classes are assigned by faculty to practice pronunciation, comprehension, and listening skills in the laboratory, 190 Powell Library (310-206-8855). Audiotape programs which accompany specific texts used in classes and listening, recording, and monitoring equipment are available.

Petitions

A petition is a piece of paper representing your need or desire to be exempted from any standard rule or regulation in the University. It is the only way to obtain formal approval from the department, the college or school, the Registrar, or whoever has authority over your particular request. Some petitions carry a small fee; others are free.

An approved petition for a waiver or substitution in degree requirements represents an agreement between you, your college or school and, in some cases, the department chair, granting you an exception from the existing regulations.

Petitions are also used at UCLA to change your college/school or major, take more or fewer units than regulations permit, make late changes to your Study List, remove an Incomplete grade, or obtain credit by examination. In addition, you may petition for concurrent enrollment, double major, or waiver of scholarship requirements. Petitions for most of these exceptions are available from your college/school or department.

Academic Excellence

Eligible students receive the following honors and awards in recognition of academic achievement.

Dean's Honors List

The College of Letters and Science, School of the Arts, School of Engineering and Applied Science, and School of Theater, Film, and Television award Dean's Honors to deserving students each term. The School of Nursing awards Dean's Honors on an annual basis. These honors are based on the grade-point average attained within a specified number of units. Consult your college or school for further information.

Honors at Graduation

Your college or school awards honors according to your overall GPA at graduation. To be eligible you must have completed at least 90 (98 for the School of Nursing) University of California units for a letter grade.

The levels of honors are summa cum laude, magna cum laude, and cum laude. Specific requirements vary for each level and are included in the appropriate college and school chapters.

Departmental Honors

In the College of Letters and Science, departmental honors and highest honors are awarded at graduation on your major department's recommendation, based on successful completion of a departmental honors program. Consult your department for its requirements.

Departmental Scholar Program

Departments in all campus units except the School of Nursing may nominate exceptionally promising juniors and seniors as UCLA Departmental Scholars to pursue bachelor's and master's degree programs simultaneously. Nominations are submitted to the college or school dean or provost for recommendation to the dean of the Graduate Division. If you are interested in becoming a Departmental Scholar, consult your department well in advance of application dates for graduate admission (see the Calendar at the beginning of this catalog).

Honor Societies

Alpha Lambda Delta and Phi Eta Sigma

Membership in these national freshman honor societies is based solely on academic achievement during your freshman year. To be eligible you must have a 3.5 GPA with 12 graded University of California units in the first term of your freshman year, or a cumulative 3.5 GPA at the end of the second and/or third terms. Invitations are issued in Winter Quarter, and initiation is held during Spring Quarter. For more information, contact the Office of the Dean of Students, 1206 Murphy Hall (310-825-3871).

Golden Key

Golden Key is a national interdisciplinary academic honors organization dedicated to excellence. Students qualify on the basis of objective academic criteria; no more than the top 15 percent of enrolled juniors and seniors may be eligible. The society recognizes and encourages scholastic achievement and excellence in all undergraduate fields of study, unites with collegiate faculties and administrators in developing and maintaining high standards of education, provides economic assistance to outstanding members by means of an annual scholarship for initiates and graduating seniors, and promotes scholastic achievement and altruistic conduct through voluntary service. Invitations are issued in Winter Quarter, and a reception is held in Spring Quarter. For more information, contact the Office of the Dean of Students, 1206 Murphy Hall (310-825-3871).

Mortar Board

Mortar Board is a national honor society for college seniors which recognizes outstanding and continual scholarship, leadership, and service to the campus community. To be considered for membership, candidates must have completed 90 units and must have attained at least a B average or be in the highest 35 percent scholastically of the junior class, whichever is higher. Applications are available from the Center for Student Programming, 337 Plaza Building (310-825-7041), early in Winter Quarter and are due by mid-February. Approximately 40 members are selected each spring by the outgoing chapter.

Phi Beta Kappa

Phi Beta Kappa is a national honorary society in the humanities, liberal arts, and sciences, founded at the College of William and Mary in 1776. Membership is conferred for high scholastic standing and is determined by vote of the chapter council according to scholarship records. (Students do not apply for Phi Beta Kappa membership.)

At UCLA only graduating seniors and selected juniors are elected to membership. The annual election is held in May, with the initiation in June. At present, the minimum GPA considered is 3.65 (for 140 or more UC units); the minimum number of UC units considered is 75 (students at the 75-unit level must have at least a 3.85 GPA). A reasonable distribution of courses in the humanities and sciences is also required. A Passed grade is computed approximately as a B, depending on number of courses taken and graded units. If you are elected, you will be notified by mail. For more information, contact Phi Beta Kappa in the Honors Programs Office, A311 Murphy Hall (310-206-5207).

Outstanding Senior Award

The Outstanding Senior Award offers recognition to graduating seniors who have demonstrated scholastic excellence, creativity in the department, and outstanding service to the University and community. Nominations are accepted in January and early February, and awards are presented at the annual Alumni Awards Ceremony in June. For more information, contact the UCLA Alumni Association in the West Alumni Center, 325 Westwood Plaza (310-206-0523).

Nature of Graduate Education

The principal characteristic of graduate study is the pursuit of new knowledge through research. At UCLA graduate students benefit from — and contribute to — the resources of one of the outstanding research universities in the country. A distinguished faculty committed to research and teaching, an extensive library system ranked among the best in the nation, and excellent research centers, institutes, and laboratories in virtually every major discipline (see details in Chapter 1) all provide an extraordinary scope of opportunities for graduate endeavor.

Graduate training at UCLA takes place in the classrooms, the laboratories, the libraries, in specialized seminars, through independent research, and in teaching experiences. As a graduate student, your education is enriched by the several hundred postdoctoral fellows and visiting scholars from other universities who engage in research and teaching at UCLA every year. This unique research environment promotes the quality of original work and study which is the hallmark of graduate education.

The degree of Master of Arts or Master of Science, or one of several professional degrees such as Master of Business Administration or Juris Doctor, is intended to develop your mastery of a field and prepare you for the practice of a profession. The doctoral degree (Ph.D., Ed.D., etc.) is designed to prepare you for creative activity and original research, often in association with college or university teaching.

Administration

The Graduate Division

The UCLA Graduate Division is responsible for administering policy established by the Academic Senate's Graduate Council for master's, doctoral, and professional degree programs other than those in law, medicine, and dentistry. It oversees graduate recruitment and admissions, fellowships, teaching assistantships, graduate student researcher appointments, and other graduate student support, affirmative action, and the maintenance of high quality standards in all UCLA graduate programs. The dean of the Graduate Division also serves as vice chancellor — academic affairs.

The Graduate Council

The Graduate Council is a standing committee of the UCLA Academic Senate. In keeping with the University's philosophy of shared governance, the council is responsible for the establishment of policy and standards for graduate education at UCLA; the approval, review, and monitoring of graduate degree programs; and recommendations regarding fellowships and assistantships.

The Graduate Adviser

After admission to a department, program, or school, each graduate student is assigned a graduate adviser who assists the student in program planning and completing degree requirements. The graduate adviser is available for counseling whenever needed; departments usually require at least one student consultation each term. When the master's or doctoral committee is established, the faculty chair of that committee often assumes the adviser's role.

Graduate Students Association (GSA)

UCLA's Graduate Students Association (GSA) shares an equal voice with the Undergraduate Students Association in the governance of the Associated Students. For more details on the GSA, see "Student Activities" in Chapter 1.

Graduate Admission

Information:

Graduate Admissions Office
(310) 825-1711

Admission Requirements

U.S. applicants to graduate standing must hold a bachelor's degree from a regionally accredited institution comparable in standard and content to that awarded at the University of California. Degrees granted on the basis, for example, of nonacademic prior learning, test scores, and other than organized supervised coursework in academic subjects are not considered comparable. A scholastic average of B or better (or its equivalent if the letter grade system is not used) is required in the last two years of undergraduate coursework and in any postbaccalaureate study.

International applicants who have completed their postsecondary education outside the U.S. are expected to hold a degree, with above average scholarship, from a non-U.S. university or university-level institution. If your examinations have been graded Excellent, Very Good, Good, and Pass, you must have at least a Very Good general rating to qualify for admission. Students who hold a three-year ordinary or pass degree, or who hold a professional diploma in accounting, business, librarianship, social work, physical education, health education, etc., or a four-year degree, diploma, or higher certificate from a technical, vocational, or postsecondary specialized school, should not apply for graduate admission. Persons with memberships in professional associations such as Institutes of Chartered Accountants, the Institute of Chartered Secretaries and Administrators, etc., also do not qualify for graduate admission.

Meeting the minimum requirements does not ensure graduate admission, which is limited by the number of places available in UCLA's schools, college, and departments. Applications are evaluated in terms of scholastic qualifications and formal preparation for the graduate field of study. Departments may have special requirements for admission, which are included under individual departmental listings in this catalog.

Applying for Admission

Graduate students at UCLA must submit the 1994-95 Application for Graduate Admission to UCLA Graduate Application Processing, P.O. Box 23895, Oakland, CA 94623-0895. You may obtain this form, in person or by mail, from your prospective school or department.

Applications are generally accepted for Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters, although some departments limit admission to Fall Quarter due to course sequencing. Such restrictions are stated in this catalog's departmental listings and in the application packet. Enrollment in Summer Sessions courses does not constitute admission to graduate standing.

Applications and supporting papers should be on file by the following dates (if the dates below fall on a weekend or holiday, the next working day applies):

December 15, 1993, for Fall Quarter 1994
October 1, 1994, for Winter Quarter 1995
December 29, 1994, for Spring Quarter 1995
December 15, 1994, for Fall Quarter 1995

Applications postmarked after these dates will be considered only when enrollment and funding limitations permit.

Supporting papers and materials to be submitted, including official transcripts of record and a $40 nonrefundable application fee, are specified in the application packet. Submitted materials are not returnable.

Graduate Record Examination — If you are applying for admission to a department or school which requires Graduate Record Examination (GRE) scores, you should arrange to take the examination no later than February so your scores arrive on time. GRE scores should be sent directly to your prospective department and not to the Graduate Division.

1994-95 GRE Test Dates

October 8, 1994	April 8, 1995
December 10, 1994	June 3, 1995 (general only)

GRE applications and information are available from offices of the Educational Testing Service, either at CN 6000, Princeton, NJ 08541-6000, or at 1947 Center Street, Berkeley, CA 94704. For information on GRE Fee Waivers, write to the associate program director at the New Jersey address.

Letters of Recommendation — Most graduate professional schools, departments, and interdepartmental programs at UCLA require applicants to submit three letters of recommendation. Letters typically augment, validate, or explain information provided in the application and should be written by people qualified to analyze your abilities and academic promise. In some cases, these letters may mean the difference between acceptance and rejection. Letters should be sent directly to the prospective department. Forms to be used are included in the application packet.

Mandatory Medical Insurance Requirement

UCLA requires, as a condition of registration, that all graduate students and all international students on nonimmigrant visas have adequate medical insurance coverage during all periods of enrollment. See "Mandatory Medical Insurance Requirement" in the "Graduate Registration and Enrollment" section later in this chapter for a description of what constitutes adequate medical insurance. Most travel insurance plans are NOT acceptable; medical insurance plans from foreign countries (including Canada) also are NOT acceptable.

UCLA offers a student Medical Insurance Plan (MIP) which fulfills the requirement. For graduate students the MIP fee is included each term in the amount due on the UCLA Billing Statement. This is the only method by which MIP can be purchased.

If you decide to waive out of MIP because you have adequate private medical insurance, you must complete the Medical Insurance Waiver Request included each term with the UCLA Billing Statement and submit the form when you pay your registration fees. For further information on MIP or adequate medical insurance requirements, call the Student Health Service Insurance Office at (310) 825-1856.

International Applicants

Applicants who have credentials from universities and colleges in foreign countries should submit applications at least two months before the dates listed on page 53. International applicants should have an academic degree or professional title earned at a university and will be evaluated on the basis of grades (marks) and class or rank achieved. You should submit official transcripts of record, in duplicate, for all college and university work. Specific instructions are given in the application packet.

Proficiency in English

Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) — International students who hold a bachelor's or higher degree from a university in a country where the official language is English and in which English is the spoken tongue and the medium of instruction, or who have completed at least two years of full-time study at such an institution, are exempt from both the TOEFL and the UCLA English as a Second Language Placement Examination (ESLPE). All other applicants must take the TOEFL, administered by the Educational Testing Service in some 95 foreign centers. Applications are available from the Educational Testing Service, CN 6000, Princeton, NJ 08541-6000.

UCLA English as a Second Language Placement Examination (ESLPE) — If your native language is not English, you are required to take the UCLA ESLPE (in addition to the TOEFL) before the term in which you are to register. Depending on your ESLPE results, you may have to complete one or more courses in the English as a Second Language 33 series, beginning in your first term in residence at UCLA. These courses must be passed with a grade of C or better if taken for a letter grade, or B or better if taken on an S/U basis. You should expect to spend a longer period of time at the University than would normally be necessary to complete a degree program if you are required to take any English as a second language courses. If you do not achieve a minimum score on the ESLPE, your admission is deferred until you have acquired the necessary proficiency in English. Neither the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) nor any other English proficiency test can be submitted or accepted in lieu of the ESLPE.

Test of Spoken English (TSE) — If you are an international student and wish an appointment as a teaching assistant, you should take the Test of Spoken English offered at the TOEFL Center in your home country.

No Degree Objective

UCLA has no special graduate, limited, or unclassified categories of admission. Under some circumstances, however, applicants may be admitted for coursework without a degree objective. For example, teachers with a master's degree who wish some refresher study, or international students on a year's stay in the U.S., may wish to apply in this manner. Requirements for admission are the same as those for degree programs. All admission to no degree objective (NDO) programs, except for students in official Education Abroad Programs, must be preapproved by the dean of the Graduate Division, as must any University financial assistance for students on NDO status.

Duplication of Degrees

The University of California, in general, discourages the duplication of advanced degrees. At the same time, it recognizes that a professional degree does not duplicate an academic one, and that pressing needs may exist for degrees in different areas (see "Concurrent and Articulated Degree Programs" later in this chapter). If you are applying for a second academic degree at the same level or lower than the one you already hold, you are required to show compelling cause to the department. All degree requirements and University regulations apply just as they do for a first degree. Courses already applied to the earlier degree may not be applied to the second.

Summer Sessions Courses

Enrollment in Summer Sessions courses does not constitute admission to graduate standing, nor does it substitute for the required continuous registration in Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters. If you wish to apply

Summer Sessions courses to your subsequent graduate program, you should consult in advance with your departmental adviser. This is also true if you have been readmitted to graduate standing and you wish to resume graduate study in Summer Sessions. Information and applications are available from the Office of Summer Sessions, 1147 Murphy Hall. Also refer to the sections on "Academic Residence" and "Transfer of Credit" later in this chapter.

If you take Summer Sessions courses following the award of your bachelor's degree, the grades do not appear on your undergraduate transcript (they are included on a separate transcript). After you are accepted by the Graduate Division, your Summer Sessions grades are included on your graduate transcript and computed in your grade-point average.

Readmission

Students who are granted a formal leave of absence (see "Leaving UCLA" in Chapter 4) do not have to apply for readmission if they resume their graduate work in accordance with the terms of their leaves. All other continuing graduate students who fail to register for any regular session, or who fail to complete a term through cancellation or withdrawal, must compete for readmission with new applicants.

If you have registered at any time as a graduate student at UCLA and are returning after an absence (except a formal leave of absence), you must file an Application for Graduate Admission. Forms are available from the departments and should be submitted to UCLA Graduate Application Processing, P.O. Box 23895, Oakland, CA 94623-0895. The following materials must accompany the application:

- (1) A check or money order for $40 (nonrefundable) made payable to The Regents of the University of California.
- (2) The Graduate Petition for Change of Major, if appropriate. (If you are reapplying in a new major, request this form along with the Application for Graduate Admission.) Your UCLA graduate transcript must also be submitted.
- (3) Transcripts of all academic work completed since your registration at UCLA as a graduate student.

UCLA ACCESS to Programs in Molecular and Cellular Life Sciences

The life and basic biomedical science departments at UCLA offer a mechanism for a combined recruitment, admission, and first-year program that provides Ph.D. students in the molecular and cellular life sciences with maximal choice and flexibility in selecting a research specialization. Through UCLA ACCESS, you are able to select research projects from 165 faculty mentors according to changing perceptions, interests, and goals without regard to traditional departmental boundaries. The first year of each degree program has a common curriculum and advising structure. For further information, refer to "Special Programs and Training" later in this chapter.

Admission to the Schools of Dentistry, Law, and Medicine

Applicants for M.S. and Ph.D. programs in departments of the School of Medicine or Dentistry should apply for admission to the Graduate Division as described above. For admission to D.D.S., J.D., and M.D. degree programs in the Schools of Dentistry, Law, and Medicine, write to the respective schools for their announcement booklets and for information and application procedures.

Requirements for Graduate Degrees

UCLA offers instruction leading to a broad range of master's and doctoral degrees, both academic and professional. Graduate students earn master's or doctoral degrees through distinguished achievement in study and research. Achievement in study is evaluated by means of the qualifying and comprehensive examinations. Achievement in research is judged by the merits of the thesis or dissertation.

The doctorate, and specifically the Doctor of Philosophy degree, is awarded in recognition of a candidate's in-depth knowledge of a broad field of learning, and for demonstrated ability to make original and distinguished contributions to the field. More generally, the degree is an affidavit of critical aptitude in scholarship, imaginative enterprise in research, and proficiency and style in communication.

University Minimum Standards

The requirements described here for master's and doctoral degrees are minimum standards set by the University. Individual schools or departments may set higher standards and may require additional courses and/or examinations for their master's degree. Each department also sets additional requirements for doctoral degrees according to the demands of the field of study. You are advised to consult the appropriate school announcement or your departmental graduate adviser for details.

Transfer of Credit

There are two general regulations governing transfer of credit. No courses completed before the award of the bachelor's degree may be applied toward a graduate degree unless you are a UCLA Departmental Scholar (see "Academic Excellence" in Chapter 2). Also, courses taken for any other degree may not be applied toward a master's degree at UCLA unless you are enrolled in a Graduate Council-approved concurrent degree program (see "Concurrent and Articulated Degree Programs" later in this chapter).

From Within the University — You may petition to have units and grade points for graduate work completed at other campuses of the University applied toward satisfaction of master's degree requirements at UCLA. Such courses may fulfill up to one half of both the total course and

University Minimum Standards For Advanced Degrees*

REQUIREMENT	MASTER'S DEGREE	DOCTORAL DEGREE
ACADEMIC RESIDENCE	One year (three terms) in graduate standing at University of California, two terms at UCLA.	Two years (six terms) in graduate standing at University of California, including three consecutive terms at UCLA. In most cases a longer period of residence is necessary.
PROGRAM OF STUDY	Nine graduate and upper division courses (36 units) in graduate standing, including at least five graduate courses.	No specific course requirements. Program is planned with adviser and guidance committee.
SCHOLARSHIP	B average required in all courses taken in graduate standing at UC and in all courses applied toward the master's degree.	B average required in all courses taken in graduate standing at UC.
FOREIGN LANGUAGE	Requirements are determined by individual departments and programs.	Requirements are determined by individual departments and programs.
ADVANCEMENT TO CANDIDACY	All requirements for advancement, including foreign language examinations, must be satisfied. Forms must be filed by second week of the term in which degree is to be awarded.	The departmental written and University Oral Qualifying Examinations must be passed; departmental, course, and language requirements must be completed. Advancement is officially granted when you obtain your committee chair's signature, pay the $50 fee, and return the application to the Graduate Division.
FINAL REQUIREMENT FOR THE DEGREE	Master's thesis or comprehensive examination (written, oral, or both).	Doctoral dissertation. A final oral examination in defense of the dissertation may also be required.

*Individual departments and programs may set higher standards. Refer to departmental listings under the appropriate college or school chapter or consult your departmental graduate adviser for details.
 **If the master's degree was earned at UCLA, one year of residence will have been satisfied.

graduate course requirements, and one third of the academic residence requirement, but may not have been used to fulfill the requirements for another degree.

From Outside the University — With approval of the dean of the Graduate Division and your major department, courses completed with a grade of B or better in graduate standing at institutions outside the University of California may apply toward UCLA master's programs. However, courses taken for any degree awarded at another institution may not be applied toward a graduate degree at UCLA. A maximum of two courses (eight quarter units or five semester units) may be applied, but they cannot be used to reduce either the minimum graduate course requirement or the academic residence requirement. (To convert semester units into quarter units, multiply the semester units by 1.5 — e.g., 12 semester units  $\times$  1.5 = 18 quarter units. To convert quarter units into semester units, multiply the quarter units by .666 — e.g., 12 quarter units  $\times$  .666 = 7.99 or 8 semester units.)

From Summer Sessions — Regular session courses offered in UCLA Summer Sessions by regular faculty qualify for credit toward a higher degree with departmental approval. Courses offered by visiting faculty may apply, with a recommendation from the department chair. It is best to consult your departmental graduate adviser about applying Summer Sessions courses to your graduate program.

From UCLA Extension — Extension courses taken after July 1, 1969, can be applied only if they are concurrent courses prefixed by XLC (offered for students in degree programs and open to Extension students by petition) in the 100, 200, or 400 series, completed with a grade of B or better. By petition to the dean of the Graduate Division and with departmental approval, a maximum of two such courses may be applied toward the nine-course minimum and the five-graduate-course requirements for the master's degree. The master's program, then, would include at least three courses in the 200 or 500 series for academic degrees, or three courses in the 200, 400, or 500 series for professional degrees.

If your master's program requires more than nine courses, concurrent Extension courses may be applied toward one half of the course requirements over the minimum of nine.

Grades earned in Extension courses or in courses taken outside the University of California are not included in computing your grade-point average nor may they be used to remove scholarship deficiencies. Correspondence courses are not applicable to graduate degrees.

Academic Residence

Master's Degree — The minimum residence requirement consists of three academic terms in graduate standing at the University of California, including at least two terms at UCLA.

Doctoral Degree — The minimum residence requirement is two years (six terms) in graduate standing at the University of California, including one year (usually the second) in continuous residence at UCLA. If you earned a master's degree at UCLA, one year of this requirement will have been met. In most cases a longer period of residence is necessary, and from three to five years is generally considered optimal.

Academic residency for both degrees is established by successfully completing a minimum of one graduate or upper division course (four units) during a term.

You may earn one term of residence for summer study in either of these ways: (1) enroll in two six-week Summer Sessions taking at least two units of upper division and/or graduate work in each session OR (2) enroll in one eight-week session for at least four units of credit. Residence earned through Summer Sessions enrollment is limited to one third of the degree requirements.

To maintain satisfactory progress toward the degree, UCLA requires at least a B average in all courses taken in graduate standing at the University and in all courses applied toward a graduate degree, including those taken at another UC campus.

Foreign Language Requirements

Foreign language requirements are determined by individual departments and programs. If your program has a language requirement, you should fulfill it either before you begin graduate study or as soon as possible thereafter. All foreign language requirements must be satisfied before advancement to candidacy.

Many departments require graduate degree candidates to demonstrate proficiency in one or more foreign languages, so that you can acquire broad knowledge in your field of study and keep abreast of foreign developments in the field. You are urged to complete language requirements as early as possible in your graduate career. If your department requires two or more foreign languages, you must complete at least one before the University Oral Qualifying Examination (unless your department requires that both be completed before the examination).

Depending on your department's regulations, you may fulfill foreign language requirements either by passing the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) in French, German, Russian, or Spanish or (in languages not offered by GSFLT) by passing examinations given by UCLA language departments. You may register for the examination at the UCLA Extension Cashier's Office, 10995 Le Conte Avenue. UCLA enrollment is not required. Consult UCLA Extension for registration procedures.

Some departments allow students to fulfill language requirements either by passing departmental examinations or by completing coursework in a foreign language. Certain departments may require additional languages, special competence, or other special procedures. In some departments, English satisfies the foreign language requirement if it is not your native language.

For further details on foreign language requirements, consult your departmental graduate adviser.

Program of Study and Scholarship

Master's Degree

At least nine graduate and upper division courses (or any number of fractional courses totaling 36 units) must be completed in graduate standing; at least five (20 units) of the nine must be graduate-level courses.

UCLA offers master's degrees under two plans: Plan I, the Master's Thesis, and Plan II, the Master's Comprehensive Examination. Some departments offer both plans, and you must consult with your department to determine the plan for meeting your degree requirements. University minimum requirements are the same under either plan.

Master's Thesis (Plan I)

After advancement to candidacy (described on next page), students under Plan I must submit a thesis reporting on results of their original investigation of a problem. While the problem may be one of only limited scope, the thesis must show a significant style, organization, and depth of understanding of the subject.

A thesis committee, consisting of at least three faculty members who hold regular professorial appointments at the University, is nominated by the department and appointed by the dean of the Graduate Division for each student (consult the Graduate Division for more details on committee members' eligibility requirements). The thesis committee, which must be appointed before you may be advanced to candidacy, approves the subject and plan of the thesis, provides the guidance necessary to complete it, then reads and approves the completed manuscript. Approval must be unanimous among committee members.

Once the thesis committee and other concerned faculty have approved the subject for the thesis, work may begin. You are responsible for preparing the thesis in the proper form and for observing filing deadlines.

Master's Comprehensive Examination (Plan II)

Following advancement to candidacy (described in next column), students under Plan II must pass a comprehensive examination administered by a committee consisting of at least three faculty members appointed by the department. In some departments the comprehensive examination may serve as a screening examination for admission to doctoral programs. Information concerning this examination and its format is available in your department.

Doctoral Degree

Doctoral programs are individualized and permit a high degree of specialization. The University does not specify course requirements for doctoral programs. Individual programs set their own requirements, which may include specific courses, and these must be completed before you take the University Oral Qualifying Examination. You will determine your course of study in consultation with a graduate adviser until the doctoral committee is appointed.

Doctoral Examinations before Advancement to Candidacy

Prior to advancement to candidacy, doctoral candidates fulfill the coursework, teaching, and/or examinations required by the major department or group. You are supervised during this period by a departmental adviser and/or departmental guidance committee. This committee administers a departmental written and, in some cases, oral examination (not to be confused with the University Oral Qualifying Examination) after you complete the recommended or required work. Once all departmental and foreign language requirements are met, the department chair consults with you and then nominates a doctoral committee.

University Oral Qualifying Examination

The doctoral committee, consisting of at least four faculty members nominated by your department, is appointed by the dean of the Graduate Division (consult the Graduate Division for details on committee membership). To determine your qualifications for advancement to candidacy, the committee administers the University Oral Qualifying Examination and, at its option, a written examination.

Advancement to Candidacy

Master's Degree

When you have completed approximately half the program for the master's degree (usually at least two terms), you should formally apply for advancement to candidacy. Application forms are available from your department and must be filed there no later than the second week of the term in which you expect to receive your degree (by the end of the second week of the first Summer Session for a September degree).

You may not be advanced to candidacy until all departmental requirements for advancement, including foreign language examinations, have been satisfied. You then have one year from the date of advancement to complete all requirements for the degree, including your thesis or comprehensive examination. Candidacy expires at the end of one year and reinstatement during the term in which you plan to receive the degree is by petition only.

Doctoral Degree

You are eligible for advancement to doctoral candidacy after passing the University Oral Qualifying Examination with no more than one negative vote, completing four terms of academic residence and any additional departmental requirements, and maintaining a 3.0 grade-point average in graduate standing. You must complete the application for candidacy form sent to you by the Registrar's Office, have it signed by your doctoral committee chair, pay a $50 advancement to candidacy fee, and submit the form to the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs. You are officially advanced to candidacy on the date the completed form is submitted.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

In several departments, as approved by the Graduate Council, the intermediate degree of Candidate in Philosophy (C.Phil.) is awarded to qualified students on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D. degree.

The C.Phil. is not a terminal degree but gives formal recognition to a definite state of progress toward the doctorate. Academic requirements are the same as for advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D. (see above). Four terms in academic residence at UCLA are required. (Also refer to "Academic Residence" earlier in this chapter.)

The C.Phil. may not be conferred after or simultaneously with the Ph.D. For departments offering the C.Phil., see the degree chart at the beginning of this chapter. For further details, consult the Graduate Division.

Doctoral Dissertation

Once the doctoral committee approves the subject for your dissertation, the in-candidacy stage of the doctoral program begins and is devoted primarily to independent study and research and to the preparation of the dissertation, which demonstrates your ability for independent investigation. The doctoral committee guides your progress toward its completion. You are responsible for following instructions on the preparation of the dissertation and for observing filing deadlines.

Final Preparation and Filing of Thesis or Dissertation

For guidance in the final preparation of the thesis or in the preparation and submission of the dissertation and accompanying abstract, you may

- (1) Consult the theses and dissertations adviser, Office of the University Archivist, 390 Powell Library.
- (2) Read Regulations for Thesis and Dissertation Preparation, available in the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs, or in the Archivist's Office.
- (3) Attend an orientation meeting on manuscript preparation and filing procedures conducted soon after the start of each term (see the Calendar at the beginning of this catalog).

Master's Thesis — When all members of the committee have approved the thesis and you are ready to file it, you must initiate the final steps in the process by submitting the original signature (approval) page, title page, and any other required forms to the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs, where completion of degree requirements will be verified. After final approval by the dean of the Graduate Division, you must file the thesis with the theses and dissertations adviser by the published deadline (approximately two weeks before the degree is to be awarded).

Doctoral Dissertation — When all members of the committee have approved the dissertation and you are ready to file it, you must submit the original signature (approval) page and title page to the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs, where completion of degree requirements will be verified. After final approval by the dean of the Graduate Division, you must file two paper copies of the dissertation with the theses and dissertations adviser by the published deadline (approximately two weeks before the degree is to be awarded).

Deadlines for this academic year are

December 5 for Fall Quarter 1994
March 13 for Winter Quarter 1995
June 5 for Spring Quarter 1995

Doctoral Final Oral Examination

A final oral examination may be required at the option of any member of the doctoral committee, and in some departments is required of all doctoral candidates. The examination, for which all committee members must be present, may be held before you have prepared the final copy of your dissertation, but passing the examination (with no more than one negative vote of the committee members) does not imply approval of the final manuscript. Consult your doctoral committee chair or graduate adviser for further information.

Interdepartmental Degree Programs

In addition to graduate degree programs offered within schools and departments, UCLA offers interdisciplinary programs involving two or more participating departments. A total of 27 interdepartmental programs offer bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degrees in some combination; several units offer all three degrees. These programs are administered by interdepartmental committees made up of faculty whose membership is determined by research interest, not by departmental affiliation. By cutting across the usual lines of faculty division, a subject area is studied from the perspectives of different disciplines and a greater degree of program flexibility is achieved.

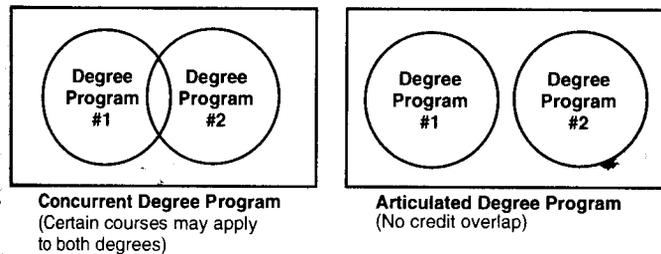

Interdepartmental degree programs which currently lead to advanced degrees are listed below. All are described more fully in Chapter 5 on the College of Letters and Science, with the exceptions of Environmental Science and Engineering which is in the School of Public Health (Chapter 17) and Neuroscience which is in the School of Medicine (Chapter 15). For further information, contact the chair or graduate adviser of the specific program that interests you.

African Area Studies (M.A.)
Afro-American Studies (M.A.)
American Indian Studies (M.A.)
Applied Linguistics (Ph.D.)
Archaeology (M.A., Ph.D.)
Asian American Studies (M.A.)
Comparative Literature (M.A., Ph.D.)
Environmental Science and Engineering (D.Env.)
Folklore and Mythology (M.A., Ph.D.)
Indo-European Studies (Ph.D.)
Islamic Studies (M.A., Ph.D.)
Latin American Studies (M.A.)
Molecular Biology (Ph.D.)
Neuroscience (Ph.D.)
Romance Linguistics and Literature (M.A., Ph.D.)

Concurrent and Articulated Degree Programs

Each of the programs described thus far leads to a single degree — either master's or doctoral. UCLA also offers concurrent and articulated degree programs, which allow you to earn two degrees simultaneously by combining two free-standing degree programs into a coordinated course of study. You may petition to design your own articulated program (with departmental and Graduate Division approval), but you may not apply credits for one degree to the other. Concurrent degree programs, which may not be individually designed, allow some credit overlap.

These programs accomplish several important objectives: they enable the University to respond to societal changes by creating new fields of study; they prepare students more fully for the world's complexities by combining the cultural (political/social/economic) aspects of their field with the tools of a professional degree; and they allow faculty members to cross departmental lines and interact on a broader scale.

Concurrent degree programs, by allowing a specified amount of credit to apply to both degrees, permit students to reduce the total number of courses required for the two degrees and thereby reduce the time normally required if courses were taken in sequence. Programs leading to concurrent degrees are offered in the following disciplines:

Education, M.A., Ph.D., M.Ed., or Ed.D. — Law, J.D.
History, M.A. — Library and Information Science, M.L.I.S.

Latin American Studies, Interdepartmental M.A. — Urban Planning, M.A.
Management, M.B.A. — Computer Science, M.S. (School of Engineering and Applied Science)
Management, M.B.A. — Latin American Studies, Interdepartmental M.A.
Management, M.B.A. — Law, J.D.
Management, M.B.A. — Library and Information Science, M.L.I.S.
Management, M.B.A. — Nursing, M.N.
Management, M.B.A. — Public Health, M.P.H.
Management, M.B.A. — Urban Planning, M.A.
Urban Planning, M.A. — Law, J.D.

Articulated degree programs permit no credit overlap, and students must complete degree requirements separately for each degree. Programs leading to articulated degrees are offered in the following disciplines:

African Area Studies, Interdepartmental M.A. — Public Health, M.P.H.
African Area Studies, Interdepartmental M.A. — Film and Television, M.F.A.
Latin American Studies, Interdepartmental M.A. — Education, M.Ed. in Curriculum
Latin American Studies, Interdepartmental M.A. — Engineering, M.S.
Latin American Studies, Interdepartmental M.A. — Library and Information Science, M.L.I.S.
Latin American Studies, Interdepartmental M.A. — Public Health, M.P.H.
Medicine, M.D. — Graduate Division health science major, Ph.D.
Oral Biology, M.S. — Dentistry, D.D.S. or Certificate

Inquiries about concurrent and articulated degree programs should be directed to graduate advisers in the departments and schools involved. Contact the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs, for information on designing your own articulated program.

Graduate Registration and Enrollment

Information:
Registration/Enrollment Office
(310) 825-1091

Detailed information on registration (fee payment) and enrollment procedures is contained in the quarterly Schedule of Classes, available for purchase at the Students' Store several weeks before the beginning of each term. To obtain a copy by mail, write to ASUCLA Students' Store, 308 Westwood Plaza, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1645, Attn: Mail Out. Include a check or money order for $4.50 payable to ASUCLA.

Registration consists of paying fees and enrolling in classes. The UCLA Billing Statement, mailed monthly to your UCLA mailing address by the Student Accounting Office, is used to pay registration fees and other University charges. Enrollment in classes is completed through URSA (University Records System Access). You must complete both processes by the established deadlines to be officially registered and enrolled for the term.

Payment is required of all eligible students by the applicable deadlines. Payments may be mailed or deposited in the Main Cashier's Drop Slot (1125 Murphy Hall). Payments submitted after the published deadline must be made in person at 1125 Murphy Hall and will be assessed an additional $50 late payment fee. Students on financial aid may be eligible for a waiver of the $50 fee if funds are delayed by the University.

Deadline Dates

Registration Fee Payment Deadlines:

September 20 for Fall Quarter 1994
December 20 for Winter Quarter 1995
March 20 for Spring Quarter 1995

Classes Dropped for Failure to Pay Registration Fees:

October 7 for Fall Quarter 1994
January 13 for Winter Quarter 1995
April 7 for Spring Quarter 1995

Mandatory Medical Insurance Requirement

UCLA requires, as a condition of registration, that all graduate students and all international students on nonimmigrant visas have adequate medical insurance coverage during all periods of enrollment.

UCLA offers a student Medical Insurance Plan (MIP) which fulfills the requirement. For graduate students the MIP fee is included each term in the amount due on the UCLA Billing Statement. This is the only method by which MIP can be purchased.

If you decide to waive out of MIP because you have adequate private medical insurance, you must complete the Medical Insurance Waiver Request included each term with the UCLA Billing Statement and submit the form when you pay your registration fees.

An adequate private medical insurance plan must provide all of the following minimum benefits:

(1) A minimum of $50,000 in "Lifetime Maximum" benefits.

(2) At least 75 percent of the cost for eligible medical expenses, with no more than a 25 percent out-of-pocket cost to you (patient copayment).

(3) A claims representative located in the U.S. In addition, you must be provided with an identification card (or reasonable alternative) written in English, which includes payment provisions listed in U.S. dollars and the U.S. telephone number of the U.S. claims representative.

If your private medical insurance plan does not meet all of the above requirements, you must purchase MIP. For further information on MIP or adequate medical insurance requirements, call the Student Health Service Insurance Office at (310) 825-1856.

Enrollment in Classes

The quarterly Schedule of Classes contains up-to-date listings of class times, meeting rooms, instructors, and all information necessary for enrolling in classes. Using the Schedule and with the aid of academic counseling from your school or college advisers, you can assemble a program of courses.

University Records System Access (URSA)

URSA allows you to process your class enrollment, to obtain course confirmation (including day/time, location, examination code, instructor name), UCLA grades for any completed term, GPA, completed units, and outstanding holds (i.e., restrictions from receiving services), to confirm registration fee payment and Registration Card mailing, to update or review selected student information ("degree expected term," telephone number, residence hall address, privacy release, ethnic-based mailing option, and ethnic background), and to change the security code used to access URSA.

URSA is operational Monday through Saturday from 5 a.m. to midnight, including holidays. You may access the system for grades, GPA, units, and holds information for up to 10 years after your graduation or your last term of attendance. If you have outstanding holds, you will be informed at the beginning of your call.

Telephone Enrollment

By using URSA, you can enroll in classes, add, drop, or exchange classes/sections, put yourself on the wait list for a class, add a class using a PTE Authorization Number, change the grading basis for a class (i.e., Satisfactory/Unsatisfactory), obtain a reading of your Study List, check your wait-list position, and obtain instructor names for all courses. You enroll during your assigned appointment periods, which you also obtain by calling URSA. Consult the Schedule of Classes for full enrollment details.

In-Person Enrollment

For classes that require written approval or specialized processing, you may enroll at computer terminals at 1113 Murphy Hall Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Study Lists

At 5 p.m. on Friday of the second week of instruction the Study List of enrolled courses becomes "official," and all wait lists are eliminated. You should obtain a reading of your Study List through URSA after all enrollment transactions. You are responsible for all courses and the grading basis as listed on URSA, and you cannot receive credit for courses not listed. Errors or omissions should be corrected before your academic dean's deadline for changes by petition. Unapproved withdrawal from or neglect of a course entered on the Study List will result in a failing grade.

Beginning with the third week of instruction, changes to your Official Study List require an Enrollment Petition which is available for purchase in the school supplies section at any ASUCLA Students' Store or at your department office. Approval signatures are required before processing.

Change of Major

Continuing graduate students may petition for a change of major after discussing plans with the new department. Forms for this purpose are available from the departments and should be filed with the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs, 1255 Murphy Hall. Deadlines are generally the same as those for the graduate admissions procedure, but you should consult with the adviser in the new program before filing an application.

Full-Time Graduate Program

Three courses (or 12 units) per term are considered the normal enrollment for graduate students and are required for students not in doctoral candidacy to be counted for full-time standing in the University's official enrollment records. Therefore, you will be directed by your department to enroll full time whenever possible.

Throughout their appointments, teaching assistants are required to be registered and enrolled in at least eight quarter units and graduate student researchers in at least 12 quarter units. Those assistants/researchers who take a leave of absence, or withdraw, terminate their appointments. Course 375 for teaching assistants and independent studies at the 500 level for graduate student researchers may be included in reaching the eight- or 12-unit load.

Graduate students holding fellowships must be enrolled in at least eight units, both before and after advancement to candidacy. The eight-unit minimum required per term may include, among others, the 500 series (individual study or research).

Veterans are required to make normal progress toward the degree as stated by the major department. Information on Department of Veterans Affairs regulations is available from Academic Record Services, 1134 Murphy Hall.

Continuous Registration

Graduate students are normally required to register in all three terms of each academic year, including the term in which their degrees or certificates are to be awarded. If you are granted a formal leave of absence or are eligible to pay the filing fee for a degree (see next column), you are exempt from this requirement. You must be registered in order to receive financial aid, use University facilities, or take any University examination except the master's comprehensive or doctoral final oral examination.

If you fail to register or to file for an official leave of absence by the end of the second week of instruction, you are assumed to have withdrawn from UCLA. You will then have to reapply and compete for readmission with all other graduate applicants if you wish to return to graduate study at UCLA.

Continuing graduate students studying or doing research outside California throughout a term may pay half the registration fee, plus all other fees in full. Petitions for the reduced fee are available from your department.

Employment and Degree Progress

Policy governing the employment of graduate students considers you primarily as a student rather than an employee and emphasizes your need to make timely progress toward your degree. You are limited to a maximum of 12 quarters of appointment in academic apprentice teaching titles and a maximum of 18 quarters in a combination of academic apprentice teaching and research titles. Appointment to any title limits your employment maximum to 50 percent time during the academic year.

University policy prohibits the employment of graduate students in academic titles. This policy was established to ensure that you (1) make timely progress toward your degree, (2) not be subject to the conflicting roles of student and faculty member, and (3) not be involved in the instruction of your peers.

Registration in the Final Term for Award of the Degree

(1) You must register in the final term in which the degree is to be conferred if you are (a) completing coursework, (b) using library or other University facilities, (c) taking up faculty time other than for a final reading of the thesis or dissertation or to administer the comprehensive or final examination, (d) a doctoral student and were not registered the term immediately preceding the term in which your dissertation is filed, or (e) receiving University funds in the form of a fellowship or appointment as a teaching assistant, reader, or graduate student researcher. If you were not continuously registered or on leave of absence and you are required to register to receive your degree, you must apply for readmission.

(2) If only the thesis or dissertation and/or comprehensive or final examination remain to be completed in your final term, you may be eligible to pay the filing fee instead of registering (see below).

(3) If you were registered in the preceding term and have completed all degree requirements, including final examinations and filing your thesis/dissertation, during the interval between terms and before the first day of instruction, you are not required to register (or pay the filing fee) to receive your degree at the end of the following term.

The Filing Fee

If you have completed all requirements for a degree except filing the thesis or dissertation and/or taking the master's comprehensive or doctoral final oral examination, you may be eligible to pay a filing fee of half the registration fee instead of registering and paying all required fees. Applications are available from the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs, 1255 Murphy Hall. For eligibility conditions and further information on the filing fee and registration in the final term, please consult Standards and Procedures for Graduate Study at UCLA, available in 1255 Murphy Hall or in individual departments.

Health Evaluation

New students enrolling in the School of Dentistry, Education and Information Studies, Medicine, Nursing, or Social Welfare must complete and return to the Student Health Service the Health Evaluation forms provided by their departments. For clearance information, call (310) 825-0861.

Graduate Fees and Financial Support

Fees

Although the exact cost of attending UCLA will vary according to your academic program, personal habits, tastes, and financial resources, there are some fees that all UCLA students must pay. Each entering and readmitted student is required to submit a Statement of Legal Residence to the Registrar's Office. Legal residents of California are not required to pay tuition at the University. Students classified as nonresidents must pay tuition of $2,566 per term (for a full definition of residence and nonresidence, see the Appendix of this catalog).

At the time of registration each term, all graduate students (except those in the Schools of Dentistry, Law, Management M.B.A. program, and Medicine) must pay the following fixed fees. Students in those schools should refer to their individual school announcements for explanation of fees per term. Fees for Fall Quarter 1994 are current as of publication date but are subject to change without notice by The Regents.

Term Expenses, Fall 1994

University registration fee	$ 237.00
Educational fee	1,120.00
Ackerman Student Union fee	2.50
Graduate Students Association fee	5.50
Wooden Recreation Center fee	11.00
Mandatory medical insurance	180.00
Total for California residents	$1,556.00
Nonresident tuition fee	$2,566.00
Total for nonresidents	$4,122.00

Other Fees

Miscellaneous fees charged to UCLA graduate students include a $50 charge for late payment of registration fees (after the fee deadline) or late filing of the Study List (after Friday of the second week of classes); $25 for advancement to doctoral candidacy; a $20 late fee if the UCLA Billing Statement has an unpaid balance in excess of $25; and $5 or less for most petitions and other special requests. A $60 fine will be assessed if any check for registration fee payment is returned by a bank (i.e., stopped payment, insufficient funds, etc.). A complete list of fees may be found in the Schedule of Classes.

Fee Refunds

Students who formally withdraw from the University during the first five weeks of instruction or take an approved leave of absence by the end of the second week of classes may receive partial refunds of fees. For the refund schedule and more information, see "Withdrawal" in Chapter 4 of this catalog or consult the Schedule of Classes for policy details and specific refund dates for each term.

Nonresident Tuition Fellowships

A limited number of nonresident tuition fellowships are awarded each year to graduate students with distinguished academic records. Details of eligibility are available from your department.

Living Expenses

Printed below are the estimated yearly budgets for graduate California residents. Students admitted in fall 1994 to the D.D.S., J.D., M.B.A., and M.D. degree programs must add the $2,000 professional school fee, and nonresidents must add the $7,699 annual tuition fee to their total expenses for an accurate estimate. Expenses cover the three regular session terms of the 1994-95 academic year and do not include Summer Sessions. (Budgets for the Schools of Medicine, Dentistry, and Nursing are higher, reflecting the expense of specialized books and supplies; figures are available from your health professions counselor.) The budgets are designed to serve as a guide and are subject to change.

Estimated Annual Budgets for Graduate California Residents

	Commuter, Living in Parents' Home	Living in UCLA Residence Hall, Co-Op, Sorority, or Fraternity	Living in Off-Campus Apartment or House
University fees	$ 4,396	$ 4,396	$ 4,396

Transportation	2,475	1,660	2,675
Personal	—	1,800	885
Total budget	$10,961	$14,946	$16,941

For more information on housing, see Chapter 1 or contact the UCLA Community Housing Office, 350 De Neve Drive (310-825-4491).

Financial Support

Information:
 Graduate Student Support
 (310) 825-3521

As a major center for graduate study, UCLA offers its qualified graduate students substantial support through several types of financial assistance.

Information on available funding for entering students is included in the Application for Graduate Admission. Readmitted students should also request the Application for Graduate Admission, and continuing graduate students should complete the Fellowship and Assistantship Application for Continuing Students. Completed applications must be returned by January 9. (Some departments have earlier deadlines; consult the application packet for details.)

UCLA Graduate Student Support, a booklet describing the full range of financial assistance available, is published annually and mailed to continuing students by the Graduate Division. Contact your department for more detailed information.

Fellowships

The University administers several awards on the basis of scholarly achievement. Most awards are available in open competition, though some are restricted to new students or to specific departments. Some fellowship and scholarship awards are made from University funds; others are made from endowment funds held in trust by the University and given by interested friends and alumni. Still others come from annual donations by educational foundations, industry, government, and individual benefactors.

Most fellowship, traineeship, and grant awards are for one academic year (three terms). Fellowships and grants provide stipends in varying amounts for qualified students. Nonresident tuition fellowships cover the tuition, for periods of one to three terms, of selected graduate students who are not California residents.

Assistantships

Academic apprenticeships train qualified students for careers in teaching and research, and compensate them for their services. Teaching assistantships provide experience in teaching undergraduates, with faculty supervision. (Teaching assistants, associates, and fellows are eligible to receive partial payment at the beginning of the term in the form of an interest-free advance loan check. Interested students should apply to their departments.) Graduate student researcher appointments give students experience working on faculty-supervised research projects.

In-Candidacy Fee Offset Grant Program

The In-Candidacy Fee Offset Grant Program pays a portion of the educational fee for eligible doctoral students who have been officially advanced to candidacy. This program is described in detail in Standards and Procedures for Graduate Study at UCLA, available in 1255 Murphy Hall or in individual departments.

Graduate Affirmative Action Awards

Information:
Graduate Affirmative Affairs Office
(310) 206-1280

These programs were established to increase the graduate enrollment and retention of students from groups which have traditionally been underrepresented in graduate education. These groups include American Indians, blacks/African Americans, Chicanos/Mexican Americans, Latinos/Hispanics, Pilipino Americans, and Puerto Ricans. In addition, women in the sciences and engineering, Asian American men in the arts, humanities, and social sciences, and Asian American women in all areas are eligible for many of these awards.

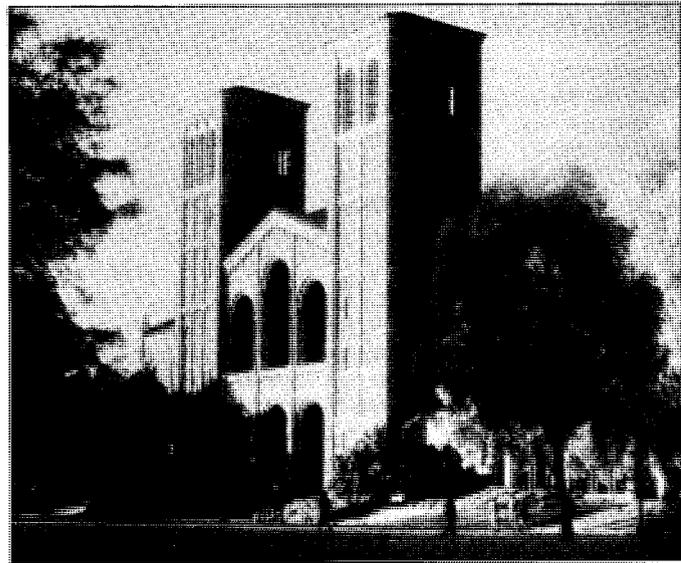

As indicated below, the Graduate Division offers one need-based financial aid program (GAP) and several fellowships to underrepresented students. Students may apply for both financial aid and fellowships simultaneously. All applicants for fellowships must be U.S. residents. For more information on these programs and specific eligibility requirements for each fellowship, contact the Graduate Affirmative Affairs Office, 1248 Murphy Hall (310-206-1280).

(1) Project 88 — Funded jointly by the UCLA Office of the Chancellor, the Graduate Division, and participating departments and schools, this program awards four-year fellowships on a competitive basis to historically underrepresented students (American Indian/Alaskan native, black/African American, Chicano/Mexican American, Pilipino, and Puerto Rican) pursuing doctoral degrees. Asian American students pursuing doctoral degrees in the arts, humanities, and social sciences are also eligible.

(2) Eugene Cota-Robles Fellowship — This program is funded by the University of California Office of the President for entering Ph.D. students pursuing careers in research and teaching. All applicants must be U.S. citizens or permanent residents who are American Indian/Alaskan native, black/African American, Chicano/Mexican American, Latino/Hispanic, Pilipino, Asian American women (in all disciplines), and Asian American men in the social sciences and humanities. In addition, women in the physical and life sciences and engineering may apply regardless of ethnicity.

(3) Graduate Opportunity Fellowship Program (GOFPP) — Funded by the University of California, this program provides fellowships to students from groups traditionally underrepresented in graduate programs and to women in fields such as engineering and the physical and life sciences.

(4) Dorothy Danforth Compton Dissertation-Year Fellowship Program — Funded by the Danforth Foundation, this program provides a one-year fellowship to support and encourage underrepresented students to complete the dissertation requirements for the Ph.D. degree. Students must be advanced to candidacy and within 12 months of completing all requirements for the Ph.D. The award provides a stipend, registration fees, and a research allowance.

(5) Research Assistantship/Mentorship Program — Funded by the University of California Office of the President, this program provides research assistantships for underrepresented doctoral students and is designed to encourage a close mentoring relationship between students and faculty members and to enhance research skills. The award provides registration fees, and students are paid a maximum salary of $12,500 for the academic year.

(6) Dissertation-Year Fellowship Program — Funded by the University of California Office of the President, this program supports and encourages University of California underrepresented graduate students to complete the dissertation requirements for the Ph.D. degree and to enhance their qualifications as candidates for faculty teaching and research. The award provides a stipend, registration fees (including mandatory health insurance), and a research allowance.

(7) Graduate Advancement Program (GAP) — Awards are made on the basis of need as demonstrated by standard University financial aid criteria. These awards differ from conventional financial aid allocations in that GAP students receive a partial registration fee grant (nonresident tuition is not paid under this program) and a combination of loans and/or work-study.

Awards Based on Financial Need

Because the cost of a graduate education may present a financial hardship, students who require assistance in meeting educational costs are encouraged to apply for aid based on their financial need. Need is defined as the difference between allowable school-related expenses and your financial resources. Financial aid applicants must file the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA).

Financial aid awards include work-study and low-interest loans. Students are usually awarded a financial aid "package" which is a combination of these forms of assistance. Further information is available from the Financial Aid Office, A129J Murphy Hall.

Special Programs and Training

UCLA ACCESS to Programs in Molecular and Cellular Life Sciences

The life and basic biomedical science departments at UCLA offer a mechanism for a combined recruitment, admission, and first-year program that provides Ph.D. students in the molecular and cellular life sciences with maximal choice and flexibility in selecting a research specialization. Through UCLA ACCESS, you are able to select research projects from 165 faculty mentors according to changing perceptions, interests, and goals without regard to traditional departmental boundaries. The first year of each degree program has a common curriculum and advising structure.

UCLA ACCESS is used to recruit and admit students to the following 11 Ph.D. programs: Biochemistry, Biology, Microbiology and Molecular Genetics, Molecular Biology, and Physiological Science in the College of Letters and Science; Anatomy and Cell Biology, Biological Chemistry, Experimental Pathology, Microbiology and Immunology, Pharmacology, and Physiology in the School of Medicine. For specific information, refer to the individual department listings in Chapters 5 and 15.

Admission

Applicants apply to UCLA ACCESS to Programs in Molecular and Cellular Life Sciences rather than to an individual department and must have completed an undergraduate major in a life or physical sciences discipline with superior scholastic achievement. You should have preparation in physics, biology, and chemistry, as well as specialized courses within the major which may include cell biology, neurobiology, immunology, structural or computational biology, microbiology, virology, plant molecular biology, developmental biology, gene expression, biochemistry, molecular biology, or the molecular basis of disease. In certain cases, background deficiencies may be remedied concurrently with graduate studies if recommended by the ACCESS advising committee. In addition to the UCLA Application for Graduate Admission, you should submit your scores on the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) General Test and the Subject Test in either Biology, Chemistry, Biochemistry, or Cell and Molecular Biology, and three letters of recommendation from individuals who can provide direct knowledge of your academic record and potential for superior achievement in independent research. Admission is limited to Fall Quarter.

Applications and further information are available from the Program Coordinator, UCLA ACCESS to Programs in Molecular and Cellular Life Sciences, 168 MBI, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1570 (310-206-5280).

First-Year Course Requirements

Individual requirements vary based on your background and scientific interest and are determined by your advising committee. In general a formal course of study consists of three lecture courses, three laboratory rotations, and two seminar courses. In addition, you participate in related activities on an informal basis.

Lecture Courses — Three survey courses to be selected from a list of approved courses maintained in the program office are required (one in molecular biology, one in cellular biology, molecular genetics, or microbial pathogenesis, and one specialized survey course).

Seminar Courses — You must enroll in two seminars during your first three terms to read and report on current scientific research literature.

Laboratory Rotations — During your first nine months in residence, you rotate for one term each through three laboratories selected from the UCLA ACCESS faculty list. You normally enroll in course 596 for a minimum of four units of credit for each rotation.

Other Activities — You are encouraged to attend the weekly one-hour ACCESS meeting during Fall and Winter Quarters, which features informal presentations by two professors per week. Seminars in scientific ethics and computer literacy are also required.

Teaching Experience — All departments participating in UCLA ACCESS consider teaching experience to be an integral part of the graduate program. You are required to complete two terms of teaching beginning in your second year. You are also required to complete a course, administered through the program, on approaches and methods for successful teaching.

Transfer to the Degree-Granting Program

You are admitted to UCLA graduate standing through UCLA ACCESS on a provisional basis for four terms. At the end of Spring Quarter, your academic progress is evaluated by your advising committee. If you receive a satisfactory evaluation, you select a faculty mentor as your doctoral committee chair. With concurrence of your mentor and the degree-granting program, you then transfer from UCLA ACCESS to that program for the remainder of your Ph.D. studies.

In the event you are unable to identify a suitable mentor and program by the end of your first year, one additional laboratory rotation approved by your advising committee will be available during the summer quarter. If you are unable to arrange for a laboratory after four rotations, you will be recommended for termination of graduate study or given the opportunity to arrange for a terminal master's degree through one of the participating or affiliated programs.

Graduate Cross-Enrollment Program with USC

As an integral part of an Academic Resource Sharing program linking UCLA with the University of Southern California, the Graduate Cross-Enrollment Program makes possible graduate student exchanges in many departments. The program is limited to specialized courses which would not otherwise be available to UCLA students and is in effect only during the regular academic year (not in summer).

If you have completed at least one term of graduate study at UCLA, are in good academic standing, and have obtained the necessary approvals, you may enroll in a 501 course through your department. When you have completed the course at USC, your grade will be forwarded to UCLA to be recorded on your transcript (S/U grading only). Only eight units of cross-enrollment courses may be applied toward requirements for the master's degree, and these courses may not be used to satisfy the five-graduate-course requirement. Applications, available from the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs, 1255 Murphy Hall, should be completed before the start of the term in which the course is offered.

Intercampus Exchange Program

If you have completed one term of graduate study at any campus of the University and are in good academic standing, you may attend another campus as an Intercampus Exchange Graduate Student with the approval of your department chair, the chair of the department or group in which you wish to study at the host campus, and the dean of the Graduate Division at both the home and host campuses. The privilege should be used only by students whose graduate study may be enhanced by work with certain faculty or use of facilities and resources accessible only at another campus.

Although you are considered to be in residence at your home campus, as an Intercampus Exchange Student you have library, health service, and recreation center privileges at the host campus. Grades are transferred to your home campus and entered on your official record.

Applications are available from the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs, and should be filed at least four weeks before the beginning of the term in which you expect to enter the program. The program is available only during the regular academic year (not in summer).

Graduate students may also take advantage of the Education Abroad Program described in Chapter 1 of this catalog.

Postdoctoral Fellows and Visiting Scholars

The University makes opportunities and facilities available to qualified scholars — those holding doctoral degrees or foreign equivalents — to continue advanced study and research under faculty guidance.

A postdoctoral fellow is one who (1) has been awarded a doctoral degree or the foreign equivalent where at least three years of undergraduate study are prerequisite to admission to the graduate program,

(2) has been awarded a fellowship, traineeship, or equivalent support (including academic appointments such as postgraduate researcher) for studies at the postdoctoral level, and (3) is pursuing a program of research and training under the direction of a faculty member with the approval of the department or research unit, and by the dean of the Graduate Division. Enrollment as a postdoctoral fellow is normally for a period of one to three years and is limited to a period not to exceed five years. Interested candidates should make advance arrangements with the relevant department or research unit.

The same opportunities are made available to visiting scholars — senior scholars and distinguished visitors holding doctoral degrees or foreign equivalents — who wish to pursue independent research or advanced study at UCLA, working with a colleague for a limited time, normally no more than one year. Visiting scholars are distinguished from postdoctoral fellows in that they are not in training under faculty supervision but rather are themselves peers of our faculty, visiting from other universities and institutions. Visiting scholars ordinarily have adequate support funds from sources outside the University.

Further information on both postdoctoral fellows and visiting scholars is available from Student and Academic Affairs, 1255 Murphy Hall.

General Policies and Regulations

Standards of Scholarship

To maintain satisfactory progress toward a graduate degree, UCLA requires at least a B (3.0) average in all courses taken in graduate standing at any campus of the University and in all courses applied toward advanced degrees. This standard applies to all graduate students, including candidates in certificate programs. In courses graded on an S/U basis, the grade of S (Satisfactory) is awarded for work which would otherwise receive a B or better. Grades S and U are not included in calculating grade-point averages.

Scholarship Probation

You are on probation and are subject to dismissal if your cumulative average in all work attempted in graduate standing falls below a B (3.0) or if work in any two consecutive terms falls below a B average. The dean of the Graduate Division, in consultation with your department, determines your eligibility to continue graduate study in probationary status. If you are allowed to continue, you must make timely progress toward improving your grade-point average.

Disqualification and Appeal

If you are subject to disqualification for reasons other than failure to maintain the minimum grade-point average, you will have your records reviewed by the Graduate Division, in consultation with the graduate adviser. If disqualification results, you may submit a written appeal to the dean of the Graduate Division for reconsideration. Contact Student and Academic Affairs, 1255 Murphy Hall, for specific details on how to submit an appeal.

Appeals will be considered only if based on appropriate cause such as (1) procedural error, (2) judgments based on nonacademic criteria, (3) personal bias, or (4) specific mitigating circumstances contributing to performance. Alleged errors in academic judgment or evaluation are not considered appropriate causes for appeal.

In cases of appropriate cause, the dean of the Graduate Division refers the appeal to the Graduate Council's Committee on Degree Programs. You are required to submit a written statement on the basis for your appeal and are entitled to a personal appearance before the committee. After obtaining information on the matter from any appropriate person or office, the committee makes a recommendation to the dean of the Graduate Division, who makes the final decision. In reporting the decision, the committee includes the basis for the decision, its effective date, and any specific recommendations.

Graduate Student Complaints

Because of the separation of functions within the University, students are sometimes uncertain where they should direct their complaints. The following information may be helpful.

If you have complaints of a scholastic or professional nature involving faculty, you should take them up with the faculty member concerned or, if that is not feasible, with the chair of the department. If the department as a whole is involved, you should take the matter to the appropriate divisional or school dean. Should the issue not be resolved at that level, you may appeal to the dean of the Graduate Division, 1237 Murphy Hall.

Complaints of misconduct against individual students should be made at the Office of the Dean of Students, 1206 Murphy Hall. Complaints of misconduct against officially recognized student organizations may be made at the Center for Student Programming, 337 Plaza Building, or with the Office of the Dean of Students, 1206 Murphy Hall.

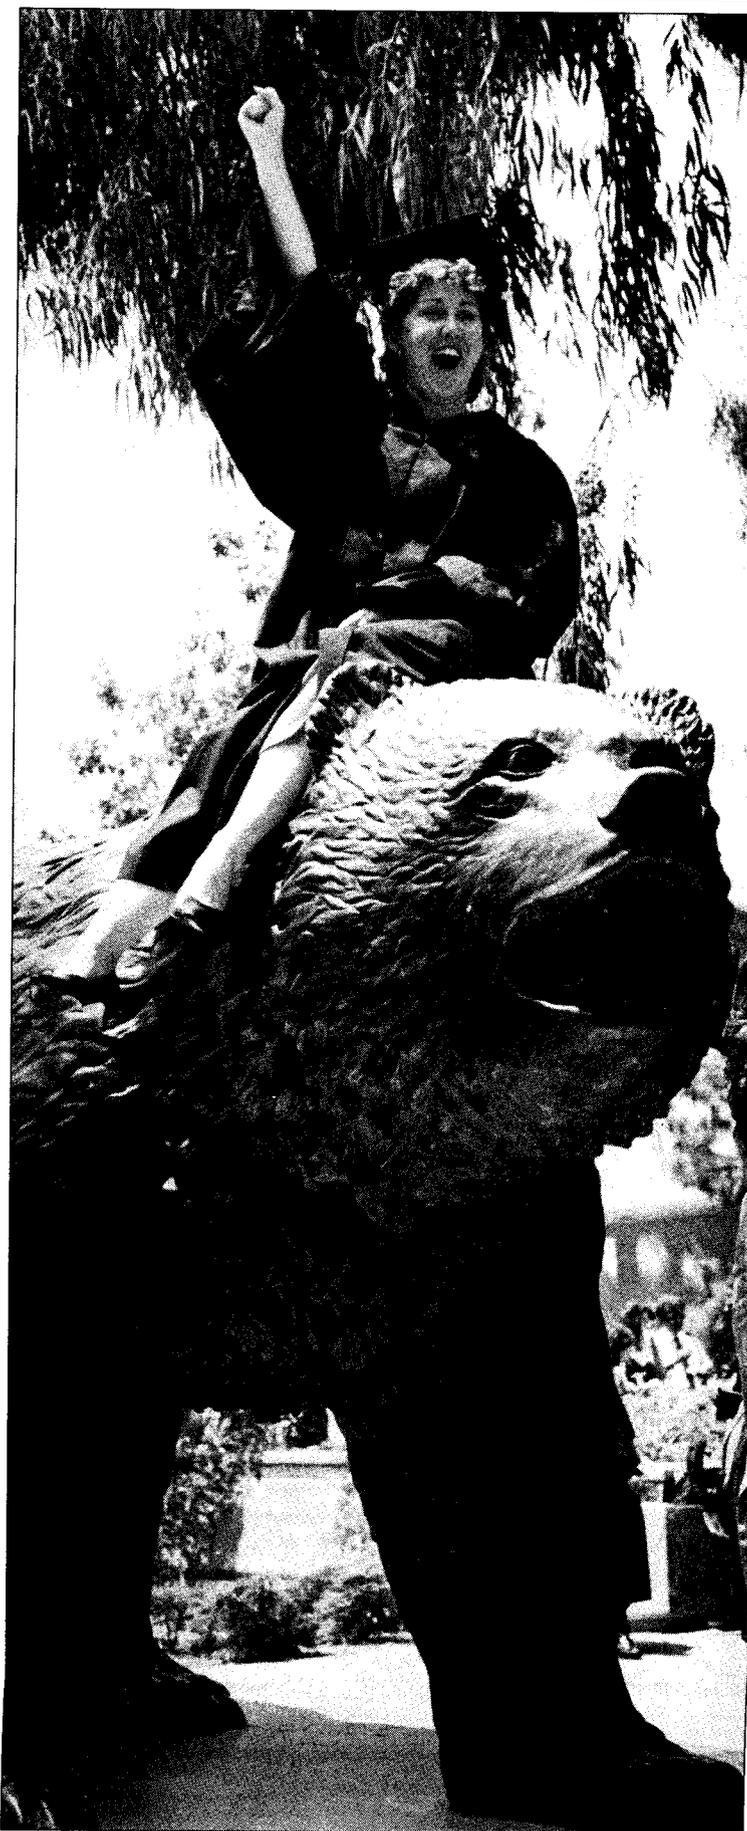

Complaints concerning alleged violation of the policies and regulations governing graduate study should be made to the dean or associate dean of the Graduate Division, 1237 Murphy Hall.

Complaints from teaching assistants about workloads and evaluations are governed by the provisions of the Teaching Assistant Grievance Procedures, which are spelled out in detail in the Academic Apprentice Personnel Manual. Copies are available from departments and from Graduate Student Support, 1252 Murphy Hall.

Complaints about a violation of University policy regarding the conduct of one or more faculty members should be handled as described in "Nondiscrimination," "Harassment," and "Faculty Code of Conduct" in the Appendix.

Units and Grading Policy

UCLA students are responsible for understanding the grading policies and regulations established by the Academic Senate. Should any semantic variations exist between explanations in this catalog and regulations in the Manual of the Academic Senate, the manual will prevail in all cases. Copies of the Senate manual are available for your review in the Academic Senate Office, 3125 Murphy Hall.

Grades

Instructors are required to assign a final grade for each student registered in a course. The following grades are used to report the quality of a student's work at UCLA:

Undergraduate Students

A+ = Extraordinary
 A = Superior
 B = Good
 C = Fair
 D = Poor
 F = Failure
 P = Passed (achievement at grade C level or better)
 NP = Not Passed
 I = Incomplete
 IP = In Progress
 DR = Deferred Report

Graduate Students

A = Superior Achievement
 B = Satisfactorily demonstrates potential for professional achievement
 C = Passed but work does not indicate potential for professional achievement
 F = Failure
 S = Satisfactory (achievement at grade B level or better)
 U = Unsatisfactory
 I = Incomplete
 IP = In Progress
 DR = Deferred Report

For Undergraduate Students — The grades A, B, C, and D may be modified by a plus (+) or minus (–) suffix, to either raise or lower your grade-point average. The A+ grade will not raise your grade-point average because it carries the same number of grade points as the A grade. The grades A, B, C, and P denote satisfactory progress toward the bachelor's degree, but a D grade must be offset by higher grades in the same term for you to remain in good academic standing. An F grade yields no unit or course credit.

For Graduate Students — The grades A, B, and C may be modified by a plus or minus suffix. The grades A, B, and S denote satisfactory progress toward the degree, but a C grade must be offset by higher grades in the same term for you to remain in good academic standing. Courses in which a C grade is received, however, may be applied toward graduate degrees.

The Schools of Dentistry, Medicine, and Law maintain their own grading codes. If you are interested in programs in any of these schools, consult the appropriate school announcement.

Grade Points

In computing scholarship standing, a course counts as four quarter units. Partial or multiple courses are counted proportionally (e.g., one-half course is equal to two units).

Grade points per unit are assigned by the Registrar as follows:

A+ = 4.0	C+ = 2.3
A = 4.0	C = 2.0
A– = 3.7	C– = 1.7
B+ = 3.3	D+ = 1.3
B = 3.0	D = 1.0

F, NP, U = 0

Courses in which you receive a P or S grade may count toward satisfaction of degree requirements, but these grades, as well as DR, I, IP, and NR, are disregarded in determining your grade-point average. (If an I grade is later removed and a letter grade assigned, units and grade points are included in subsequent grade-point averages.) NR indicates that no grade was received from the instructor.

Computing Your Grade-Point Average

Your grade-point average, or GPA, is determined by dividing the number of grade points earned by the number of units attempted. The number of grade points earned for a course equals the number of grade points assigned times the number of course units. For example, suppose you take three four-unit courses and receive grades of A–, B–, and C+.

Grade Points × Course Units = Total Grade Points
A– = 3.7	4	14.8
B– = 2.7	4	10.8
C+ = 2.3	4	9.2
	12	34.8

To determine your GPA for the term, divide the total grade points earned (34.8) by the total course units attempted (12). Your GPA is 2.9.

For satisfactory standing, undergraduate students must maintain a C average (2.0 GPA) and graduate students a B average (3.0 GPA) in all courses taken at any campus of the University (except UCLA Extension).

Only grades earned in regular session or Summer Sessions at any UC campus and grades earned by Letters and Science students in UCLA Extension courses prefixed by XLC are computed in the UCLA grade-point average. Grades earned at another institution or in UCLA Extension courses other than those prefixed by XLC do not affect your GPA.

Other schools and agencies may calculate grade-point averages differently from the University when evaluating your records for admission to graduate and professional school programs. You should contact them about their policies in this regard.

Class Standing

Undergraduate classification is determined by the number of units completed:

Classification	Completed Units
Freshman	0 - 44.9
Sophomore	45 - 89.9
Senior	135 or more

In all campus units except the School of Engineering and Applied Science, you are required to earn a minimum of 180 units from all college-level coursework for the bachelor's degree at UCLA. A maximum of 208 units is allowed in the School of the Arts, School of Nursing, and School of Theater, Film, and Television; in the College of Letters and Science a maximum of 216 units (228 for double majors and special programs) is allowed. In the School of Engineering and Applied Science, the minimum units allowed are between 180 and 200 (depending on the program); 213 maximum units are allowed. If you exceed the maximum, you may not be allowed to continue, except in rare cases approved by your college or school. See the degree requirements under each college and school for further details.

Graduate classification is based on your degree objective and whether or not you are advanced to candidacy for a doctorate.

Passed/Not Passed (P/NP) Grades

Undergraduate students in good standing who are enrolled in at least 12 units (14 in the School of Engineering and Applied Science) may take certain courses on a Passed/Not Passed basis.

By alleviating grading pressures, this option allows you to explore areas in which you have little or no previous experience. The grade P is assigned for a letter grade of C or better. Units earned this way count toward satisfaction of degree requirements but do not affect your GPA. You will receive neither units nor course credit for an NP grade.

You may enroll in one course each term on a P/NP basis (two courses if you have not elected the P/NP option in the preceding term). You may not elect this option for Summer Sessions courses without an approved petition. Your department or school may require that you take some or all courses in your major for a letter grade. Certain other courses or programs may also be exempt from the P/NP option; consult your college or school for details.

You may make program changes to or from P/NP grading through the sixth week of instruction (see the Schedule of Classes Calendar for exact dates); changes after the first two weeks of class require a petition (available for purchase in the school supplies section at any ASUCLA Students' Store).

Certain undergraduate courses are offered only on a Passed/Not Passed basis and are designated PN in the Schedule of Classes.

Satisfactory/Unsatisfactory (S/U) Grades

Graduate students in good standing (minimum 3.0 GPA) may enroll for S/U grading in one graduate or upper division course outside the major field each term, in addition to any courses offered only on an S/U grading basis within the major. The grade S is assigned for a letter grade of B or better, but units earned in this manner will not be counted in computing the GPA. You will receive neither units nor degree credit for a U grade. You may not elect the S/U option for Summer Sessions courses without an approved petition.

Courses taken on an S/U basis outside the major, and 500-series courses within the major, are applicable toward degree and/or academic residency requirements if so approved. Interdepartmental majors may not apply S/U courses to degree requirements, except for 500-series courses. Program changes to or from S/U grading may be made through the tenth week of instruction (see the Schedule of Classes Calendar); changes after the first two weeks of class require a petition (available for purchase in the school supplies section at any ASUCLA Students' Store).

Certain graduate courses are offered only on a Satisfactory/Unsatisfactory basis and are designated SU in the Schedule of Classes.

Incomplete (I) Grades

Once an I grade is assigned, it remains on your transcript along with the passing grade you may later receive for the course. Your instructor may assign the I grade when your work is of passing quality but is incomplete for a good cause (i.e., illness or other serious problems). It is your responsibility to discuss with the instructor the possibility of receiving an I grade as opposed to a nonpassing grade.

If an I grade is assigned, you may receive unit credit and grade points by satisfactorily completing the coursework as specified by the instructor. Do not reenroll in the course; if you do, it will be recorded twice on your transcript. If the work is not completed by the end of the next full term in residence, the I grade will lapse to an F, NP, or U as appropriate. Your college or school may extend this deadline in unusual cases (not applicable to graduate students).

Consult the Schedule of Classes for procedure instructions.

In Progress (IP) Grades

For certain courses extending over more than one term (identified by T1, T2, T3, or T4 in the Schedule of Classes, evaluation of student performance is deferred until the end of the final term of the course. Provisional grades of IP are assigned in the intervening term(s) and are replaced with the final grade when you complete the full sequence. The school or college faculty or the Graduate Council will determine credit if you do not complete the full sequence and petition for partial credit.

Deferred Report (DR) Grades

You may receive a DR grade when the instructor believes your work to be complete but cannot assign a grade because of disciplinary proceedings or other problems. If you are given a disciplinary DR grade, the Office of the Dean of Students will assist you in resolving the problem. For graduate students, the dean of the Graduate Division will set a deadline by which the DR will lapse to an F if the problem is not resolved and a grade assigned. The DR will be changed to a grade, or perhaps to an Incomplete, when the instructor provides written confirmation that you have resolved the situation. The DR grade is not included in determining your grade-point average.

Repetition of Courses

Certain courses, as noted in their course descriptions, may be repeated for credit. Other courses taken at the University (except UCLA Extension) may be repeated only according to the following guidelines:

- (1) To improve your grade-point average, you may repeat only those courses in which you receive a grade of C- or lower; NP or U grades may be repeated to gain unit credit. Courses in which you received a letter grade may not be repeated on a P/NP or S/U basis. Courses originally taken on a P/NP or S/U basis may be repeated either on the same basis or for a letter grade.
- (2) Repetition of a course more than once requires the approval of your college or school or the dean of the Graduate Division, and is granted only under extraordinary circumstances.
- (3) Degree credit for a course will be given only once, but the grade assigned each time you take the course will be permanently recorded on your transcript.
- (4) For undergraduates who repeat a total of 16 units or less, only the most recently earned letter grades and grade points will be computed in the grade-point average. After repeating 16 units, however, your GPA will be based on all letter grades assigned and total units attempted.
- (5) For graduate students, all courses in which a letter grade is given, including repeated courses, will be used in computing the grade-point average.

Correction of Grades

All grades except DR, I, and IP are final when filed by the instructor in the end-of-term course report. Thereafter, a grade change may be made only in case of a clerical or procedural error or other unusual circumstances. No grade may be revised by reexamination or, with the exception of the I and IP grades, by completing additional work. If you are dissatisfied with a grade, you should review your work with the instructor and receive an explanation of the grade assigned. All grade changes are recorded on your transcript. See the Appendix for further details and procedures for appealing grades.

Credit by Examination

Students with high scholastic standing may earn credit for regular University courses by taking examinations rather than enrolling in the courses. This is accomplished by establishing, with a UCLA faculty member, an individual plan of study which may include oral and written work in addition to other requirements. To be eligible for this privilege, undergraduate students must have completed a minimum of 12 units at UCLA. Graduate students must be registered at the time of the examination and are limited to a maximum of three courses taken in this manner.

The results of these courses are entered on your record in the same way as regular courses, and corresponding grade points are assigned. Graduate credit earned by examination may be applied toward minimum course requirements for master's degrees but cannot apply to academic residence requirements for master's or doctoral degrees.

You will need approval from the appropriate instructors, the department, and your college or school or the dean of the Graduate Division, from whom petitions for credit by examination (with fee) are available.

Other Academic Policies

Concurrent Enrollment and Transfer of Credit

Concurrent enrollment means taking courses for credit in UCLA regular session (Fall, Winter, or Spring Quarter) and at another college institution (including UCLA Extension) at the same time. Concurrent enrollment is not permitted except in extraordinary circumstances, and no credit will be given for courses taken concurrently elsewhere without the approval of your college or school. This does not apply to UCLA Summer Sessions (see "Summer Sessions" in Chapter 1).

Undergraduate Students

During the summer or during a term when you are not registered at UCLA, you may elect to take courses for credit at UCLA Extension, a community college, or another four-year institution (see limitations below). The UCLA Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools makes the final decision on credit transferability, but it is your responsibility to select courses with catalog descriptions similar to courses offered in regular session at UCLA. You should avoid courses that are closely related to those you have already taken, as you cannot receive credit twice for the same or similar courses. If you wish to apply a specific course from another college toward satisfaction of degree requirements at UCLA, consult your college, school, or department counselor before taking the course.

Only grades earned in regular session or Summer Sessions at any UC campus other than UC Santa Cruz and grades earned by Letters and Science students in UCLA Extension courses prefixed by XLC are computed in the UCLA grade-point average. You may, however, receive unit credit and satisfy course requirements with transferable work taken elsewhere. When you have completed the work, you must have the other college send a copy of your transcript to the UCLA Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools (UARS); you must also fill out a Transfer Credit Evaluation Request form at UARS, 1147 Murphy Hall.

UCLA Extension — If you wish to receive degree credit for work taken through UCLA Extension, you should take courses that correspond in number to the undergraduate courses offered in regular session. The designation XL or XLC before the number of the Extension course signifies that the course is equivalent to the regular session course bearing the same number. Grades earned by Letters and Science students in courses prefixed by XLC are computed in the UCLA grade-point average. No degree credit is given for courses numbered X300 through X499. Remember that concurrent enrollment in Extension and regular session is not permitted.

Community Colleges — The maximum number of community college units allowed toward the bachelor's degree is 105 quarter units (70 semester units). The UCLA Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools will not grant transfer credit for community college courses beyond 105 quarter units, but you may still receive subject credit for this coursework to satisfy lower division requirements. Consult your college or school counselors for possible further limitations. (To convert semester units into quarter units, multiply the semester units by 1.5 — e.g., 12 semester units  $\times$  1.5 = 18 quarter units. To convert quarter units into semester units, multiply the quarter units by .666 — e.g., 12 quarter units  $\times$  .666 = 7.99 or 8 semester units.)

Graduate Students

With approval of the dean of the Graduate Division, certain courses completed outside of UCLA regular session may be applied toward the master's degree. For more details, see "Transfer of Credit" under "Requirements for Graduate Degrees" in Chapter 3.

Transcript of Record

The Registrar prepares and permanently retains a record of each student's academic work. Your transcript reflects all undergraduate and graduate work completed in UCLA regular session and Summer Sessions. It lists chronologically your courses, units, grades, cumulative grade-point average, transfer credits, and total units.

The University Records System Access (URSA) allows all UCLA students to obtain course confirmation, UCLA grades for any completed term, GPA, completed units, and outstanding holds (i.e., restrictions from receiving services) and to confirm registration fee payment via a touch-tone telephone. Presently you can call URSA at (310) 208-0425 Monday through Saturday from 5 a.m. to midnight, including holidays (hours are subject to change). You can call as often as you wish. Access is given based on your nine-digit UCLA student I.D. number and your four-digit security code. The system is easy to use, explaining what to do at each step. A time limit is announced at the beginning of each call. If you exceed the limit, you will be disconnected. You may access the system for up to 10 years after your graduation or your last term of attendance. For additional information, consult the Schedule of Classes.

As needed, you may obtain a free printout of your grades for the most recent graded term at Academic Record Services, 1134 Murphy Hall, by presenting your valid current-term Registration Card and a photo I.D.

To have official transcripts sent to other schools or institutions, fill out a Transcript Request form (available in the Murphy Hall North Lobby). Each transcript costs $4; make your check or money order payable to Regents-UC. Transcript fees are subject to change at any time. Requests will not be processed if you have outstanding financial, academic, or administrative obligations (holds) to the University. Transcripts of work completed elsewhere must be requested directly from the campus or institution concerned.

Transcripts for UCLA Extension courses must be ordered from UCLA Extension, P.O. Box 24901, Los Angeles, CA 90024.

Verification of Student Status

The Registrar verifies registration (fee payment) and enrollment status as a student is eligible. Verification cannot be issued if registration fees for the term have not been paid.

Verifications for loan forms and student aid guarantors are processed through the National Student Loan Clearinghouse, a nonprofit industry-sponsored organization representing schools, guarantors, lenders, servicers, and secondary markets for the sole purpose of standardizing, simplifying, and automating enrollment verifications and deferment processing. UCLA provides student enrollment verification data, including student names, mailing addresses, Social Security numbers, and enrollment status, to the clearinghouse on a regular basis. Release of this information to the clearinghouse has been approved by the U.S. Department of Education and ruled in compliance with the Federal Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA).

Submit all verification request forms (including "good student" auto insurance discounts and health insurance verifications) to Academic Record Services, 1134 Murphy Hall. Forms for clearinghouse participants will be forwarded to the clearinghouse by Academic Record Services.

Certificate of Resident Study for International Students

In addition to a formal transcript, each college or school or the Graduate Division may issue a Certificate of Resident Study to a registered international student. To obtain this certificate, you must have completed a program of at least nine courses with a minimum 2.0 grade-point average (2.5 for Graduate Division students), or have satisfactorily completed a research project over a period of nine months or more. The chair of your major department recommends the award of this certificate.

Registration Card

Your valid Registration Card (Reg Card) is your official student identification and is required, along with your UCLA Student I.D. Card, for all University services and student activities. Carry it with you as you will be asked to show it for student health services, library privileges, athletic and cultural student ticket rates, recreation center, check cashing, and many other campus services.

If you lose or do not receive your Reg Card, a temporary verification card (good for seven days) will be issued without fee at 1113 Murphy Hall after the fee deadline for the term. After the term begins, you may replace lost, destroyed, or mutilated cards at 1113 Murphy Hall for a $3 fee. You must show proof of identity for verification or replacement cards.

If you have outstanding obligations (holds), proof of registration cannot be issued. For details on outstanding holds and initiating offices, call URSA at (310) 208-0425.

UCLA Student (Photo) I.D. Card

This card with photo is issued without charge to new or reentrant students from the beginning to the end of the first academic term and is valid with the current Reg Card. Both the Student I.D. Card and the current-term Reg Card are required for all University services and student activities.

You will need a current Reg Card and other valid identification (driver's license, passport, or California DMV I.D. card) to obtain your Student I.D. Card. There is a fee for issuing the card after your first academic term in attendance, for replacing lost or destroyed cards, and for issuing cards because of a name change affecting your University records.

Change of Name or Address

If you wish to change your name on your official University record, fill out a UCLA Correction or Change of Name form (available in the Murphy Hall North Lobby) and submit it to Academic Record Services, 1134 Murphy Hall. All name changes are recorded on your transcript. If you change your address, notify the Registration/Enrollment Office in 1113 Murphy Hall as soon as possible.

Leaving UCLA

Intercampus Transfer

Undergraduate students registered in a regular session at any campus of the University (or those previously registered who have not since registered at any other school) may apply for transfer to another campus of the University. Obtain the UC Application for Undergraduate Admission and Scholarships and submit the required application fees with the application form. The filing periods are the same as those for new applicants (see "Undergraduate Admission" in Chapter 2). Applications are available from the UCLA Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools, 1147 Murphy Hall, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1436, other University of California Undergraduate Admissions Offices, or your local community college.

Graduate students who wish to enroll as degree candidates at other UC campuses must apply for admission to those Graduate Divisions.

Absence during a Term

If you have to be absent from classes temporarily for reasons beyond your control, you should notify your instructors. Regardless of the reasons for absence, you are required to complete all coursework. If you cannot complete the work on time because your absence is late in the term or prolonged, you may request that the instructors assign an Incomplete grade (see "Incomplete Grades" earlier in this chapter).

One-Term Absence for Undergraduates

Undergraduate students who have completed at least one term at UCLA and fail to register for the following term may return to the University the next subsequent term as continuing students. If you plan to attend another institution (including UCLA Extension) during your absence, you should consult your college or school counselor before enrolling elsewhere (see "Concurrent Enrollment and Transfer of Credit" earlier in this chapter). If you are absent for two or more consecutive terms, you are no longer considered a continuing student and must apply for readmission (see "Readmission" in Chapter 2 for procedures and deadlines).

Leave of Absence for Graduate Students

Graduate students in good standing may be granted leaves of absence, normally for periods of one to three terms, on approval from the appropriate department and the Graduate Division. Leaves, which may be extended for a total of two years at the discretion of your department and with approval of the Graduate Division, must be requested before the end of the second week of classes (see "Withdrawal" in the next column for fee refund procedures and more information). Request forms are available from the Graduate Division, Student and Academic Affairs, 1255 Murphy Hall. For details on leaves of absence, see Standards and Procedures for Graduate Study at UCLA, available in the Graduate Division offices or in individual departments. Students on leaves of absence are not eligible to use University facilities (except libraries) or faculty time and cannot receive University financial support. Leaves of absence as described here do not apply to undergraduates.

Graduate students who fail to register for a term and do not take an official leave of absence are considered to have withdrawn from the University and must compete for readmission with all other applicants.

Cancellation

Before the first day of classes, you may cancel registration by mailing a written notice and your current Registration Card to the Registration/

Enrollment Office, Attn: Cancellation Clerk, 1113 Murphy Hall, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1429. A $10 service charge will be deducted from your fee refund; additional fees will be deducted for failure to return your Registration Card.

Undergraduates who return to the University for the following term are considered continuing students. If you are absent longer than one term, you must apply for readmission (see "Readmission" in Chapter 2 for procedures and deadlines). If you cancel in your first term at UCLA, you must reapply for admission.

Graduate students who cancel their registration and do not apply for a formal leave of absence must compete for readmission to return to the University.

Withdrawal

Withdrawing from the University means discontinuing attendance in all courses in which you are enrolled. If you withdraw during a term, you need to file a Notice of Withdrawal, available from your academic dean's office (undergraduates) or departmental office (graduate students). Submit your Registration Card along with the form or a fee will be deducted from any refund.

When you withdraw officially during the first five weeks of instruction (calendar days 1 to 35, beginning with the first day of instruction), a percentage of your registration fee will be refunded as follows:

- First and second weeks of instruction: 80% refund
- Third week of instruction: 60% refund
- Fourth week of instruction: 40% refund
- Fifth week of instruction: 20% refund
- After fifth week of instruction: no refund

If instruction begins in midweek, refund percentages may also change in midweek. Claims for refund must be presented within the academic (fiscal) year to which the claim is applicable. Consult the current Schedule of Classes for policy details and specific refund dates.

You may withdraw only if you have not taken any final examinations or otherwise completed the work in any of your classes. For undergraduates, one withdrawal places no restriction on readmission or continuation if you started the term in good academic standing. If you withdraw after one or more previous withdrawals or while in academic difficulty, a restriction may be placed on your continuance in undergraduate standing. Before withdrawing, you are urged to consult faculty, departmental, or college advisers to consider the full implications of this action.

Undergraduates may also withdraw from a term retroactively, provided no final examinations have been taken and no coursework has been completed. No withdrawals are accepted once you have officially graduated from the University.

If you register and subsequently discontinue coursework or stop payment on registration checks without an approved petition for withdrawal, leave of absence, or cancellation, you will receive F, NP, or U grades, as appropriate, for all courses in which you are enrolled for that term. A $60 fine will be assessed if any check for registration fee payment is returned by a bank (i.e., stopped payment, insufficient funds, etc.). No fees will be refunded, and future registration privileges may be curtailed or revoked. Transcripts will not be issued if you have outstanding financial obligations to the University.

Undergraduate Students — If you return to the University for the term following withdrawal, you are considered a continuing student. If you return later than the following term, you must apply for readmission.

Graduate Students — If you do not register for a term, you are considered to have withdrawn from the University and must apply for readmission when you return.

Graduation from UCLA

Approximately eight out of every 10 UCLA freshmen eventually receive a baccalaureate degree, either from UCLA or from another campus or institution. According to a recent survey of UCLA alumni, one third of all UCLA baccalaureate recipients go on to graduate school. For information on academic requirements for graduation, see "Undergraduate Degree Requirements" in Chapter 2.

Undergraduate Students

The awarding of the bachelor's degree does not happen automatically but is the culmination of several steps which begin when you identify the term you expect to complete degree requirements through URSA (consult the Schedule of Classes for complete instructions on using URSA to declare degree candidacy). This must be done before you complete 160 units (172 for the School of Engineering and Applied Science) or a $13 late candidacy fee will be assessed. The identified term must fall within the academic year (four quarters) subsequent to the term in which you reach or expect to reach the 160-/172-unit mark. Exceptions can be made by your degree auditor depending on your program of study (e.g., double majors).

You may request a review of your degree progress by a counselor in your college or school office at any time. Advisers in your major department are also available for counseling on departmental requirements.

The "degree expected term" you specify through URSA is used by the degree auditors to review your coursework and begin the audit of your completion of degree requirements. You cannot graduate without such an audit. If your expected graduation date changes and you have not yet completed 160/172 units, update your degree term through URSA. Once you have completed 160/172 or more units, a fee will be assessed each time you petition to change your "degree expected term" on the UCLA Declaration of Candidacy form.

The last day to declare candidacy for the current term (with fee if 160/172 or more units completed) is Friday of the fifth week (second week through URSA). Declaration of candidacy after the fifth week may result in a degree award date for the following term and additional candidacy penalty fees.

During the fourth week of each term, a list of all current-term degree candidates is posted in the glass case next to 1105 Murphy Hall. If you have requested through URSA that no public information (including your name) be released, you will not be included on the posted list. You can confirm your "degree expected term" through URSA at (310) 208-0425.

If you intend to complete degree requirements as a nonregistered student (take a course through UCLA Extension or at another institution, remove an Incomplete grade, etc.), you must file a request to graduate "in absentia" with your degree auditor by the fifth-week candidacy deadline. Students graduating "in absentia" will be assessed the special order diploma fee in addition to the declaration of candidacy fee.

Students in the School of the Arts, School of Nursing, School of Engineering and Applied Science, and School of Theater, Film, and Television are audited for degree requirements by staff members in their respective counseling/student affairs offices and should consult them regarding questions on degree requirements and school degree audit procedures.

Students in the College of Letters and Science who entered UCLA in Fall Quarter 1988 and thereafter are mailed a computer-generated Degree Progress Report once a year (copies can also be ordered at A316 Murphy Hall). This report includes a detailed evaluation of transfer credit, courses and grades for each completed term, degree requirements completed, and requirements still outstanding.

Students who entered prior to Fall Quarter 1988 are audited for degree requirements by the Registrar's degree auditors after completing 160 units, with a "degree expected term" within the subsequent two terms. You should receive information regarding your completion of requirements or any remaining degree requirements and/or deficiencies no later than your final term.

A "Summary of Shortages for the Bachelor's Degree" statement is mailed to each current-term candidate who does not satisfy degree requirements that term. If you receive such a notice, contact a degree auditor immediately to discuss your expected completion of the requirements.

Once you complete 180 units and reach the term you have declared as your "degree expected term," you are reviewed by your degree auditor for award of the degree each subsequent term while in continuous registration, including UCLA Summer Sessions. Keep your degree auditor informed of your plans for completing your degree.

Graduate Students

Candidates for both master's and doctoral degrees must file an advancement to candidacy petition, be advanced to candidacy, and complete all degree requirements, including the master's thesis or comprehensive examination, or doctoral dissertation, before the degree is conferred (consult the Schedule of Classes for filing deadlines). For full details on degree requirements and procedures for graduate students, see Chapter 3 on Graduate Study.

Final Transcript

Official transcripts with your graduation date included are available approximately seven weeks after the end of the term. If you require earlier proof of graduation, contact your degree auditor.

Degree Date

Degrees are awarded at the end of Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters and at the end of Summer Session C (mid-September). For the School of Law and School of Medicine degrees are awarded at the end of Fall and Spring Semesters. Consult the respective University calendars (quarter, summer sessions, semester) for the actual degree award date, which is the final day of the term.

Diplomas

Diplomas for both undergraduate and graduate students are available approximately three to four months after the degree award date. Information about obtaining your diploma in person (no fee) or by mail (with fee) is sent to you approximately seven weeks after the end of your final term. To expedite receipt of your diploma, you are encouraged to return the diploma mailer form and remit the mailing fee. Recorded information regarding diploma availability may be obtained by calling the Diploma Hot Line at (310) 825-8883. The Registrar's Office retains diplomas for five years from graduation date.

If your original diploma is destroyed, a duplicate may be ordered by contacting the Registrar's Office, Diploma Reorder, 1113 Murphy Hall. There is a fee for the replacement diploma, and it will bear a reissue date and the signatures of the current officials of the state and University.

Commencement

Each school and college conducts an academic ceremony for its graduates. Some of the ceremonies feature an address by the Chancellor, student speakers, and recognition of candidates who have achieved high academic distinction and honors, as well as prizes. Check with your school or college for eligibility requirements and program and time schedules.

Academic regalia (caps, gowns, and hoods) are available for rent/purchase at ASUCLA's Graduation Et Cetera (B Level of Ackerman Union, 310-825-2587). In addition, graduation announcements with printed enclosure cards, diploma covers, and diploma mounting are available. You may also purchase graduation announcements at the ASUCLA Campus Photo Studio (second floor of Ackerman Union) through mid-May.

Colleges and Schools

Organization

This catalog is organized into the one college and 12 schools which are the University's component parts. Each of the following chapters is devoted to a single college or school. Each is introduced by general information on scope and emphasis, the academic departments it encompasses, admission standards, and requirements for undergraduate and graduate degrees.

The overall college or school description is followed, in alphabetical sequence, by its departmental listings. Here you will find faculty rosters, departmental degree requirements, requirements for the major, and descriptions of all courses (lower division, upper division, and graduate) offered by that department or interdepartmental degree program. (If you are not certain which college or school offers a particular program, see the organization chart on the inside front cover.)

Since the great majority of UCLA's students and degree programs are housed within the College of Letters and Science, that unit is presented first. It is followed by the other general campus units offering undergraduate programs: School of the Arts, School of Theater, Film, and Television, and School of Engineering and Applied Science. The graduate professional schools of Architecture and Urban Planning, Education and Information Studies, Law, Management, and Social Welfare follow in alphabetical sequence. The health sciences disciplines, which include the Schools of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing, and Public Health, are the final chapters before the Appendix.

Courses of Instruction

Because the catalog must be prepared well in advance of the academic year it covers, it may not reflect recent changes in courses, curricula, and faculty listings. For more current information, consult the quarterly Schedule of Classes available in the Students' Store shortly before the beginning of each new term.

Courses listed in this catalog represent the total nonclinical offerings of each college, school, and department at UCLA. Certain courses listed may not be offered every term or every year. Where possible, the terms in which a course is offered have been indicated in parentheses after the instructor's name (F = Fall, W = Winter, Sp = Spring, Sum = Summer).

Academic Credit

A course has a credit value of four quarter units unless otherwise specified in parentheses after the course title.

A listing such as History 1A-1B-1C, Introduction to Western Civilization, indicates three full four-unit courses, 1A, 1B, and 1C. The listing Music 4A-4B-4C, Basic Musicianship (2 units each), indicates three half-courses at two units each. A course may not be prerequisite to the next in the series unless so designated, but since policies vary among departments, you should check with the departmental counselor or adviser. Credit for a specific course may be dependent on completion of a subsequent course, as noted in the description.

Prerequisites

Education is a building process. It is difficult or impossible to learn advanced principles without first understanding elementary ones. Therefore, one or more lower division courses may be prerequisite to taking another lower division or an upper division course. Prerequisites should be noted carefully — it is your responsibility to meet these requirements in preparation for more advanced work. A course has no prerequisites if none is designated in departmental requirements or course descriptions.

Undergraduate Courses

Undergraduate courses are classified as lower division and upper division. Lower division courses (numbered 1-99) are often surveys offering preliminary introductions to the subject field. They are designed primarily for freshmen and sophomores, though upper division students may enroll for unit and grade credit. Lower division courses may not be applied toward graduate degrees.

Upper division courses (numbered 100-199) are open to all students who have met the prerequisites indicated in departmental requirements or the course description. Preparation generally includes at least one lower division course in the subject or two years of college work. With approval of the major department, graduate students may take 100-series courses toward satisfaction of master's degree requirements.

Lower division/first-year seminars (numbered 88) are departmentally sponsored courses designed to provide freshmen and sophomores the opportunity to participate in small classroom settings to enhance writing, verbal, and analytical skills. Many carry general education credit.

Variable topics courses (numbered 97 and 197) are offered at both the lower (97) and upper (197) division levels; topics within a defined subject area vary with the instructor and individual offerings. These topics have a fixed and permanent place in the regular curriculum.

Professional schools seminars (numbered 98) are designed by the faculty of the professional schools specifically for freshmen and sophomores. Outside of the professional schools, 98 courses are often offered as the lower division equivalent of 198 courses, defined below. Because they are temporary in nature, vary in content, and are offered irregularly, they are not listed in the catalog. Consult the Schedule of Classes for respective offerings.

Group special studies courses (numbered 198) are structured special studies for groups. They may be departmentally sponsored experimental and/or temporary in nature (e.g., courses taught by a visiting professor) or those which are being tested for permanent inclusion in the curriculum. Because they are temporary in nature, vary in content, and are offered irregularly, they are not listed in the catalog. Consult the Schedule of Classes for respective offerings.

Individual special studies courses (numbered 199, 199F, 199H, and 199I) involve supervised independent study and research requiring adequate background in the subject proposed for study. These courses are structured by the instructor and student at the time they are initiated and are open to juniors (with a minimum 3.0 GPA in the major field), seniors, and graduate students. To enroll, you must complete the appropriate petition (available from the department) and have it approved by both the instructor in charge and department chair.

Undergraduates may enroll in a maximum of eight units of 199, 199F, 199H, and/or 199I courses per term. After completing 16 units of 199 and/or 199H credit on a letter grade basis, you must take any additional 199 and/or 199H courses on a Passed/Not Passed basis. Independent field study courses (199F and 199I) must be taken on a Passed/Not Passed basis; a total of eight units is allowed. If you have an outstanding

Incomplete grade in a 199, 199F, 199H, or 199I course, you may not register for another until the I grade is removed. See departmental listings and individual course descriptions for specific prerequisites and credit limitations.

Graduate Courses*

Graduate courses numbered 200-299 are generally open only to graduate students who have completed basic undergraduate courses in the subject. Courses and seminars in the 200 series can fulfill the minimum graduate course requirement for any advanced degree.

With departmental and instructor consent, and subject to requirements in the appropriate college or school, undergraduate students may enroll in 200-series courses for unit credit toward the bachelor's degree. If you take a graduate course as an undergraduate, you may not apply that same course later toward a higher degree.

Graduate courses numbered 300-399 are highly specialized teacher-training courses which are not applicable toward University minimum requirements for graduate degrees. They are acceptable toward the bachelor's degree only at the discretion of the individual college or school.

Graduate courses numbered 400-499 are designed for professional programs leading to graduate degrees other than the M.A., M.S., and Ph.D. These courses may not be used to satisfy minimum graduate course requirements for the M.A. or M.S. degree but may apply as electives.

Individual study and research courses (numbered 500-599) are reserved for advanced study and are not open to undergraduates. Courses are numbered as follows: 595/596 = directed individual study or research; 597 = preparation for master's comprehensive or doctoral qualifying examination; 598 = master's thesis research and preparation; and 599 = doctoral dissertation research and preparation. (Courses numbered 501 are not individual study and research but are cooperative programs held in conjunction with USC.) See individual departmental listings for specific limitations on 500-series courses.

*These definitions do not apply to the School of Law, which maintains its own course numbering system.

UCLA Extension Courses

In general, you may not attend UCLA Extension for degree credit if you are enrolled in UCLA regular session at the same time. However, certain Extension courses (numbered 1-199), prefixed by XL or XLC in the course listings, yield credit toward the bachelor's degree. Graduate students may petition to apply up to two XLC courses toward the master's degree. For more details, see "Concurrent Enrollment" earlier in this chapter.

Concurrent and Multiple Listings

Concurrently scheduled courses (identified by a capital C before the course number) are pairs of courses, usually within a single department or program, for which credit is given at two levels — undergraduate and graduate. Concurrently scheduled courses are offered at the same time and place with the same instructor, but work levels and performance standards are evaluated differently for students at each level. (Concurrently scheduled courses as described here should not be confused with concurrent courses offered through UCLA Extension.)

Multiple-listed courses (identified by a capital M before the course number) are courses of the same format and level offered jointly by more than one department. For example, Historical Archaeology is offered by the Department of Anthropology (Anthropology M115S) and the Department of History (History M103). You will find that particular course listed under both departments in Chapter 5 on the College of Letters and Science.

Faculty Rosters

Faculty rosters in each academic department are listed in the following order:

- Professors
- Associate Professors
- Assistant Professors
- Lecturers
- Adjunct and Visiting faculty in each of the first three Academic Senate classifications

In the case of interdepartmental degree programs, all participating faculty members have appointments in regular academic departments. Participating faculty are listed in the above order, with the home department or specialty of each member indicated in parentheses.

College of Letters and Science

Brian P. Copenhaver, Provost

"'The Idea of a Multiversity' is a city of infinite variety. Some get lost in the city; some rise to the top within it; most fashion their lives within one of its subcultures. . . . It offers . . . a vast range of choices, enough literally to stagger the mind. In this range of choices . . . (one) encounters the opportunities and the dilemma of freedom."

Clark Kerr, The Uses of the University

With over 22,650 students and 800 faculty, UCLA's College of Letters and Science is the largest academic unit in the UC system. Underscoring the "multiversity" concept, its four academic divisions of humanities, physical sciences, social sciences, and life sciences provide the framework for more than 100 majors leading to the Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science as well as to master's and doctoral degrees.

The undergraduate programs in the college stress a "liberal arts education" which brings together perspectives from many fields in a unified approach to learning. Students learn some of the ways issues are analyzed, questions posed, and knowledge organized. After sampling many general subjects, they concentrate on one field or subject and are required to pursue it rigorously and in depth, according to the standards of scholars in the field. When they reach the graduate level, they will pose their own questions, analyze academic issues of their own making and, through their research, participate in the creation of knowledge.

A316 Murphy Hall, (310) 825-1965

The primary units of the College of Letters and Science are the academic departments which are grouped in four divisions: humanities, life sciences, physical sciences, and social sciences. Each division is headed by a dean who reports directly to the provost.

In addition to departmental advising, the Division of Honors and Undergraduate Programs includes a network of student assistance within its components: College Counseling Service, Honors Programs (see "Honors" later in this section), and Academic Advancement Program (see Chapter 2).

Humanities

The division's mission is to promote, through scholarly inquiry and transmission of ideas, sensitive, imaginative, and rigorous reflection on the human condition and to engage in thoughtful reflection on those deep and abiding questions that relate to what it is to be human. Faculty and students reflect on art, literature, philosophy, and other expressions of the human spirit, each of which deepens their understanding. The instructional goal is to engage students in this inquiry — to further their knowledge and competence to express themselves clearly, rigorously, with style and originality.

Programs in the humanities range from teaching the craft of composition in writing programs, to developing an appreciation of profound philosophical thinkers and writers from Asia, the Near East, Europe, England, and America. Pauline R. Yu is the divisional dean.

Life Sciences

Faculty and students in the division play an essential role in unlocking the secrets and mechanisms of life at the most fundamental level. The geography of Southern California is very conducive to life sciences research. An area as ecologically rich and diverse as Southern California is a natural laboratory for environmental physiologists and plant and animal ecologists.

Scientists in biology, microbiology and molecular genetics, and molecular biology conduct research in cell and developmental biology. Neurochemists, neurophysiologists, psychobiologists, and behavior biologists research the underlying mechanism of the neural basis of behavior. Physiological scientists examine the regulation of human movement, neural control of breathing, and environmental conditions such as weightlessness, which affect bone and muscle structure and function. Cognitive scientists are concerned with the nature of knowledge — how people learn, remember, associate, and think, and how computers relate to thought processes. Frederick A. Eiserling is the divisional dean.

Physical Sciences

The division's departments present the results of mankind's efforts to understand the physical aspects of the natural sciences, which include the study and understanding of the properties and characteristics of matter and energy; the science of numbers and order; studies of the origin and structure of the universe, solar system, and Earth; and climatic change. The bases for the physical sciences are the fundamental laws and proof of mathematics, chemistry, and physics. Studies in the physical sciences are experimental, theoretical, and observational.

Faculty and students are interested in such topics as the nature and evolution of the galaxies; ozone depletion; nuclear winter; greenhouse effect; molecular recognition, interactions, design, synthesis, and structure; evolution of life and the continents; computational mathematics and symbolic logic; superconducting materials; plasma fusion, space plasmas; and high-energy accelerator physics. Roberto Peccei is the divisional dean.

Social Sciences

The division's departments are guided by the ideal of creating a deeper understanding of cultures and heritages and helping young people make sense of the rapidly changing world. By studying and comparing diverse cultures with their own, students gain self-knowledge and global awareness.

Anthropology students study human communities and social systems, archaeological records, and artifacts. Communication studies students learn about the mass media of today and their technological advances, social uses, and abuses. Leading economists investigate the applications of economic principles to business decisions. The geographic purview extends from studying the effects of location on human behavior to the Earth's ecosystem. Courses in history bring about understanding of the forces that have shaped the many societies and cultures of this country and the world. Political scientists study the motivations of political behavior and the relations between today's superpowers. UCLA sociologists examine subjects ranging from the everyday interaction of people to the complexities of social organizations. Scott L. Waugh is the divisional dean.

Undergraduate Study

The degree programs in the College of Letters and Science are designed to expose students to a variety of intellectual challenges by combining a wide distribution of courses and the opportunity to specialize in one particular field. To this end, you are required to select lower division courses that deal with the general foundations of human knowledge. In upper division courses you are relatively free to concentrate attention on one field of interest: your major.

You are expected to select a major by the beginning of your junior year. This may be a program of related upper division courses within a single department (departmental major) or a group of related courses involving a number of departments (interdepartmental major) or, under certain circumstances, a group of courses selected to meet your special need (individual major). Preparation for a major often requires prior completion of courses known as prerequisites.

Counseling Services

The College Counseling Service is located in A316 Murphy Hall. Staff members are specially trained to assist you with questions pertaining to academic regulations and procedures, selection of courses, and the many options and alternatives available to enhance your university education.

Some questions can be answered at the college information window or by calling (310) 825-1965. If you would like to confer with a counselor or counseling assistant (CA) regarding overall degree requirements, academic difficulty, program planning, or assistance in selecting a major, you can arrange an appointment at the information window. Group counseling sessions on a variety of academic issues are offered throughout the year.

For information on the ASK peer counselors, Orientation, and College Tutorial Services, see Chapter 2.

Your Major

Most entering freshmen are unsure about specific academic goals and request to be admitted to the college as "undeclared." These students then explore fields of study by taking introductory courses in the physical and life sciences, social sciences, and humanities in search of an area that most excites their interest (see "Choosing Your Major" in Chapter 2 of this catalog).

All students with 90 or more units toward a degree are expected to declare a premajor or a major. When you are ready to do so, obtain approval on a Petition for Declaration of Major from the department or interdepartmental degree committee which governs your intended major.

You can obtain help with your academic planning from a variety of resources, including the College Counseling Service in A316 Murphy Hall (310-825-1687 or 825-1965) and the Placement and Career Planning Center (310-825-2981). In addition, faculty members and counselors in each college department are available to discuss in detail the courses and programs in their respective fields. For further suggestions, see "Advising and Academic Assistance" in Chapter 2.

Assessing Progress Toward Your Degree

One of your responsibilities as a UCLA student includes a regular monitoring of all requirements necessary for the degree. It is imperative that you read this catalog carefully and consult regularly with the Letters and Science counseling staff for confirmation of the requirements you need. Departmental counselors can advise you regarding progress and completion of your major requirements. It is important that you maintain an accurate assessment of progress toward your degree by utilizing departmental and College Counseling Service resources. To assist you in your degree planning, the College Counseling Service provides computerized Degree Progress Reports (DPRs) on request.

Minimum Progress

UCLA is a full-time institution, and it is expected that students will complete their undergraduate degree requirements promptly. The recommended study load for an undergraduate in the College of Letters and Science is 12 to 16 units per term. Normal progress (toward graduation in four years) may be defined as the completion of 45 units per year.

According to Academic Senate regulations, Letters and Science undergraduates who do not pass at least 36 units during any three consecutive terms will be placed on probation, and students who do not pass at least 32 units during three consecutive terms will be subject to disqualification from registration at the University. Exceptions may be granted by the college due to poor health, family responsibilities, or regular employment of 20 hours per week or more.

Letters and Science Majors

A major in the College of Letters and Science consists of at least nine and no more than 15 upper division courses (between 36 and 60 units). All courses applied toward the major and preparation for the major must be taken for a letter grade unless otherwise stipulated by the department. If you have been away from the University for several terms, you should consult with your major department or curriculum adviser concerning the requirements under which you will graduate.

There are three categories of majors in the College of Letters and Science:

Departmental Majors

A departmental major consists of a group of related upper division courses, of which at least six courses are in one department. These majors are supervised by established campus departments. There are 86 departmental majors currently offered by the college.

Interdepartmental Majors

An interdepartmental major consists of at least 13 related upper division courses, of which no more than eight are in one department. These programs are administered by interdepartmental committees made up of faculty whose membership is determined by research interest, not by departmental affiliation. By cutting across the usual lines of departmental division, a subject area is studied from the perspectives of different disciplines and a greater degree of program flexibility is achieved.

The College of Letters and Science currently offers 26 interdepartmental majors. Although most lead to bachelor's degrees, there are some which lead to graduate degrees only. Check the chart of majors and degrees for the programs which interest you.

 Near Eastern Studies
 Neuroscience
 Religion, Study of Romance Linguistics and Literature
 Women's Studies
 World Arts and Cultures

You can find a detailed description of each of these majors under their respective headings later in this chapter.

Individual Majors

If you have some unusual but definite academic interest for which no suitable major is offered at the University and you have completed at least three terms of work (nine courses) at the University with a grade-point average of 3.4 or better, you may plan an individual major. The consent of the Division of Honors and Undergraduate Programs and the assistance of a faculty adviser are required.

The major should consist of at least 12 and no more than 15 upper division courses, a majority of which are in departments offering a major in the college. A senior thesis is required. The title of the major will be entered in the memorandum column of your official transcript and, at your request, printed on your diploma (up to a maximum of 70 characters). If you do not elect to have the title printed or if it is longer than 70 characters, your diploma will read "Individual Field of Concentration." For further details about individual majors, contact the Honors Programs Office in A311 Murphy Hall (310-825-1553).

Returning Students and Their Majors

If you return to the University to resume your studies after an absence of several years, you may find your previous major area of study no longer available. You then must select a current major in which to complete your studies. Consult the College Counseling Service for assistance.

Minors

The college will offer minors beginning in academic year 1994-95. A minor will consist of at least seven but no more than nine undergraduate courses (between 28 and 36 units), of which at least five must be upper division and four must have been taken at UCLA. All courses must be taken for a letter grade. In addition, no more than two courses may be applied toward both a major and a minor. Contact your academic counselor for the list of departments that will be offering minors in the 1994-95 academic year.

Supplemental Programs

You may choose from 12 different programs which are not degree-granting majors, but are sequences of supplemental courses designed to enhance your work in certain areas. Each of these specializations must be taken jointly with an organized departmental or interdepartmental major:

African Studies
 Asian American Studies
 Business and Administration
 Chicana and Chicano Studies
 Computing, Specialization in (anthropology, cybernetics, economics, geography, linguistics, mathematics, psychology, sociology)
 Diversified Liberal Arts Education
 International Relations
 Labor and Workplace Studies
 Organizational Studies
 Urban Studies
 Women's Studies

Detailed descriptions of the programs (except specialization in computing) are given under their respective headings later in this chapter. For descriptions of the specialization in computing, refer to the majors listed in parentheses above.

Student Research Program (SRP)

For information on this program, see "Alternative Academics" in Chapter 2.

Double Majors

If you are in good academic standing, you may be permitted to have a double major consisting of departmental majors from two departments within this college. They must both be completed within the maximum limit of 228 units, and you must obtain the approval of both departments.

With few exceptions, double majors in the same department are unacceptable. You must designate one of the two majors as the principal one for the purpose of satisfying general education requirements. No more than five upper division courses may be common to both majors.

Courses outside the division of the principal major which are required in preparation for that major may be used to satisfy general education requirements. Courses required for the secondary major (including preparation for the major) also may satisfy general education requirements.

Changing Your Major

If you are in good academic standing and wish to change your major, you may petition to do so provided you can complete the new major within the 216-unit limit (228 for double majors and special programs). Petitions must be submitted to and approved by the department or committee in charge of the new major. Admission to certain majors may be closed or restricted; changes are normally not permitted if you are on probation or have begun your last term.

If you fail to attain a grade-point average of 2.0 (C) in preparation for the major or major courses, you may be denied the privilege of entering or continuing in that major. Some departments may have higher grade-point requirements for their preparation and major courses; consult the appropriate department regarding minimum standards.

The Study List

The required study load for undergraduate students in the College of Letters and Science is 12 to 16 units (three to four courses) per term. For exceptions, see "Minimum Progress" earlier in this section. Three courses are often recommended for students in the first term of the freshman year. All other students may carry four and one-half courses (18 units) without petition. After the first term, you may petition to enroll in as many as five courses if you attained at least a B average the preceding term in a program of at least three graded courses. First-term transfer students from any other campus of the University may carry excess Study Lists on the same basis as students who have completed one or more terms at UCLA; however, they are not encouraged to do so.

Requirements for Bachelor's Degrees

Each student must meet three types of requirements for the Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science degree: University requirements, college requirements, and department requirements (including preparation for the major and major requirements). For details on department requirements, see the department and major of your choice.

University Requirements

For information on the Subject A or English as a Second Language (ESL) and American History and Institutions requirements, see "Undergraduate Degree Requirements" in Chapter 2.

College Requirements

The College of Letters and Science has eight requirements which must be satisfied for the award of the degree: unit, major, scholarship, academic residence, English composition, quantitative reasoning, foreign language, and general education course requirements.

Unit Requirements

You must satisfactorily complete for credit a minimum of 180 units (45 courses) for the bachelor's degree. At least 72 units (18 courses) of the 180 units must be upper division (numbered 100-199). A maximum of 216 (228 for double majors and special programs) units is allowed. If you have advanced placement (transfer) credit, you may exceed the unit maximum by the amount of that credit.

Scholarship and Major Requirements

You must attain at least a 2.0 (C) grade-point average in all courses undertaken at this University for receipt of the bachelor's degree. You must also attain a 2.0 GPA in a major and satisfy both the course and scholarship requirements of that major (including preparation for the major) in the College of Letters and Science.

Structure of a Degree

Three types of degree requirements are included within the 180-unit minimum/216- or 228-unit maximum limits for the bachelor's degree:

University Requirements

- (1) Subject A or English as a Second Language (ESL)
- (2) American History and Institutions

College Requirements

- (1) English Composition or ESL Composition
- (2) Quantitative Reasoning
- (3) Foreign Language
- (4) General Education Course Requirements

Department Requirements

- (1) Preparation for the Major
- (2) Major Requirements

Electives

The remaining units, defined as electives, are courses which vary according to your interests and goals. When selecting your courses, keep the following degree criteria in mind:

Scholarship

You must attain an overall 2.0 minimum grade-point average in the 180/216 or 228 units required and must satisfy the scholarship requirements of your major department (usually a 2.0 average in the preparation and major courses, but it may be higher in the former, according to departmental requirements).

Academic Residence Requirement

See "Academic Residence Requirements" on next page.

Upper Division Unit Requirement

At least 72 units (18 courses) must be upper division (numbered 100-199).

Academic Residence Requirements

Sixty-eight of the last 80 units completed for the degree must be earned in residence in the college. No more than 16 of the 68 units may be completed in UCLA Summer Sessions. While enrolled in the college you must complete at least 10 upper division courses (40 units), including six courses in the major. These academic residence requirements apply to all students, both continuing and transfer.

English Composition Requirement

Note: You must complete the University's Subject A or English as a Second Language (ESL) requirement prior to completing the college's English Composition requirement.

You may satisfy the English Composition requirement by taking one course from English 3, 4, Humanities 2A, 2B, 2C. The course must be taken for a letter grade, and you must receive at least a C; a grade of C- is not acceptable. Humanities 2A, 2B, or 2C may be applied toward the humanities general education requirements; English 3 or 4 may not be applied.

The composition requirement may also be satisfied by scoring 4 or 5 on one of the College Entrance Examination Board (CEEB) Advanced Placement Tests in English or by passing the English 3 Proficiency Examination. Students scoring 660 or better on the SAT II Subject Test in Writing are eligible for this proficiency examination.

You must satisfy the composition requirement within your first three terms in residence.

Transfer Students — You may take the English 3 Proficiency Examination (1) if you have completed a transferable English composition course with a Passed grade rather than a letter grade or (2) if you have completed, with a grade of C or better, a college-level English composition course that the Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools does not accept as equivalent to English 3. Like eligible freshmen, you must register for the examination in the Writing Programs Office, 271 Kinsey Hall, before the first day of enrollment for the term.

If you have credit for 90 or more units and have not satisfied the requirement, you are expected to include an acceptable composition course on your Study List during your first term in residence in the college. If you are required to take English 2 to satisfy the Subject A requirement, you should, on completion of that requirement, take an acceptable composition course in your second term in residence.

English as a Second Language (ESL) Students — If your native language is not English, you may satisfy the English Composition requirement by completing English as a Second Language 36 with a grade of C or better (C- or a Passed grade is not acceptable). Admission into course 36 is determined by completion of course 35 with a passing grade or consent of the department.

Quantitative Reasoning and Foreign Language Requirements

In the College of Letters and Science you must demonstrate basic skills in quantitative reasoning and satisfy the foreign language requirement.

Note: All courses taken to satisfy these requirements must be completed with a grade of Passed or C or better. SAT I and II scores will be converted to a new scale effective April 1995.

Quantitative Reasoning — May be satisfied by achieving an SAT I mathematics score of 600 or better, a mathematics subject test score of 550 or better, or by completing one of the following courses: Anthropology 80; Biostatistics 100A, 100B, 100C, 100D; Computer Science 10C, 10F; Economics 40; Geography 40; Mathematics 1 (recommended only for students continuing into calculus), 2, or any higher numbered course except 38A, 38B, and 104; Philosophy 31; Political Science 6; Program in Computing 10A, 10B, 10C; Sociology 18; Statistics 50.

Foreign Language — May be satisfied by one of the following methods: (1) completing a college-level foreign language course equivalent to UCLA's level three or above OR (2) scoring 3, 4, or 5 on the CEEB Advanced Placement (AP) foreign language examination in French, German, or Spanish, thereby earning college credit OR (3) presenting a UCLA foreign language departmental examination score indicating competency through level three (consult the Schedule of Classes for times and places of these regularly scheduled examinations).

If you wish to demonstrate proficiency in a language which is taught in a UCLA department but for which there is no scheduled examination, contact the appropriate department to arrange for one. If you wish to take an examination in a language not taught at UCLA, contact the College Counseling Service.

The following language courses may be used to fulfill the foreign language requirement:

General Education (GE) Course Requirements

The general education requirements of the college are intended to introduce undergraduates to the richness and diversity of the various academic disciplines. Within the four major divisions of the college — humanities, physical sciences, social sciences, and life sciences — you are encouraged to explore the different possibilities for further university study. Whether or not you have a specific educational goal, general education requirements are designed to broaden your intellectual perspective and to set you on the path to becoming an educated member of society.

The set of GE course requirements you will follow are specified on the chart labeled "Courses to Fulfill GE Requirements" on the next pages. You must earn units in four courses in the humanities (literature, philosophy, language and linguistics, culture and civilization, the arts), three courses in the physical sciences, four in the social sciences (two from historical analysis and two from social analysis), and three courses in the life sciences. In the humanities, at least one course must be from literature and no more than two may be from any single subgroup. In the physical sciences, two courses must be complementary

(B) Physical Sciences

Three courses from the following, two of which must be complementary and one of which must have a laboratory and/or demonstration component:

- Astronomy 2A, 2B. Introduction to the Physical Universe
- 3. Astronomy: Nature of the Universe
- 4. Universe of Stars and Stellar Systems
- 5. Life in the Universe
- 6. Cosmology: Our Changing Concepts of the Universe
- 81. Astrophysics I: Stars and Nebulae
- 82. Astrophysics II: Stellar Evolution, Galaxies, and Cosmology
- 88A. Lower Division Seminar: Cosmic Evolution
- Atmospheric Sciences 2, 2E. Air Pollution
- 3, 3E. Introduction to the Atmospheric Environment
- 4. California Weather and Climate
- 5. Climates of Other Worlds
- 6, 6E. Climate and Climatic Change
- Chemical Engineering 2. Technology and the Environment
- Chemistry and Biochemistry 2. Introductory Chemistry
- 11A, 11B. General Chemistry
- 11BL. General Chemistry Laboratory
- 15. Survey of Organic Chemistry and Biochemistry
- 15L. Laboratory in Elementary Organic Chemistry and Biochemistry
- Civil and Environmental Engineering 3. Fundamentals of Environmental Engineering Science
- Computer Science 2. Great Ideas In Computer Science
- Earth and Space Sciences 1. Introduction to Earth Science
- 2. Earth History
- 5. Earth Science and Society: Geological Ecological Interactions
- 8. Earthquakes
- 9. Origin and Evolution of Solar System
- *15. Introduction to Oceanography
- *20. Natural History of Southern California
- Geography 1. Physical Environment
- Mathematics 2. Finite Mathematics
- 3A, 3B. Calculus for Life Sciences Students
- 5. Calculus for Liberal Arts Students
- 31A, 31B. Calculus and Analytic Geometry
- 31AQ, 31BQ. Calculus and Analytic Geometry with Computer Laboratory
- Mechanical, Aerospace, and Nuclear Engineering 1. Energy: Resources, Conversion, Utilization, and the Environment
- 2. Toxic Waste Control
- Physics 3A. General Physics: Mechanics of Solids and Fluids
- 3B. General Physics: Heat, Sound, Electricity and Magnetism
- 3C. General Physics: Light, Relativity, and Modern Physics
- 6A. Physics for Life Sciences Majors: Mechanics
- 6B. Physics for Life Sciences Majors: Electricity and Magnetism
- 6C. Physics for Life Sciences Majors: Light and Modern Physics
- 8A. Physics for Scientists and Engineers: Mechanics
- 8B. Physics for Scientists and Engineers: Waves, Sound, Heat
- 8C. Physics for Scientists and Engineers: Electricity and Magnetism
- 10. Physics

Complementary courses include Astronomy 2A/2B, 3/4, 3/5, 3/6, 81/82; Atmospheric Sciences 2/3, 2E/3E, 3/4, 3/5, 3/6, 3E/6E, 5/6; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A/11B, 11A/15; Earth and Space Sciences 1/2, 1/9, 1/15, 1/Geography 1; Mathematics 3A/3B, 3A/31B, 3A/31E, 3B/31A, 31A/31B, 31A/31E; Mechanical, Aerospace, and Nuclear Engineering 1/2, 2/Chemistry and Biochemistry 2; Physics 3A/3B, 6A/6B, 6A/8B, 6A/8C, 6B/8A, 8A/8B, 8A/8C.

Courses with a laboratory and/or demonstration component include Astronomy 2A, 2B, 3, 81, 82, Atmospheric Sciences 2, 3, 3E, Chemistry and Biochemistry 11BL, 15L, Earth and Space Sciences 1, 2, 15, 20, Geography 1, Mathematics 31AQ, 31BQ, Mechanical, Aerospace, and Nuclear Engineering 1, 2, Physics 3A, 3B, 3C, 6A, 6B, 6C, 8A, 8B, 8C, 10.

(C) Social Sciences

Four courses (two each from Groups 1 and 2):

(1) Historical Analysis

Two courses from a single sequence are recommended:

- Classics 10. Survey of Classical Greek Culture
- 20. Survey of Roman Civilization
- History 1A, 1B, 1C. Introduction to Western Civilization
- 3A, 3B, 3C. Introduction to History of Science
- 3D. Themes in History of Medicine
- 4. Introduction to History of Religions
- 5A, 5B. Survey of British History
- 6A, 6B, 6C. History of the American Peoples
- 7A, 7B. Survey of Political History of the U.S.
- 8B. Latin America: Reform and Revolution
- 8C. Latin American Social History
- *9A. Introduction to Asian Civilizations: History of India
- *9C. Introduction to Asian Civilizations: History of Japan
- *9D. Introduction to Asian Civilizations: History of the Near and Middle East

- *10A, *10B. Introduction to Civilizations of Africa
- *11A, *11B. History of China
- 21. World History, 1200-1800
- Political Science 10. Introduction to Political Theory

(2) Social Analysis

- Afro-American Studies M5. Social Organization of Black Communities
- Anthropology 8. Archaeology: An Introduction
- 9. Sociocultural Anthropology
- 33. Culture and Communication
- Asian American Studies 21. Asians and Pacific Islanders in American Society
- Biology *11. Biomedical Research Issues in Minority Communities
- Chicana and Chicano Studies 10B. Chicanos in American Society
- Communication Studies 10. Introduction to Communication Studies
- Economics 1, 2. Principles of Economics
- 5. Introductory Economics
- Geography 3. Cultural Geography
- 4. Introduction to Economic Geography
- Political Science 20. World Politics
- 30. Introduction to Political Economy
- 40. Introduction to American Politics
- 50. Introduction to Comparative Politics
- Psychology 10 (Introductory Psychology) or 11 (Principles of Psychology)
- *88A. Lower Division Seminar: Stress, Adaptation, and Coping
- Social Sciences 20. Racial Minorities in the U.S.
- Sociology 1. Introductory Sociology
- 2. Changing Society and Making History
- 3. Sociology of Everyday Life
- 4. Jobs and Careers: Sociological Approach
- M5. Social Organization of Black Communities
- 31. Dilemmas of Third World Development
- Women's Studies 10. Introduction to Women's Studies: Feminist Perspectives on Women and Society

(D) Life Sciences

Three courses from the following, one of which must have a laboratory and/or demonstration component:

- Anthropology 7 (Human Evolution) or 12 (Principles of Human Evolution: Comparative Analysis)
- 10. Principles of Human Evolution: Genetic Basis
- 15. Human Biology and Behavior
- Biology 2. Principles of Modern Biology
- 5. Biology of Organisms
- 5L. Organismic and Environmental Biology Laboratory
- 6. Ecology, Evolution, and Behavior
- 9. Introduction to Cell and Molecular Biology
- 10. Plants and Civilization
- *11. Biomedical Research Issues in Minority Communities
- 12. Biodiversity and Extinction: Crisis and Conservation
- 13. Evolution of Life
- 21. Field Biology
- 25. Oceans
- 30. Biology of Cancer
- 40. AIDS and Other Sexually Transmitted Diseases
- 50. Desert Life
- 70. Genetic Engineering and Society
- 80. The Green World: Plant Biology for Now and the Future
- 88E. First-Year Seminar: Genetics and Society — Current Status and Future Applications
- 88F. First-Year Seminar: Science and Scientists — Expectations and Realities
- Earth and Space Sciences *15. Introduction to Oceanography
- 16. Major Events in History of Life
- 17. Dinosaurs and Their Relatives
- *20. Natural History of Southern California
- Geography 2. Biogeography
- 5. People and the Earth's Ecosystems
- Microbiology and Molecular Genetics 6. Introduction to Microbiology
- 7. Developments in Biotechnology
- Physiological Science 3. Introduction to Human Physiology
- 5. Issues in Human Physiology: Diet and Exercise
- 6. The Human Machine: Physiological Processes
- 13. Introduction to Human Anatomy
- Psychology 15. Introductory Psychobiology
- *88A. Lower Division Seminar: Stress, Adaptation, and Coping

Courses with a laboratory and/or demonstration component include Biology 2, 5, 5L, 6, 10, 20, 21, 50, 80, Earth and Space Sciences 15, 16, 17, 20, Geography 2, 5, Physiological Science 3, 5, 13.

All honors sections of the above courses also fulfill GE requirements.

Honors Collegium: Inquire at the Honors Programs Office (A311 Murphy Hall) for information on courses which satisfy any of the areas of the general education requirements.

and one must include a laboratory and/or demonstration component. In the life sciences, one course must include a laboratory and/or demonstration component.

All students entering UCLA in Fall Quarter 1994 with 45 or more quarter units are not required to complete the complementary course requirement in physical sciences.

Courses required to satisfy the major or other courses taken in the major department may not be used to satisfy the general education requirements. However, courses outside the major which are required as preparation for a major may be used to satisfy these requirements.

Course Exemptions — Students majoring in the humanities are exempt from two courses, one in their major subgroup and one other humanities course. Students majoring in the physical sciences are exempt from two courses in the physical sciences group. Students in the social sciences are exempt from two courses in the subgroup of their major, and students in life sciences are exempt from two courses in the life sciences grouping. At least 14 courses (12, with exemptions) must be completed.

Course Substitutions — Two lower division seminars which have been approved for GE credit may be substituted for courses on the "Courses to Fulfill GE Requirements" list. You may make no more than one such substitution per group (humanities, physical sciences, social sciences, life sciences). An annual list of

GE seminars is published in the General Education Handbook, and descriptions are listed in the quarterly Schedule of Classes under "Seminars and Special Programs for Undergraduates."

Advanced Placement Credit — For application of advanced placement (AP) credit on the general education requirements, see the AP chart below or consult the College Counseling Service.

Reciprocity with Other UC Campuses — Students who transfer to UCLA from other UC campuses and have met all general education requirements prior to enrolling at UCLA are not required to complete the college's GE requirements at UCLA. Written verification from the college dean at the other UC campus is required. Consult a Letters and Science counselor regarding your eligibility for this option.

Intersegmental General Education Transfer Curriculum (IGETC) — Transfer students from California community colleges have the option to fulfill UCLA's lower division general education requirements by completing the Intersegmental General Education Transfer Curriculum prior to transfer. The curriculum consists of a series of subject areas and types of courses which have been agreed on by the University of California and the California community colleges. Although general education or transfer core courses are graduation requirements rather than admission requirements, you are advised to fulfill them prior to transfer.

The IGETC significantly eases the transfer process, as all of UCLA's general education requirements are fulfilled when you complete it. If you select the IGETC, you must complete it entirely before enrolling at UCLA. Otherwise, you must fulfill the College of Letters and Science general education requirements.

General Education Groupings by Major

For the purpose of these requirements, departmental and interdepartmental majors are classified in the divisions listed below. Not all courses within a department apply on GE requirements in the division of the major (e.g., psychology is listed as a life science; however, Psychology 10 appears as a social science under social analysis).

Credit Limitations

Note: Transfer students with credit from other institutions (advanced standing credit) receive a Degree Progress Report (DPR) from the Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools indicating the transferable units from their former institution(s); however, the following credit limitations may reduce the total number of transferred units which will apply toward the degree in the College of Letters and Science. Consult with a counselor in the College Counseling Service regarding these limitations.

The following credit limitations apply for all students enrolled in the college. In most cases units are not deducted until the final term before graduation. Consult a counselor in the College Counseling Service if you have questions.

Subject A

If you do not satisfy the Subject A requirement prior to enrolling at UC, you must pass an approved course or other program prescribed by your UC campus of residence. Only after satisfying the Subject A requirement can you take for transfer credit an English composition course after enrolling at UCLA. Consult a college counselor regarding Subject A equivalent courses from other UC campuses.

Community College

After completing 105 quarter units (26¼ courses) toward the degree in all institutions attended, you are allowed no further unit credit for courses completed at a community college.

Physical Education

No more than four units in physical education activities courses may be applied toward the bachelor's degree.

300- and 400-Level Courses

No more than two courses (eight units) in the 300 and 400 series of courses may be applied toward the bachelor's degree. Credit is not granted for X300 and X400 courses taken in UCLA Extension.

Performance Courses

No more than 12 units of music and/or dance performance courses (Dance 71B through 79Z, C171B through C179Z, Ethnomusicology and Systematic Musicology 91A-91Z, and Music 90A through 90N) may be applied toward the bachelor's degree whether taken at UCLA or another institution.

Foreign Language

Credit will not be allowed for completing a less advanced course in grammar and/or composition after you have completed a more advanced course. College credit for an international student's native language and literature is allowed for (1) courses taken in native colleges and universities or (2) upper division (advanced language courses only) and graduate courses taken at the University of California or another English-speaking institution of approved standing (no credit is allowed for lower division courses).

College Level Examination Programs

Credit earned through the College Level Examination Program (CLEP) and through the California State University English Equivalency Examination may not be applied toward the bachelor's degree.

Advanced Placement (AP) Tests

Advanced Placement (AP) Test credit may not be applied toward a degree unless you had less than 36 units of credit at the time of the examination(s).

ROTC Courses

For students contracted in the Aerospace Studies Department, 36 units of aerospace studies credit may be applied toward the requirements for the bachelor's degree; for students contracted in the Military Science Department, 26 units of military science credit may be applied; for students contracted in the Naval Science Department, 26 units of naval science credit may be applied.

Independent Study Courses

No more than two courses (eight units) of credit may be taken per term in special independent study courses. The total number of units allowed in such courses for a letter grade is 16; see specific restrictions under each departmental listing.

Physics 3A, 6A, 8A, 10

Any two or more courses from Physics 3A, 6A, 8A, and 10 are limited to a total of six units of credit.

Statistics

No credit is allowed for more than one lower division course in statistics (Anthropology 80, Economics 40, Geography 40, Political Science 6, Psychology 41, Sociology 18, Statistics 50) or for more than one sequence of such courses whether taken at UCLA or another institution.

Education Abroad Program

Students participating in the Education Abroad Program may receive a maximum of 48 units of credit toward the degree in addition to the eight units maximum allowable for the Intensive Language Program.

Credit by Examination

Within the College of Letters and Science, eligibility for credit by examination is usually limited to students who have been approved as Departmental Scholars or who are admitted to a departmental honors program or UCLA Honors Programs.

You may petition for credit by examination for one course at a time. The examination for that course must be taken successfully before you may petition for credit by examination in another course. Petitions for credit by examination (with fee) are available only through an appointment with a counselor in the Honors Programs Office, A311 Murphy Hall. Approval is given or withheld by the dean of the Division of Honors and Undergraduate Programs who may limit the number of such petitions you present.

Honors

College Honors

College Honors is the highest academic recognition the College of Letters and Science confers on its undergraduates. The College Honors program provides the exceptional Letters and Science undergraduate an opportunity to pursue individual excellence.

College Honors is awarded to graduating seniors with an overall University of California grade-point average of 3.5 or better who have completed either 44 units of honors coursework or 36 units of honors coursework that include a senior research project/thesis based on original research. With the assistance of Honors Programs counselors, you integrate this coursework throughout your undergraduate education with other University, college, and major requirements for the bachelor's degree. In this way, these units need not be above and beyond your other academic commitments.

Students in the College Honors program are entitled to specialized counseling within the division, some preferential preenrollment in classes each term, access to specially designed honors classes, eligibility for unique scholarships and research stipends, counseling on graduate and preprofessional programs, graduate library privileges, and a filing and mailing service for letters of recommendation. Incoming freshmen who are eligible for College Honors based on SAT scores and GPA are also offered preferred on-campus student housing for the first year.

To qualify for College Honors, entering freshmen must (1) have an overall GPA of 3.85 or better and an SAT score of 1,300 or better (on one test date) or an ACT score of 31 or better or (2) graduate in the top three percent of their high school class or (3) qualify through the Honors Programs Educational Enhancement Program (see below). Certain entering transfer students may be admitted with a transfer GPA of 3.85 (or 3.5 if transferring from another UC campus or a college in the Transfer Alliance Program). Continuing UCLA and transfer students with at least 12 or more graded units at UCLA and a cumulative UC GPA of 3.5 or better who can complete the honors course requirements prior to graduation are encouraged to participate, as are both regularly qualified and potentially successful underrepresented minority students.

The Educational Enhancement Program offers low-income, minority, disabled, and other non-traditional students who might not otherwise be able to participate an opportunity to qualify for UCLA's College Honors program. Contact the Honors Programs Office for more information.

You may apply for admission to College Honors at A311 Murphy Hall. For further information, attend one of the group meetings offered regularly by the Honors Programs Office.

Honors at Graduation

Students who have achieved scholastic distinction may be awarded the bachelor's degree with honors. To be eligible, you must have completed 90 or more units for a letter grade at the University of California and must have attained an overall grade-point average at graduation which places you in the top five percent of College of Letters and Science graduates (GPA of 3.771 or better) for summa cum laude, the next five percent (GPA of 3.602 or better) for magna cum laude, and the next 10 percent (GPA of 3.504 or better) for cum laude. Coursework taken on the Education Abroad Program is applied toward honors at graduation. The minimum GPAs required are subject to change on an annual basis. Required GPAs in effect in your graduating year (fall, winter, spring, summer) determine your eligibility. Consult your graduation-year catalog for the requirements that apply to you.

Dean's Honors List

The Dean's Honors List recognizes high scholastic achievement in any one term. The following criteria are used to note Dean's Honors List on the student records: (1) a 3.75 GPA in any one term with at least 12 graded units and no grade of NP or I or (2) a 3.66 GPA and at least 56 grade points during the term, with no grade of NP or I. Dean's Honors List is automatically recorded on your transcript.

Departmental Scholar Program

Departments may nominate exceptionally promising undergraduate students (juniors and seniors) as UCLA Departmental Scholars to pursue bachelor's and master's degrees simultaneously.

Qualifications include completion of 24 courses (96 quarter units) at UCLA or the equivalent at a similar institution, the requirements in preparation for the major, and eligibility to participate in your college/school honors program. You must also have at least one term's coursework remaining at UCLA. To obtain both the bachelor's and master's degrees you must be provisionally admitted to the Graduate Division, fulfill requirements for each program, and maintain a minimum B average. No course may be used to fulfill requirements for both degrees. If you are interested in becoming a Departmental Scholar, consult your department well in advance of application dates for graduate admission (see the Calendar at the beginning of this catalog). For further information, consult the Honors Programs Office.

Honors Collegium

The Honors Collegium is a unique and innovative educational alternative of seminars and courses designed primarily for students in their freshman and sophomore years. Some upper division courses are also offered. Refer to Honors Collegium later in this chapter for a complete description of the program.

Honors Programs Office

The Honors Programs Office, located in A311 Murphy Hall (310-825-1553, 825-3786), provides academic counseling and services for College Honors students, Departmental Scholars, Education Abroad Program students, students pursuing individual majors, and students participating in the High School Scholars program. The division also provides counseling for Regents Scholars, National Merit Scholars, and Alumni Scholars during their first year of attendance. Services offered include academic counseling, degree checks, assistance with petitions and, for College Honors students only, letters describing the program to graduate and professional schools.

A variety of scholarships and awards for qualified continuing students and graduating seniors is also available.

In addition, the Honors Programs Office administers Phi Beta Kappa (national honor society).

Preparing for a Professional School

The programs that follow are not degree programs in the College of Letters and Science. The purpose of each grouping of courses is to assist you if you plan to apply to a professional school at the end of your sophomore (90 units) or junior (135 units) year.

If you are not accepted by a professional school or plan to receive your degree before applying, you must declare a major in the College of Letters and Science and complete the requirements for a degree without exceeding 216 units.

New students entering these curricula are listed as "undeclared" majors and are advised in the college unless an adviser is named below in the presentation of the curriculum.

Preprofessional Advising Office

Information and counseling on preparing for professional schools and assistance in filing applications and preparing for interviews are available through the Preprofessional Advising Office, A266 Murphy Hall. Workshops, reference letter services, and MCAT, DAT, AMCAS, LSAT, GRE, GMAT, and other applications are available. For more information, call (310) 825-1817.

Predental Curriculum: Three Years

The College of Letters and Science offers a predental curriculum designed to fulfill the basic educational requirements for admission to several dental schools and the general educational requirements of the College of Letters and Science. You should determine and satisfy the specific requirements of the dental schools to which you expect to apply.

To be adequately prepared for the predental curriculum, you should take the following subjects in high school: English, history, mathematics (algebra, geometry, and trigonometry), chemistry, physics, and foreign language.

The 135 quarter units of work required for admission to the UCLA School of Dentistry in this curriculum include the following:

General University Requirements: (1) Subject A; (2) American History and Institutions.

Specific UCLA School of Dentistry Requirements: (1) Biology 5, 5L, 9, 108; (2) Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL, 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A, 153L; (3) English 3, 4; (4) Physics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A, 8B, and 8C; (5) Psychology 10.

Social sciences and humanities courses such as anthropology, history, economics, psychology, political science, appreciation of art and/or music, and philosophy should also be included.

For further information, consult Admissions Requirements of U.S. and Canadian Dental Schools, AADS, 1625 Massachusetts Avenue NW, Suite 101, Washington, DC 20036. Sample copies of the Dental Admission Test (DAT) are available in the Preprofessional Advising Office (310-825-1817).

Predental Hygiene Curriculum: Two Years*

The University offers a four-year program in dental hygiene leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science. The first two years may be taken at Los Angeles; the last two years must be taken at the School of Dentistry at the University of California, San Francisco. Admission to UCSF is by competitive application.

The 90 quarter units of work required for admission to the School of Dentistry at UCSF include specific requirements as follows (the courses referred to are UCLA courses which fulfill the requirements):

Curriculum Requirements: (1) Subject A; (2) American History and Institutions (the examination in American History and Institutions may be taken at the UCSF School of Dentistry, but it is preferable to satisfy the requirements in the predental program); (3) Biology 5, 5L, 9, 108; (4) Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A, 153L; (5) one year of English which includes English 3; (6) Psychology 10 and one additional psychology course; (7) 16 units in social sciences and humanities, including foreign language (one course in speech and one in sociology are required). Courses in anatomy and physiology are strongly recommended. For more information, call the Preprofessional Advising Office at (310) 825-1817.

Premedical Studies: Four Years

If you intend to apply for admission to a medical school and wish to complete the requirements for a bachelor's degree before such admission, you should select a major within the College of Letters and Science. Medical schools have no preference as to major. You should choose the major in which you are most interested and can do best. In addition to fulfilling the requirements of the selected major, you should satisfy the specific requirements for medical schools to which you expect to apply.

High school preparation for premedical studies at the University should include English, three units; U.S. history, one unit; mathematics, three and one-half units; chemistry, one unit; physics, one unit; biology, one unit; foreign language (preferably French, German, or Spanish), two units. It is desirable that a course in freehand drawing be taken in high school.

The following courses are usually required for admission to the UCLA Medical School: (1) two years of college biology to include the study of organismic, cellular, molecular, developmental, and genetic biology, including at least one year of laboratory courses and one year of upper division courses (Biology 5 and 9, plus additional lower and upper division life sciences courses equivalent to the general requirements, are required; note that Biology 5L is a prerequisite to upper division biology laboratory courses); (2) Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11CL, 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A, 153L; (3) 12 quarter units of English, including at least one course in English composition; (4) Physics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A, 8B, and 8C. Courses in physical chemistry and calculus are strongly recommended. Course requirements for admission to other University of California medical schools vary slightly.

Because requirements for admission to medical schools outside the University of California also vary somewhat, you should consult the following publications: Medical School Admission Requirements, U.S. and Canada, Association of American Medical Colleges, 2450 N Street NW, Washington, DC 20037-1126; The Education of Osteopathic Physicians, AACOM, 6110 Executive Boulevard, Suite 405, Rockville, MD 20852; and The New MCAT Student Manual (also an AAMC publication available at the above AAMC address). For more information, call the Preprofessional Advising Office at (310) 825-1817.

Pre nursing Curriculum: Two Years

The University offers a four-year course of study leading to the Bachelor of Science degree in Nursing. The pre nursing curriculum in the College of Letters and Science is designed to prepare you for the program in the UCLA School of Nursing. You should apply to the School of Nursing when you have completed or have in progress 84 quarter credits, including the pre nursing courses listed below with grades of C or better, and a cumulative grade-point average of at least 2.8. Since you must apply during the Fall Quarter of the year prior to the year in which you wish to be enrolled, you must present your proposed curriculum for the remaining terms.

Because enrollment in the UCLA School of Nursing is limited, you should become familiar with the admission requirements as early as possible. Attend open counseling sessions in the UCLA School of Nursing (times are posted in the Office of Student Affairs, 2-200 Factor Building, 310-825-7181) and those given by the Preprofessional Advising Office (posted outside A266 Murphy Hall, 310-825-1817).

New students admitted to the college in this curriculum should declare pre nursing as their major. Weekly open counseling sessions are available. Students in the college who do not transfer to the UCLA School of Nursing must declare a major and be able to complete all degree requirements within 216 units.

Pre nursing Requirements for the UCLA School of Nursing:

(1) Anthropology 9; (2) Biology 5, 9; (3) Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 15, 15L; (4) Community Health Sciences 130; (5) English 3; (6) Microbiology and Molecular Genetics 6/6L or 101; (7) Physics 10 or one year of high school physics; (8) Physiological Science 13; (9) Psychology 10, 15; (10) Sociology 1; (11) one four-unit humanities course from literature, philosophy, language and linguistics, culture and civilization, or the arts; (12) recommended electives in the social and life sciences. All required pre nursing courses must be completed for a letter grade.

*The UCSF School of Dentistry reserves the right to limit enrollment if applications exceed available facilities and to require interviews and aptitude tests if they are necessary in the selection of the class. For further information, see the Announcement of the School of Dentistry, UC San Francisco.

Preoptometry Curriculum: Three Years

A three-year program designed to prepare you for admission to optometric schools may be completed in the College of Letters and Science. If you are planning to transfer to the School of Optometry at Berkeley, you should contact Assistant Dean Carter of the School of Optometry, University of California, Berkeley, CA 94720, (510) 642-9537, as early in your preprofessional studies as possible.

You will be adequately prepared for preoptometric studies if you have taken the following subjects in high school: English, history, mathematics (algebra, geometry, and trigonometry), chemistry, physics, and two years of one foreign language.

The 135 quarter units of work required for admission to the School of Optometry, UC Berkeley, include the following: (1) Subject A; (2) American History and Institutions.

Specific UC Berkeley School of Optometry Requirements: (1) Biology 5, 5L, 9; (2) Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL, 132A, 132B; (3) English 3, and 4 or 129; (4) Mathematics 1, 3A, and 3B, or 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 31A, 31B, and Statistics 50 or Psychology 41; (5) Microbiology and Molecular Genetics 6/6L or 101; (6) Physics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A, 8B, and 8C; (7) introductory anatomy (Physiological Science 13) and physiology (Biology 166); (8) Psychology 10. Recommended: neuroanatomy, cell physiology, or additional statistics courses.

The balance of the 135 quarter units required for admission may be selected from social sciences, foreign languages, and humanities.

For further information, obtain the booklet Information for Applicants to Schools and Colleges of Optometry from the American Optometric Association, 243 Lindbergh Boulevard, St. Louis, MO 63141, or call the Preprofessional Advising Office at (310) 825-1817.

Prepharmacy Curriculum: Two Years

The School of Pharmacy on the San Francisco campus of the University offers a four-year curriculum leading to the degree of Doctor of Pharmacy. To be admitted to this curriculum you must have met all requirements for admission to the University and have completed, with an average grade of C (2.0) or better, at least 90 quarter units of the program below. Students taking prepharmacy work at the University of California are normally enrolled in the College of Letters and Science. If taken elsewhere, the courses elected must be equivalent to those offered at the University. To complete prepharmacy studies in the minimum time, you should take elementary chemistry, trigonometry, and a full year of intermediate algebra in high school.*

Curriculum Requirements: (1) Subject A; (2) American History and Institutions; (3) Biology 5, 5L, 9; (4) Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL, 132A, 132B/132BL; (5) English 3, 4; (6) intermediate algebra and trigonometry (if not completed in high school), Mathematics 3A and 3B, or 31A and 31B; (7) Physics 3A and 3B, or 6A and 6B, or 8A and 8C/8CL; (8) 28 quarter units of electives selected from courses in foreign language, social sciences, and humanities.

For further information, call the Preprofessional Advising Office at (310) 825-1817.

Prephysical Therapy Curriculum: Three or Four Years

Students who intend to apply for admission to a physical therapy school should select a major (physiological science and psychology are commonly selected) and complete the following prerequisite courses: (1) Biology 5, 9; (2) Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 15, 15L; (3) Physics 3A, 3B, 3C; (4) introductory anatomy (Physiological Science 13) and physiology (Biology 166); (5) Psychology 10, 115, 127, 130. Recommended: one course in statistics and one in computing. The prerequisite courses should be taken for a letter grade; GPAs for these courses should not be lower than 3.0, with no grade lower than a C.

You should write to schools with physical therapy programs early in your sophomore year for specific admission requirements and application deadlines. Information concerning in-state and out-of-state programs may be obtained from the American Physical Therapy Association, 1156 15th Street NW, Washington, DC 20005, and the Preprofessional Advising Office (310-825-1817).

Prepublic Health Studies

The professional and academic fields of public health need individuals from many disciplines. Candidates for graduate study may come from a wide variety of academic backgrounds and training, including mathematics and the physical, biological, and social sciences. Preparation typically includes a minimum of two courses each in mathematics, biological sciences, and social sciences, and one course in physical sciences.

Interested students and those who wish to apply to the UCLA School of Public Health should review the school's announcement booklet for additional requirements or recommendations for entry into the various programs of study. Information is available at the Preprofessional Advising Office (310-825-1817).

Prerespiratory Therapy Curriculum: One Year

Santa Monica College (SMC) and the UCLA Medical Center offer a two-year program in respiratory therapy accredited by the American Medical Association (AMA) through which you may obtain a Certificate of Completion.

The first year of the curriculum may be taken at UCLA or any other two- or four-year college/university. Many UCLA students opt to incorporate the first-year respiratory therapy curriculum into their UCLA science or premedical B.S./B.A. degree prerequisites and, after completing their UCLA degree, enter the second year at the SMC/UCLA Medical Center School of Respiratory Therapy. The only first-year course that must be taken at Santa Monica College is an introductory course on respiratory therapy as a profession (Respiratory Therapy 1).

The second year of the program (the formal respiratory therapy curriculum) is taken through Santa Monica College. It is a lecture, laboratory, and clinical program conducted at the UCLA Medical Center, beginning with summer school each year. Admission to the second year is by competitive application. Because enrollment in the second year is limited, you should become familiar with the admission requirements as early as possible.

Curriculum Requirements (First Year): (1) Respiratory Therapy 1 (taken at SMC in Fall/Spring Quarter); (2) general human anatomy with laboratory; (3) general chemistry with laboratory; (4) basic lower division English; (5) U.S. history or general political science; (6) any general humanities course (art, music, foreign languages, etc.); (7) microbiology with laboratory; (8) human physiology with laboratory; (9) general psychology; (10) speech or advanced English composition.

For further information and/or a counseling appointment, contact the SMC/UCLA Medical Center School of Respiratory Therapy at (310) 825-7222.

Prelaw Studies

Law schools have no preference with regard to specific majors or particular courses. Admission to law school is based on the quality of your academic work, LSAT scores, and other qualities as reflected in letters of recommendation, in the written application, and in interviews. The College of Letters and Science offers advising on preparing for and applying to law schools through daily drop-in counseling sessions (for information, call the Preprofessional Advising Office at 310-825-1817).

*Students who have completed the prepharmacy curriculum at Los Angeles cannot be assured of admission to the School of Pharmacy on the San Francisco campus. A personal interview may be required. Applicants should contact the school in early fall of the year preceding the September of proposed admission. Contact the Office of Student Affairs, School of Pharmacy. Applications may be obtained from the office of the Director of Admissions, University of California Medical Center, San Francisco, CA 94143-0446, (510) 476-2732. For further information, see the Announcement of the School of Pharmacy, UC San Francisco, which may be obtained from the Dean, School of Pharmacy, University of California Medical Center, San Francisco, CA 94143-0446.

For additional information, see the Law School Admission Bulletin within the "Law School Admission Service Packet" (available at the Admissions Office, UCLA School of Law, 71 Dodd Hall).

Graduate Study

The College of Letters and Science provides graduate students virtually unlimited opportunities for academic pursuit, faculty-sponsored research, and fieldwork relative to specific programs and career goals.

With Graduate Division approval and subject to University minimum requirements, each department sets its own standards for admission and other requirements for the award of the master's and doctoral degrees. See the departmental listings which follow for specific requirements and procedures.

For information on the proficiency in English requirements for international graduate students, refer to "Graduate Admission" in Chapter 3.

Scope and Objectives

The basic objective of the African Area Studies Program is an intellectual one — to provide interested students with the opportunity to engage in intensive study and research on Africa on an interdisciplinary basis. The program offers high quality African area courses in a wide range of fields, including the social sciences, humanities, and professional fields. The Master of Arts is not a professional degree, but students are encouraged to enroll in courses in several professional schools on campus. Articulated degree programs are also offered.

Academic flexibility draws many students to the program. Because there are more than 30 active faculty members on campus with African interest and experience in many disciplines, students have multiple options to design individualized programs.

According to a recent survey, 45 percent of the program's graduates are continuing study at the postgraduate level, 25 percent are employed in higher education, and 30 percent work with international or foreign organizations in 20 countries.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

In addition to the University minimum requirements, applicants are required to (1) submit three letters of recommendation from academic referees, one of which may be from an employer if the applicant has been away from school for some time, (2) present a résumé describing both academic and professional experience, and (3) submit a research paper.

In addition to meeting the requirements of the Graduate Division, you must have adequate preparation in undergraduate fields related to the program. Normally, the required preparation for the M.A. degree in African Area Studies is a Bachelor of Arts in the social sciences or arts and humanities.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

You must select a major field of concentration in one discipline, professional school, or approved interdisciplinary grouping. For more information and a brochure describing the program, contact the Assistant Graduate Adviser, African Studies Center, 10244 Bunche Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1310.

Foreign Language Requirement

You are required to satisfy the language requirement by one of the following methods: (1) taking three courses (12 units) in an African language with an average grade of B or better (these courses may not be applied toward the nine courses required for the degree), (2) passing a Linguistics Department examination in an African language not regularly offered, (3) proving that you are a native speaker of an African language, (4) proving that you have a Foreign Service Institute rating of three or above in an African language, or (5) petitioning for the substitution of an appropriate non-African language.

Course Requirements

A minimum of nine courses is required for the M.A., at least five of which must be at the graduate level. The courses must be distributed between disciplines as follows: (1) major discipline — a minimum of five courses, of which three must be at the graduate level. Sociology and anthropology may be taken as a combined major. Other combined majors must be approved by the graduate adviser; (2) minor discipline — a minimum of three courses, of which two must be at the graduate level; (3) third discipline — a course on Africa, preferably of the survey or methodology type. In addition, African Area Studies M229B and/or History 275 are strongly recommended for all students in the program.

No more than one course graded on an S/U basis may be applied toward the minimum of nine courses required for the degree, except with consent of the graduate adviser. One course in the 500 series may be applied toward the total course requirement and toward the minimum graduate course requirement. With consent of the graduate adviser, another 500-level course may be allowed but may not be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement.

Thesis Plan

The program normally requires a written comprehensive examination for the M.A. degree; however, a thesis option is available but must be approved by the program chair and your faculty adviser. If approved, you should select, in consultation with the graduate adviser, a faculty committee to supervise your thesis. The thesis must reflect the major area of emphasis. Normally the thesis should be submitted to the committee at the beginning of your fourth term in residence and should be approved before the end of that term. If the committee does not approve the thesis, you will have failed the requirement and are not allowed to resubmit the thesis.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

If you select the comprehensive examination plan, you are required to take a written examination administered by a three-person committee. It is your responsibility to make arrangements for this examination with faculty members in appropriate departments. Exceptions are granted only with consent of the graduate adviser. The examination normally is three to six hours in length.

An oral examination may be held at the discretion of the examining committee after it has read the written examination. If you fail the comprehensive examination, you may retake it only once with consent of the graduate adviser.

African Development Studies within the M.A. in African Area Studies

Students interested in an interdisciplinary program in African development studies within the existing master's program should consult the graduate adviser. Coursework focuses on planning and development.

Cooperative Degree Programs

In the articulated degree programs described below, no course may be used for credit toward more than one degree. Thus, courses that have been applied toward the completion of the M.A. degree in African Area Studies may not also be applied toward any other degree.

For more information on either of the cooperative degree programs, contact the Graduate Adviser or Assistant Graduate Adviser, M.A. Program in African Area Studies.

M.F.A.-Film and Television/M.A.-African Area Studies

The African Area Studies Program and the Department of Film and Television have an articulated degree program which allows students to combine study for the M.A. in African Area Studies and the M.F.A. in Film and Television. You must be accepted by both areas to pursue this degree program. Additional information is available from the Graduate Adviser, Student Services Office, UCLA School of Theater, Film, and Television.

M.P.H./M.A.-African Area Studies

The African Area Studies Program and the School of Public Health have an articulated degree program whereby you can work sequentially for the master's degree in African area studies and the Master of Public Health. By planning the major field emphasis in public health while working toward the M.A. in African Area Studies, it may be possible to shorten the amount of time it would normally take to complete both degrees. Potential applicants may also contact the Student Affairs Office, UCLA School of Public Health.

Graduate Courses

M229B. Africana Bibliography and Research Methods. (Same as Library and Information Science M229B.) Problems and techniques of research methodologies related to Africana studies. Emphasis on relevant basic and specialized reference materials, using full range of available information resources, including library collections of books, serials, and computerized databases.

375. Teaching Apprentice Practicum (1 to 4 units). Prerequisite: apprentice personnel employment as a teaching assistant, associate, or fellow. Teaching apprenticeship under active guidance and supervision of a regular faculty member responsible for curriculum and instruction at the University. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

African Studies (Interdepartmental)

10244 Bunche Hall, (310) 825-2944

Professors

Christopher Ehret, Ph.D. (History), Chair
 Thomas J. Hinnebusch, Ph.D. (Linguistics, African Languages)
 Richard L. Sklar, Ph.D. (Political Science; Distinguished Teaching Award)

Scope and Objectives

This special undergraduate program is designed primarily for (1) students who plan to live and work in Africa or who are interested in government and public service careers involving African affairs and (2) students who plan to pursue graduate work in one of the social sciences or Near Eastern and African languages, with primary concentration on the African field.

The philosophy of the specialization is that people with a solid background in one of the established disciplines can make the best contribution to an understanding of Africa and its problems. Thus, the specialization can be taken only jointly with work toward a bachelor's degree, normally in one of the following fields: anthropology, economics, geography, history, linguistics, political science, or sociology. Students completing this special program receive a degree with a major in a selected discipline and specialization in African studies. The chair of the committee in charge certifies completion of the program.

Special Undergraduate Program

Preparation for the Specialization

Required: History 10A-10B and either African Languages M190 or a three-term sequence in any African language.

Upper Division

Students are required to take a departmental major in the social sciences or, by special arrangement with the committee chair, in the humanities or arts. In addition, you are required to take an upper division course related to Africa in each of four departments.

For more information, contact the Assistant Graduate Adviser, African Studies Center, 10244 Bunche Hall (310-825-2944) or Professor Christopher Ehret, History, 6265 Bunche Hall (310-825-4093, 825-4601).

Scope and Objectives

Originally born during the late 1960s and early 1970s, the Afro-American studies major was designed to fill a void that existed at UCLA in terms of scholarly and curricular material relevant to the African American experience. Students and faculty currently associated with the program see the major as meeting a number of academic, personal, and social needs.

The program offers both a Bachelor of Arts and a Master of Arts degree. While it is important that students become expert within a traditional discipline, it is even more important that students examine both the truth and the fiction regarding the African American experience in the U.S. For African American students, this leads to a heightening of self-awareness and self-pride. For non-African American students, such a major provides a broadening of perspectives to take into account more than a singular cultural view.

The fundamental goal of the curriculum is to provide students with a comprehensive and multidisciplinary introduction to the crucial life experiences of African Americans. This goal is achieved in two primary ways. First, it provides an interdisciplinary exposure to particular features of the African American experience. Majors gain an in-depth understanding of the historical, anthropological, sociological, psychological, economic, and political aspects of African America. The curriculum also provides opportunities to study the literary, musical, and artistic heritage of peoples of African descent. Second, students gain expertise in the concepts, theories, and methods of a traditional academic discipline. Majors are required to select an area of concentration in one of the following fields: anthropology, economics, English, history, philosophy, political science, psychology, or sociology (concentrations in departments not listed must be approved by the program adviser).

Bachelor of Arts Degree

The B.A. program in Afro-American Studies is periodically revised; check with the program office for changes and/or updates.

Preparation for the Major

Required: History 10A and the lower division courses listed in one of the following concentrations, plus three courses from at least two additional concentrations (prerequisites for the courses listed must be completed before enrolling in a given course; this is especially important for the quantitative courses in economics and psychology): anthropology — Anthropology 8, 9, 10 (or 7), 12; economics — Economics 1, 2, 40, Mathematics 3A, 31E (or 3A and 3B, or 31A and 31B); English — English 3, 4, 10A, 10B, 10C (all must be taken in sequence); history — History 1A-1B-1C, 6A-6B-6C, 10B, and 100A or 101; philosophy — Philosophy 4, 21, 22, 31; political science — Political Science 6, 20, Sociology 1, Economics 1; psychology — Mathematics 2, Psychology 10, 41, 42, Biology 2, Anthropology 7, Physics 10 (or 3A or 6A or 8A), one year of high school chemistry (or Chemistry and Biochemistry 2 or 11A); sociology — Mathematics 2, Sociology 1, 18, Linguistics 1, Anthropology 9. You are strongly urged to complete the required lower division courses within the first two years of the major.

The Major

Required: (1) Anthropology M164, English M104A or M104B or M104C, History M158B-M158C; (2) four upper division and/or graduate courses in Afro-American studies (or four departmental courses that are multiple-listed with Afro-American Studies); (3) six upper division electives within the department of concentration selected from the approved courses listed below; (4) two upper division electives outside the department of concentration selected from the approved courses list. Note: You may petition the committee which administers the degree program to have a course not on the approved list accepted for the major. In arranging a course of study, you should select a combination of courses that best meets your current and future educational and career goals.

Honors Option

Students participating in the honors option are required to complete an independent research paper or project undertaken with the guidance of a faculty member. If you are an Afro-American studies major with a grade-point average of 3.5 or better, you complete the honors option by writing an undergraduate thesis. For more information, contact the curriculum coordinator of the Afro-American Studies Program.

Double Major Option

Some students elect to complete the requirements of two majors (Afro-American studies and another). If you are interested in this option, you must maintain good academic standing and complete both majors within the 228-unit maximum imposed by the college. Courses used to satisfy the requirements for the principal major may also be used to satisfy the requirements for the secondary one, but no more than five courses may be common to both majors. Because of the complexity of the double major, you are encouraged to plan your curriculum early and to do so in consultation with the college counselors and/or the Afro-American Studies Program adviser or curriculum coordinator.

Master of Arts Degree

The Master of Arts program in Afro-American Studies is international in scope, focusing on African American cultures in the U.S., the Caribbean, and South America. The program prepares students for positions in the job market, as well as further graduate study (i.e., Ph.D. level) in their traditional disciplines.

Admission

Applicants for admission must possess a bachelor's degree in the social sciences or humanities and demonstrate an interest in Afro-American studies either through their previous course of study or in their future plans. Students are selected on the basis of the following criteria: (1) an official transcript; (2) three academic letters of recommendation; (3) a minimum 3.0 (B) average in the junior/senior years of college; (4) a statement of purpose describing the applicant's background in Afro-American studies, proposed program of study, and future career goals; (5) scores on the verbal and quantitative sections of the Graduate Record Examination (GRE); (6) an original term paper or research paper which best expresses the applicant's interests and abilities; (7) other evidence of promise deemed relevant such as work experience, accomplishments, or community and public service.

Admission to the program is limited to Fall Quarter. The application deadline for the 1995-96 academic year is December 15, 1994 (earlier for international students). Prospective students may request applications from the M.A. Degree Program in Afro-American Studies, Center for Afro-American Studies, 160 Haines Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1545.

Major Fields

The M.A. in Afro-American Studies is interdepartmental, with formal support linkages to nine disciplinary departments: Anthropology, English, History, Linguistics, Music, Philosophy, Political Science, Psychology, and Sociology. Related courses are also offered in the following schools and departments: African Studies, Art, Dance, Economics, Education, Film and Television, Folklore and Mythology, Geography, Latin American Studies, Library and Information Science, Management, Psychiatry and Biobehavioral Sciences, Public Health, Social Welfare, and Theater.

Foreign Language Requirement

You are required to satisfy the language requirement by one of the following methods: (1) successfully completing two years of coursework in a foreign language at the college level or (2) passing a foreign language proficiency examination approved by your guidance committee and deemed appropriate by the program committee.

Course Requirements

A total of 12 upper division and graduate courses are required for the degree. Of that number, only four may be selected from upper division listings. The program has a structured core of six required courses. You are required to take Afro-American Studies M200A, three courses from 200B through 200F, and 270A. These courses should normally be taken in your first year of study. The second year is devoted to acquiring disciplinary competence in your cognate field, and six courses must be selected from that discipline, including one graduate-level course in research methods (for social sciences students) or critical theory (for humanities students). The methods course should be selected from the list approved by the interdepartmental degree committee (you may petition to substitute an appropriate upper division course if your outside department's methods course is closed to nonmajors).

Eight units of 500-series courses (excluding 597 and 598) may be applied toward either the total course requirement or the minimum graduate course requirement.

Thesis Plan

The thesis is the final report on the results of your original investigation. Before beginning work on the thesis, you should consult closely with your academic adviser and the thesis committee.

Comprehensive Examination Option

You may elect to complete the M.A. degree through the comprehensive examination option. The written examination is administered by an appointed faculty committee and is offered on a regular basis.

Lower Division Courses

M5. Social Organization of Black Communities. (Same as Sociology M5.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Analysis and interpretation of social organization of black communities, with focus on origins and development of black communities, competing theories and research findings, defining characteristics and contemporary issues.

Mr. Allen, Mr. Oliver (Sp)

6. Trends in Black Intellectual Thought. Overview of major intellectual trends that have shaped ways in which Afro-American thinkers have interpreted experiences of blacks in the U.S., drawing from such fields as history, philosophy, and literature. (F,W,Sp)

Upper Division Courses

C101A-C101Z. Special Topics in Afro-American Studies. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Variable topics. May be repeated for credit. Concurrently scheduled with courses C201A-C201Z.

M102. Culture, Media, and Los Angeles (6 units). (Same as Asian American Studies M197H and Honors Collegium M102.) Lecture, four hours; screenings, two hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Role of media in society and its influence on contemporary cultural environment, specifically in Los Angeles; issues of representation as they pertain to race, ethnicity, gender, and sexuality. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Gabriel (Sp)

M103A. African American Theater History: Slavery to Mid-1800s. (Same as Theater M103A.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Exploration of extant materials on history and literature of theater as developed and performed by African American artists in America from slavery to the mid-1800s. Ms. Robinson (F)

M103B. African American Theater History: Minstrel Stage to Rise of the American Musical. (Same as Theater M103B.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Exploration of extant materials on history and literature of theater as developed and performed by African American artists in America from the minstrel stage to the rise of the American musical. Ms. Robinson (W)

M103E. African American Theater History: The Depression to the Present. (Same as Theater M103E.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Exploration of extant materials on history and literature of theater as developed and performed by African American artists in America from the Depression to the present.

Ms. Robinson (Sp)

M104A. Early Afro-American Literature. (Same as English M104A.) Prerequisite: satisfaction of Subject A requirement. Introductory survey of black American literature from the 18th century through World War I, including oral and written forms (folktales, spirituals, sermons; fiction, poetry, essays), by authors such as Phillis Wheatley, David Walker, Frances Harper, Frederick Douglass, Harriet Jacobs, Paul Laurence Dunbar, Charles W. Chesnutt, Booker T. Washington, and Pauline Hopkins.

Ms. Smith, Mr. Yarborough

M104B. Afro-American Literature from the Harlem Renaissance to the 1960s. (Same as English M104B.) Prerequisite: satisfaction of Subject A requirement. Introductory survey of 20th-century black American literature from New Negro Movement of post-World War I period to the 1960s, including oral materials (ballads, blues, speeches) and fiction, poetry, and essays by authors such as Jean Toomer, Claude McKay, Langston Hughes, Sterling Brown, Nella Larsen, Zora Neale Hurston, Richard Wright, Ann Petry, James Baldwin, and Ralph Ellison.

Ms. Smith, Mr. Yarborough

M104C. Afro-American Literature since the 1960s. (Same as English M104C.) Prerequisite: satisfaction of Subject A requirement. P/NP or letter grading.

Ms. Smith, Mr. Yarborough

M144. Ethnic Politics: African American Politics. (Formerly numbered M147.) (Same as Political Science M144B.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight or nine hours. Prerequisites: Political Science 40, and one 140-level political science course or one upper division course on race or ethnicity from history, psychology, or sociology, or consent of instructor. Emphasis on dynamics of minority group politics in the U.S., touching on conditions facing racial and ethnic groups, with black Americans being the primary case for analysis. Three primary objectives: (1) to provide descriptive information about social, political, and economic conditions of the black community, (2) to analyze important political issues facing black Americans, (3) to sharpen students' analytical skills.

Mr. Gilliam

M145. Ellingtonia. (Same as Ethnomusicology M111.) Music of Duke Ellington, his life, and far-reaching influence of his efforts. Ellington's music, known as "Ellingtonia," is one of the largest and perhaps most important bodies of music ever produced in the U.S. Covers the many contributions of other artists who worked with Ellington, such as composer Billy Strayhorn and musicians Johnny Hodges, Cootie Williams, and Mercer Ellington.

Mr. Burrell (W)

M158A. Comparative Slavery Systems. (Same as History M158A.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours. Examination of the slavery experience in various New World slave societies, with emphasis on outlining similarities and differences among the legal status, treatment, and slave cultures of North American, Caribbean, and Latin American slave societies.

M158B-M158C. Introduction to Afro-American History. (Same as History M158B-M158C.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours. Survey of the Afro-American experience, with emphasis on the three great transitions of Afro-American life: transition from Africa to New World slavery, transition from slavery to freedom, and transition from rural to urban milieu.

Mr. Hill, Ms. Stevenson

M164. The Afro-American Experience in the U.S. (Same as Anthropology M164.) Promotes understanding of contemporary sociocultural forms among Afro-Americans in the U.S. by presenting a comparative and diachronic perspective on the Afro-American experience in the New World. Emphasis on utilization of anthropological concepts and methods in understanding the origins and maintenance of particular patterns of adaptation among black Americans.

Ms. Morgan

M166. Afro-American Sociolinguistics: Black English. (Same as Anthropology M145.) Lecture, three hours. Basic information on Black American English, an important minority dialect in the U.S. Social implications of minority dialects examined from perspectives of their genesis, maintenance, and social functions. General problems and issues in fields of sociolinguistics examined through a case-study approach.

Ms. Morgan

M172. The Afro-American Woman in the U.S. (Same as Psychology M172 and Women's Studies M172.) Limited to juniors/seniors. Impact of social, psychological, political, and economic forces which impact on interpersonal relationships of Afro-American women as members of a large society and as members of their biological and ethnic group.

Ms. Mays

M175. Interracial Work, Friendship, and Love Relationships of African American Men and Women. (Same as Women's Studies M173.) Seminar, three hours. Examination of factors that influence development, maintenance, and dissolution of interracial relationships of African Americans in three areas: work life, friendships, and intimate love relationships. P/NP or letter grading.

Ms. Mays (Sp)

M195. Investigative Journalism and Communities of Color. (Same as Asian American Studies M197B.) Lecture, three hours. Impact of investigative journalism on communities of color; exploration of dimensions of power and oppression as these relate to communities of color. Coursework stresses learning by doing, with students required to apply their knowledge through writing for campus and community media. P/NP or letter grading.

M197. Topics in Afro-American Literature. (Same as English M197.) Variable specialized studies course in Afro-American literature. Topics include the Harlem Renaissance; Afro-American Literature in the Nadir, 1890-1914; Contemporary Afro-American Fiction. May be repeated for credit.

Ms. Smith, Mr. Yarborough

197B. Special Studies in Comparative Literature: Caribbean Literature. General introduction to literature of the English-speaking Caribbean by reviewing its historical and geographical background. To analyze the historical process toward self-determination in the literature, the following topics are included: (1) alienation and the search for community, (2) "external" relationships (the ancestor, the kinsman, the other), and (3) form and language.

199. Special Studies in Afro-American Studies (2 to 4 units). To be arranged with faculty member who will direct the study. Prerequisites: 3.0 GPA in the major, junior or senior standing, consent of instructor. Intensive directed research project. Eight units may be applied toward major requirements.

Graduate Courses

M200A. Advanced Historiography: Afro-American. (Same as History M200V.) Seminar, three hours. May be repeated for credit.

Ms. Stevenson

200B. Seminar: Political Economy of Race. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Seminar on political economy, with special reference to black political economy and with focus on dynamics of allocation of wealth and power resources among social classes and racial and ethnic groups in the U.S. Presented in a context that is at once comparative and international, seminar emphasizes internationalism and transnationalism as well as the uniqueness of the Afro-American condition. Attempts to relate the black condition in the U.S. to the socioeconomic system of this country and to compare it to political, social, and economic conditions of African peoples elsewhere.

M200C. Selected Problems in Urban Sociology. (Same as Sociology M262.) Seminar. Prerequisite: consent of instructor.

Mr. Allen, Mr. Oliver

M200D. Afro-American Sociolinguistics: Black English. (Same as Anthropology M243Q.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Basic information on Black American English, an important minority dialect in the U.S. Social implications of minority dialects examined from perspectives of their genesis, maintenance, and social functions. General problems and issues in fields of sociolinguistics examined through a case study approach. Students required to conduct research in consultation with instructor and participate in group discussion.

Ms. Morgan

M200E. Studies in Afro-American Literature. (Same as English M262.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Intensive research and study of major themes, issues, and writers in Afro-American literature. Discussions and research on aesthetic, cultural, and social backgrounds of Afro-American writing. May be repeated for credit.

Ms. Smith, Mr. Yarborough

200F. African American Psychology. Seminar. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Survey of psychological literature as it pertains to persons of African American descent. Critical review of implications of "mainstream" research on African Americans, including discussion of research on the family, academic achievement, and psychological assessment (testing). Emphasis also on theoretical approaches advanced by African American scholars: African philosophy, perspectives on racism in psychology, and research in the black community.

C201A-C201Z. Special Topics in Afro-American Studies. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Variable topics. May be repeated for credit. Concurrently scheduled with courses C101A-C101Z.

M240. Assessment and Treatment of Afro-American Families. (Same as Psychiatry M240.) Seminar, three hours. Designed for both mental health trainees and graduate students interested in developing and refining skills in assessment and treatment of African American families within a sociocultural context.

Ms. Tucker, Ms. Wyatt (Sp)

241. Special Topics in Afro-American Studies. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Intensive research and study of major themes and issues in various areas of Afro-American studies.

270A. Survey of Afro-American Research. Seminar, three hours. Overview of research methodologies in humanities and social sciences, with firsthand reports from faculty in various fields. Introduction to research in and related to Afro-American studies and application of such research.

596. Directed Readings and Tutorials. Provides students with umbrella under which they can pursue specialized interests from which there is insufficient demand to warrant offering a formal course.

597. Preparation for M.A. Comprehensive Examination (4 or 8 units). Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. May not be applied toward M.A. course requirements. S/U grading.

598. Research for and Preparation of M.A. Thesis (4 or 8 units). Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. May not be applied toward M.A. course requirements. S/U grading.

Scope and Objectives

Because UCLA possesses a substantial number of faculty in the humanities and social sciences engaged in teaching and conducting research on American Indians, the nation's first interdisciplinary M.A. program in American Indian Studies was established here.

The program draws primarily on existing courses in the participating departments, where research and research methodologies are of primary concern. Students are exposed to Indian-related research in a number of different disciplines; demonstration of research skills is required. You will graduate with the training you need to teach Native American studies or to serve in an administrative capacity in Indian programs. The M.A. program is coordinated by the American Indian Studies Center and ranks among the top Indian studies programs in the country.

Admission

A bachelor's degree from an accredited undergraduate institution is required for admission to the M.A. program in American Indian Studies. You must demonstrate interest in American Indian studies either by formal coursework, independent study, or practical experience. As part of the application, you must submit a detailed account of your background, potential career plan, and interest in American Indian studies. Preference is given to individuals with undergraduate majors relevant to the proposed areas of concentration within the M.A. degree:

American Indian studies, anthropology, English, fine arts, history, linguistics, literature, or sociology.

Entering students must meet the University's minimum admission requirement of a 3.0 grade-point average in all work completed during the last two undergraduate years and in all prior graduate work. The Graduate Record Examination (GRE) is not required, but you are encouraged to take the examination and submit test results as part of the documents supporting your enrollment application. At least three faculty letters of recommendation must be submitted. You may obtain application forms and further information from the Committee to Administer the M.A. Degree in American Indian Studies, American Indian Studies Center, 3220 Campbell Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1548.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

The American Indian Studies M.A. is an interdepartmental program with 11 participating academic schools and departments: Anthropology, Art History, Education, English, History, Law, Library and Information Science, Linguistics, Music, Sociology, and Theater. The 11 disciplines are grouped into four areas of concentration: history and law; expressive arts; social relations; and language, literature, and folklore. Courses related to the American Indian Studies M.A. are also offered in the following departments and school: Political Science, Psychology, and Social Welfare.

Linguistics Requirement

Students in the M.A. program must successfully complete one of the following: (1) Linguistics 114, (2) Anthropology 243P, or (3) for native speakers of an American Indian language, an independent study course (approved by the instructor) in either linguistics or anthropology in which a structural knowledge of the student's language is learned. These courses are designed to show how American Indian languages and communicative norms are primary vehicles for understanding American Indian cultures.

Course Requirements

(1) A minimum of 10 courses is required, at least seven of which must be graduate courses. Four courses are required: American Indian Studies M200A, M200B, M200C (which ordinarily must be taken in the first year), and one of the linguistics requirement options described above, which must be taken by the end of the second year. In addition, one of the remaining six courses must be a graduate course concerned with research methodology.

(2) All M.A. candidates select one of the following areas of concentration: (a) history and law, (b) expressive arts, (c) social relations, (d) language, literature, and folklore. You can petition for optional combinations of interdisciplinary work through the program committee. In addition to the four required courses, you must complete a minimum of four courses in your area of concentration. Three of these must be graduate-level courses. Two additional courses are to be chosen from other areas of concentration. Courses must be selected from an approved list maintained by the program.

(3) Two courses in the 500 series may be applied toward the total course requirement; however, only one 596 course may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement.

Thesis or Comprehensive Examination Plan

You may select either (1) a thesis plan or (2) a comprehensive examination plan to complete the degree program. The committee members supervising the thesis or administering the comprehensive examination are selected by you with the consent of the program committee. Copies of the thesis must be submitted to each committee member by the fifth week of the term in which you expect to graduate. If you choose the comprehensive examination plan, you must demonstrate in a written and/or oral examination your competency in the major and minor areas of study.

Upper Division Course

197. Special Topics in American Indian Studies. Variable topics selected from the following: Myth and Folklore of Indian Societies; Contemporary American Indian Literature; Social Science Perspectives of American Indian Life; Law and the American Indian; History of American Indians (cultural area); Dance and Music of American Indians (cultural area); American Indian Policy. Consult Schedule of Classes for topics and instructors. May be repeated twice for credit. (F,W,Sp)

Graduate Courses

M200A. Advanced Historiography: American Indian Peoples. (Same as History M200W.) Seminar, three hours. Designed to familiarize students with major genres of literature related to American Indian history. Subjects include theories of Indian origins, historical demography, Euro-American attitudes toward Indian peoples, studies of U.S. Indian policy, and tribal histories. Standard theoretical approaches, including cultural ecology and dependency theory.

M200B. Cultural World Views of Native America. (Same as English M266.) Seminar, three hours. Exploration of written literary texts from oral cultures and other expressive cultural forms — dance, art, song, religious and medicinal ritual — in selected Native American societies, as these traditional and tribal contexts have been translated into contemporary literary texts (fiction, poetry, essay, and drama). Survey, from secondary sources, of interdisciplinary methodological approaches taken from literary analysis, structural anthropology, folklore, linguistics, and ethnomusicology.

Ms. Allen, Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Sarris

M200C. Contemporary Issues of the American Indian. (Same as Anthropology M269 and Sociology M275.) Introduction to most important issues facing American Indians as individuals, communities, tribes, and organizations in the contemporary world, building on historical background presented in course M200A and cultural and expressive experience of American Indians presented in course M200B.

Mr. Champagne

201. Topics in American Indian Studies. Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor.

Scope and Objectives

Anthropology, the broadest of the social sciences, is the study of humankind. One of the strengths of anthropology as a discipline is its "holistic" or integrative approach; it links the life sciences and the humanities and has strong ties with disciplines ranging from biology and psychology to linguistics, political science, and the fine arts. Anthropological study is appropriate for people with a wide variety of interests: human cultures and civilizations both present and past, human and animal behavior, particular regions of the world such as Africa, Asia, Latin America, Oceania, etc.

Archaeology is diverse in both methodology and geographic coverage. The greatest strengths within the department lie in the study of cultural evolution, complex societies, hunters/gatherers, iconography, craft specialization, quantitative analysis, and political economy and include major programs focused on Western North America, the high cultures of Mesoamerica and South America, Europe, Africa, and the Caribbean.

Biological anthropology is a comprehensive program on evolutionary anthropology, with emphasis on the behavioral and reproductive ecology of humans and other primates. It includes training in evolutionary theory, behavioral ecology, human ethology, reproductive physiology and ecology, paleoanthropology, primate behavior and evolution, and mathematical modeling. Faculty members have engaged in fieldwork on several continents, particularly Africa, where ongoing projects include work on human reproductive ecology, dietary and subsistence ecology, and human ethology.

Linguistic anthropology is an interdisciplinary field which addresses the manifold ways in which communication and culture mutually define one another in different communities worldwide. Linguistic anthropologists at UCLA have a variety of backgrounds and research interests which include the ethnography of face-to-face communication, language contact and change, verbal art and performance, and language and education. Courses are offered in urban sociolinguistics, ethnographic approaches to discourse analysis, field methods, and conversational analysis, as well as in cross-cultural pragmatics (including visual aspects of communication).

Sociocultural anthropology concerns the examination and understanding of social systems and cultural perceptions, and the human capacities which have enabled them. Its goal is to understand their operation in specific settings and to understand the experience of individuals who live in these diverse systems. Faculty members have engaged in fieldwork in almost every area of the world, but most notably in Africa, South America, East and Southeast Asia, and Oceania. They have also engaged in ethnographic research among Americans with diverse ethnic identities and in various institutional settings.

Cutting across the four fields are three other categories of course offerings: applied anthropology, regional cultures, and history, theory, and method.

The department offers Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science degrees in Anthropology for undergraduates; the graduate program leads to the Master of Arts and Ph.D. degrees. Studies in anthropology are particularly valuable for students planning careers in which an understanding of human behavior and cultural diversity is desirable, such as business, education, law, medicine, nursing, public health, social welfare, and urban planning. Because of its breadth of outlook, anthropology also offers an ideal basis for those seeking a general education in our increasingly interdependent world.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

Preparation for the Major

Required: Anthropology 7, 8, 9, and one elective from 10, 15, 33, 60, 60P, 80. All courses must be taken for a letter grade, and you must maintain an overall 2.0 GPA.

The Major

The major is designed for students interested in an anthropological understanding of human behavior. One of the strengths of anthropology is its cross-cultural "holistic" and integrative approach with many fields, such as biology, history, linguistics, the social sciences, and many of the humanities.

To provide a comprehensive understanding of the discipline as a whole, you must take two courses in the sociocultural anthropology field and one course in each of the other three fields (see "Scope and Objectives" above). One upper division survey core course is offered in each field (two in sociocultural anthropology), but you may take any course in the given area to fulfill this requirement. All courses must be taken for a letter grade, and you must maintain an overall 2.0 GPA.

You must complete 14 four-unit courses as follows:

- (1) Two upper division courses in the sociocultural anthropology field and one in each of the other three fields (archaeology, biological anthropology, and linguistic anthropology).
- (2) One upper division course in regional cultures.
- (3) Four additional upper division anthropology courses.
- (4) Four courses in related fields selected from a list maintained in the department.

Students considering graduate work in anthropology are strongly encouraged to take at least one course in the history and theory of anthropology and one course in methodology in addition to the upper division core courses in the four fields.

Concentrations for the Major

centration, the requirements for the major must still be satisfied. It is possible to use courses within your specified concentration to fulfill overlapping requirements for the major. If you fulfill a concentration as part of your B.A. degree requirements, you will receive a notation on your transcript certifying completion of the concentration. Exceptions to the requirements below are by petition only. More detailed information on the concentrations is available from the undergraduate adviser.

(2) Biological Anthropology — Anthropology 120; one quantitative methods course from 80, 180, 186; one methods course from 115P, M116Q, 117, 117P, 124R, C126P, 129P, 143; one human biology and behavioral ecology course from 124, 124Q, 186P, M189A, M189B; one paleoanthropology course from 121A, 121B, 121C, or both 12 and 129Q (credit will not be granted for both courses 7 and 12); one human genetics course from 125, Biology 108, 135, CM156; one primate behavior course from Anthropology 128A, 128B, Biology 129

(d) Psychocultural and Medical Subconcentration — Primary courses: Anthropology 135A, 135B, 135C, 135T; additional courses: 135S, M168

Honors Program

The honors program provides research-oriented students with opportunity to engage in original research and analysis under the close supervision of faculty members and culminates in an honors thesis. To be admitted you must have junior standing and have completed at least two upper division anthropology courses and Anthropology 197H (taken in Winter Quarter of your junior year). You should have a cumulative GPA of 3.0 overall and a 3.5 cumulative GPA in your upper division anthropology courses. The application for admission must be submitted to the honors committee at the end of course 197H. The proposal, research, analysis, and writing of your paper take place over three terms through courses 199HA, 199HB, and 199HC. Course 199HA should be taken in Spring Quarter of your junior year; 199HB and 199HC are taken in Fall and Winter Quarters of your senior year. Exceptions to the above schedule are by petition only. Contact the undergraduate adviser early in your studies for more information.

Bachelor of Science Degree

Preparation for the Major

Required: Anthropology 7 or 12, 8, 9, 10 or 15; Biology 5, 9, 100A, 108; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL; Mathematics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 31A and 31B; Physics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 6A, 6B, and 6C. All courses must be taken for a letter grade, and you must maintain an overall 2.0 GPA.

The Major

The major provides an overview of human evolution and is designed to prepare students for careers in anthropology and the health sciences, including medicine, dentistry, public health, and nursing. All courses must be taken for a letter grade, and you must maintain an overall 2.0 GPA.

You must complete 16 four-unit courses as follows:

(1) Two upper division courses in the sociocultural anthropology field and one in each of the other three fields (archaeology, biological anthropology, and linguistic anthropology).

(2) One upper division course in regional cultures.

(3) Two statistics courses (sequential recommended).

(4) Four additional upper division anthropology courses.

(5) Four four-unit courses in related fields selected from a list maintained in the department.

Specialization in Computing

Majors in either anthropology bachelor's degree program may select a specialization in computing by (1) completing Program in Computing 10A, 10B, and 10C or 15, (2) completing one course from Anthropology 180 or 186, (3) completing either a 199 course that focuses on the integration of computer methods with anthropological studies or one course from Program in Computing 60, Computer Science 172, or Mathematics 61, or an equivalent course (subject to approval of the departmental computer committee), and (4) satisfying all the other requirements for a bachelor's degree in the specified major. You graduate with a bachelor's degree in your major and a specialization in computing. Interested students should contact the undergraduate adviser.

Graduate Study

Admission

Admission to the graduate program in anthropology is limited to Fall Quarter. The department does not require an undergraduate major in anthropology, though this is desirable. Promising students with a B.A. or M.A. in another field may be admitted, in which case a program of background studies based on previous training and current objectives is formulated. Knowledge of a foreign language is not required for admission, but completion of the language requirement before beginning work is highly recommended, and such students are at an advantage in the selection process.

Applications and all supporting material must be submitted by December 15, 1994, to be considered for admission for Fall Quarter 1995.

UCLA Graduate Application Processing (P.O. Box 23895, Oakland, CA 94623-0895) requires submission of an official application (with fees) and official transcripts of record, in duplicate, from each college or university at which work has been completed.

In addition, you must submit the following directly to the Graduate Counselor, Department of Anthropology, 341 Haines Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1553:

(1) Three letters of recommendation (preferably from anthropologists).

(2) Graduate Record Examination (GRE) scores.

(3) A research or term paper.

(4) Statement of purpose.

The department requires two faculty members to sponsor an applicant before admission is recommended.

For further information on the departmental program, a graduate syllabus may be obtained without charge by writing to the above departmental address.

Master of Arts Degree

Foreign Language Requirement

M.A. language requirements may be met by

- (1) Passing the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with a score of 500 or better or
- (2) Passing a departmental examination or other demonstrations of proficiency in a foreign language by petition to the department chair and the dean of the Graduate Division.

Students whose native language is not English may petition to waive the requirement. Formal written petition for such waiver must be submitted to the guidance committee, department chair, and the Graduate Division.

Core Course Requirements

You must demonstrate basic knowledge in the four fields by one or a combination of the following: (1) passing the core course with a grade of B or better, (2) petitioning that work taken elsewhere constitutes the equivalent of such courses, or (3) passing a special examination in each, in Spring Quarter of your first year in residence. Courses taken while in graduate standing to meet these field requirements may also serve to meet course unit demands for the M.A. degree.

Course Requirements

The minimum course load is three courses (12 units) per term, but this requirement may be waived by petition to the department chair. An M.A. degree requires 10 courses (40 units) taken for a letter grade with a minimum 3.0 grade-point average.

- (1) Four courses may be upper division (100 series).
- (2) One course must be a graduate core seminar in your chosen subfield of specialization (e.g., Anthropology M201A for archaeology, course 202 for biological anthropology, course 203 for sociocultural anthropology, course 204 for linguistic anthropology).
- (3) You must take courses 200A-200B, which may be applied toward the 40-unit degree requirement if taken for a letter grade.
- (4) In addition to the appropriate graduate core seminar, you must take five other graduate seminars (200 series).
- (5) Three courses may be outside the major with consent of the guidance committee.
- (6) Two courses may be anthropology independent studies (see department for course numbers) with consent of the guidance committee.

Eight units of course 596 taken for a letter grade may be applied toward the total M.A. course requirement, with four of these units applicable toward the minimum graduate course requirement.

Thesis

By your fourth term of study, you select a thesis committee of departmental faculty to supervise your research and writing. The committee, as well as your thesis topic, must be approved by the department and the dean of the Graduate Division. Prior to completing the M.A. degree requirements, you file a Petition for Advancement to Candidacy form with the Graduate Division. The approved thesis must be typed and filed according to University regulations; information on regulations and procedures is available from the Graduate Division. Evaluation of the thesis provides the basis for the thesis committee's recommendation and departmental faculty vote regarding both the acceptability of the thesis for the M.A. degree and admission into the doctoral program.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

If you are entering the department with an M.A. in Anthropology from another university or in a field other than anthropology, you must satisfy all master's degree requirements with the exception of the thesis. To fulfill this requirement, you may submit your prior master's thesis or a research paper written as a graduate student (whether or not in anthropology). Only after satisfying these requirements are you admitted into the Ph.D. program.

Foreign Language Requirement

You must satisfy the Ph.D. language requirement before formally nominating the doctoral committee and before taking the qualifying examinations. Any language useful for field study and/or library research is acceptable. You must submit to your departmental committee a comprehensive annotated bibliography and demonstrate familiarity with its contents by taking a written or oral examination. The format of the examination is determined by your doctoral committee. Students who speak English as a second language may waive the language requirement by petition to their committee, the department chair, and the Graduate Division. Under unusual circumstances, the department will consider alternate means of fulfilling the requirement.

Course Requirements

You must be in residence for one year between receipt of the M.A. degree and advancement to doctoral candidacy. During this time, coursework must be done with at least three different members of the faculty. You must be enrolled in a minimum of 12 units (this requirement may be waived by petition to the department chair) or be on an official leave of absence.

Qualifying Examinations

Qualifying examinations are conducted in two parts: (1) a written examination and (2) the University Oral Qualifying Examination. The timing of the examinations is arranged with members of the doctoral committee, but they may not take place earlier than the third term after receiving the M.A. degree. The written examination must be completed within the first eight weeks of the given term; the University Oral Qualifying Examination is expected to be completed in the same term, but no later than the following term.

The format for the written examination is determined by the doctoral committee which examines you in three subfields of your choice. Two of these three subfields are selected from a list available in the department; the third is specific to your needs, interests, and dissertation plans. After you successfully complete the written examination, the doctoral committee administers the University Oral Qualifying Examination, in which you are required to present a defense of your dissertation proposal. The committee determines the conditions for reexamination should you fail either examination.

Final Oral Review

The department requires a review of the completed dissertation by the doctoral committee as a whole and a public presentation of the results of the dissertation.

Lower Division Courses

7. Human Evolution. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Required as preparation for B.A. degree. Not open for credit to students with credit for course 12. Evolutionary processes and evolutionary past of the human species. Mr. Boyd, Ms. Silk

8. Archaeology: An Introduction. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Required as preparation for both bachelor's degrees. General survey of field and laboratory methods, theory, and major findings of anthropological archaeology, including case-study guest lectures presented by several campus archaeologists.

9. Sociocultural Anthropology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Required as preparation for both bachelor's degrees. Introduction to study of culture and society in comparative perspective. Examples from societies around the world to illustrate basic principles of formation, structure, and distribution of human institutions. Of special concern is the contribution and knowledge that cultural diversity makes toward understanding the problems of the modern world. P/NP or letter grading.

10. Principles of Human Evolution: Genetic Basis. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Required as preparation for B.S. degree. Human population biology in the conceptual framework of evolutionary processes. Emphasis on genetic basis of evolution, population biology, and diversity among living populations.

12. Principles of Human Evolution: Comparative Analysis. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Required as preparation for B.S. degree. Not open for credit to students with credit for course 7. Human population biology in the conceptual framework of evolutionary processes. Emphasis on comparative primate behavior, structural anatomy, and the fossil record.

15. Human Biology and Behavior. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Human biology and behavior through the life cycle from conception to senescence. Discussion of natural selection, sexual selection, and life history theory. Factors influencing variation in fertility and mortality: reproductive ecology, growth, development, and aging.

Mr. Bailey, Ms. Peacock

33. Culture and Communication. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Introduction to ways in which culture and communication shape each other, with emphasis on importance of language as a symbolic and practical guide to people's behavior and understanding of each other's actions. Topics include language socialization, cross talk, and verbal and nonverbal communication. Mr. Duranti (F)

34. Introduction to Urban Speech Communities. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Introduction to study of speech communities in metropolitan areas, with special focus on communities in Los Angeles. Emphasis on ways in which communities share and incorporate speech norms of urban society while maintaining rules for conduct and interpretation of speech within specific speech communities. Topics include language and identity, socialization, social dialects, and communication. Ms. Morgan

60. Anthropology for Today. Lecture, three hours. Lectures, films, readings, and discussions, with focus on critical evaluation of anthropological method and theory to understand cultural aspects of a selection of pressing problems in the modern world. Examination of such domestic issues as poverty and social inequality, educational reform, public health and mental health, conflict and criminality, as well as such Third World issues as economic development, environmental protection, population control, political modernization, diplomacy, warfare, revolution, refugee and disaster relief, minority rights, and protection of indigenous peoples. Survey of ethical issues and career opportunities in applied anthropology. Mr. Hammond

60P. Internships in Applied Anthropology. Seminar, three hours. Enforced requisite: course 60. Designed to give students firsthand experience working in agencies in public and private sectors (e.g., refugee relief centers, drug rehabilitation programs, community development agencies, mental health clinics, etc.) selected for their relevance to individual students' prospective professional interests. Eight to 12 hours per week, complemented by weekly seminars, field evaluations, and preparation of a field journal. Mr. Hammond

80. Introduction to Quantitative Methods. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Data analysis as a way to reason with quantitative information. Topics include description (frequency distribution tables, histograms), population specification (mean and standard deviation, normal distribution), samples and estimation procedures (central limit theorem), and hypothesis testing (t-test, chi-square test). Mr. Read

88A-88Z. Lower Division Seminars. (Formerly numbered 88.) Seminar, three hours. Variable topics; consult Schedule of Classes or department for topics to be offered in a specific term. P/NP or letter grading: 88A. Diversity in American Cultures. Discussion of readings, followed by seminar presentations, with focus on cross-cultural analysis of attributes common to all societal forms in which differences culturally defined as significant affect both individual life chances and societal well-being. Mr. Hammond

Upper Division Courses

All upper division courses with letter designations (A, B, P, Q, etc.) may be taken independently unless otherwise stated.

Archaeology

110. World Archaeology. Prerequisites: course 8 and upper division standing, or consent of instructor. Broad survey of human culture history from its Stone Age beginnings to establishment of the primary civilizations of the Old and New Worlds. Intended for students with general interest in archaeology and in an anthropological approach to study of the past. Mr. Sackett

111. Study of Archaeology. Survey of contemporary prehistoric archaeology. Emphasis on what archaeologists do, and how and why they do it. Contributions of archaeology to the modern world. Intended for students with a desire to explore the nature of anthropological archaeology. (Core course for archaeology field.) Mr. Hill

112. Old Stone Age Archaeology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 8 or consent of instructor. Development of Paleolithic cultural traditions in Europe, Africa, Asia, and the New World. Emphasis on the ordering and interpretation of archaeological data, Pleistocene geology and chronology, and relationship between human cultural and biological evolution. Mr. Sackett

113P. Archaeology of North America. Lecture, three hours. Prehistory of North American Indians; evolution of Indian societies from earliest times to (and including) contemporary Indians; approaches and methods of American archaeology.

113Q. Prehistory and Ethnography of California. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 8 or 9. From earliest Californians through 10,000 years of history, study of diversity in California's original peoples. Aspects of technology, ideology, ecology, and social/political organization. Historic impacts on California Indians by Euro-Americans. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Arnold

114P. Ancient Civilizations of Western Middle America (Nahuatl Sphere). Pre-Hispanic and Conquest period native cultures of Western Middle America, as revealed by archaeology and early colonial writings in Spanish and Indian languages. Toltec/Aztec and Mixteca civilizations and their predecessors, with emphasis on sociopolitical systems, economic patterns, religion, and aesthetic and intellectual achievements. Mr. Leventhal

114Q. Ancient Civilizations of Eastern Middle America (Maya Sphere). Pre-Hispanic and Conquest period native cultures of Eastern Middle America, as revealed by archaeology and early colonial writings in Spanish and Indian languages. Lowland and Highland Maya civilizations and their predecessors, with emphasis on sociopolitical systems, economic patterns, religion, and aesthetic and intellectual achievements. Mr. Leventhal

114R. Ancient Civilizations of Andean South America. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 8 or 9. Pre-Hispanic and Conquest period native cultures of Andean South America, as revealed by archaeology and early Spanish writing. The Inca and their predecessors in Peru, with emphasis on sociopolitical systems, economic patterns, religion, and aesthetic and intellectual achievements. Mr. Donnan

115P. Archaeological Field Training (4 to 8 units). Lecture, two hours; fieldwork, eight or more hours. Prerequisites: course 8, consent of instructor. Procedures of archaeological excavation, mapping, stratigraphy, collecting, and recording of archaeological data (field class conducted off campus). Summer field session in various locations set by individual instructor. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Arnold (Sp, Sum)

C115R. Strategy of Archaeology. (Formerly numbered 115R.) Seminar, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Introduction to problem formulation, theory, and method in archaeology, with emphasis on development of research designs. Focus on how archaeological research is conceived and planned, with consideration of differing viewpoints and their usefulness. Concurrently scheduled with course C215F. Mr. Hill

M115S. Historical Archaeology. (Same as History M103.) Survey of aims and methods of historical archaeology as practiced on both sides of the Atlantic, with case studies from North America, the Caribbean, Africa, and Europe. Mr. Posnansky

M116Q. Dating Techniques in Environmental Sciences and Archaeology. (Same as Geography M178.) Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Introduction to scientific dating methods such as radiocarbon dating, radiation damage methods, biological dating techniques, and magnetic dating, and applications in environmental sciences, archaeology, and physical anthropology. Mr. Berger

117. Archaeological Materials Analysis: Laboratory Methods. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: course 8. Training in archaeological analysis of prehistoric cultural materials, including chipped and ground stone artifacts, vertebrate fauna, shellfish, ceramics, ornaments and beads, and craft production materials from sites worldwide. Introduction to electronic measurement instrumentation and computerization of archaeological data. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Arnold (W)

118A. Museum Studies. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Method and theory of museum operation. Discussion and demonstration of acquisition accession, storage, photography, conservation, and exhibition. Analysis of museum research, publication, and teaching, as well as museum administration and funding. Lectures and demonstrations structured to illustrate how various aspects of museum operation are interrelated. Mr. Donnan and the Museum Staff

118B. Museum Studies. Prerequisites: course 118A, consent of instructor. Two areas of museum operation are selected by students from those discussed and demonstrated in course 118A. Students are then required to develop expertise in these areas through a combination of library research and a series of assignments carried out in the museum. Mr. Donnan and the Museum Staff

Biological Anthropology

120. Survey of Biological Anthropology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 10, 12, or equivalent. Limited to majors and graduate students in anthropology. Survey of biological anthropology including all major subareas. Lecture/seminar format requires attendance at a recitation section in addition to lectures. (Core course for biological field.) Mr. Bailey, Mr. Boyd

120G. Biological Anthropology in Review. Lecture, three hours; seminar, three hours. Corequisite: lecture portion of course 7. Limited to graduate students in anthropology. Designed for anthropology students who have a deficiency in biological anthropology. Seminar discussion based on basic evolutionary principles, behavior of nonhuman primates, hominid evolutionary history, and contemporary human variation. Mr. Boyd, Ms. Silk

121A. Primate Fossil Record. Lecture, three hours. Recommended (but not prerequisite): courses 10, 12. Course 121A should be taken before 121B and 121C. Introduction to method and theory in paleoanthropology. Primate evolution, Cretaceous through the Miocene.

121B. The Australopithecines. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Recommended: courses 10, 12, 121A. Morphology, ecology, and behavior of the genus Australopithecus. History of their discoveries and their place in human evolution. Ms. Kennedy

121C. Evolution of the Genus Homo. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Recommended: courses 10, 12, 121A, 121B. Origin and evolution of the genus Homo, including archaic sapiens and Neanderthals. Morphology, ecology, and behavior of these groups. Course ends with appearance of modern man. Ms. Kennedy

124. Evolution and Biology of Human Behavior. Comparative survey of behavior patterns of preliterate and Paleolithic peoples and those of nonhuman primates. Assessment of biological variables fundamental to human and prehuman behavior with regard to theories on evolution of human culture. Mr. Blurton Jones

124P. Evolution of Human Sexual Behavior. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Recommended: course 7 or 10 or 12 or equivalent. Examination of human sexual relations and social behavior from an evolutionary perspective. Emphasis on theories and evidence for differences between men and women in their patterns of growth, maturation, fertility, mortality, parenting, and relations with members of the opposite sex. Mr. Bailey

124Q. Physiology of Human Behavior. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: upper division standing and/or consent of instructor. Overview of neural, physiological, and endocrine substrates of a variety of human behaviors, including sexual behavior, aggression, language, and affiliative behavior. Emphasis on evolutionary origins, developmental pathways, and cross-cultural expressions of behaviors examined. Focus on human behavior, with evidence from animal literature as well. Ms. Peacock

124R. Laboratory Methods in Human Behavioral Endocrinology (6 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours (plus time to complete project). Prerequisite: course 124Q or consent of instructor. Introduction to laboratory methods in neuroendocrinology for students in social and behavioral sciences. Emphasis on field-compatible methods. Design and execution of a small research project. Ms. Peacock

125. Genetics of Human Diversity. Lecture, three hours. Survey of human biological diversity. Emphasis on genetics at the population level for both discrete and quantitative variation. Analytic methods and evolutionary hypotheses.

C126P. Introduction to Field Methods in Human Ecology. (Formerly numbered 126P.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division or graduate standing. Survey of methods used in anthropological investigations emphasizing human biology and human ecology. Study design, physical assessment of nutritional status, growth and maturation, demographic surveys, systematic observation of behavior, energy expenditure, subsistence ecology, data analysis. Demonstrations and labs. Course fee required. Concurrently scheduled with course C226P. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Bailey, Ms. Peacock

127P. Primate Evolution. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Survey of primate paleontological and evolutionary record, encompassing prosimians, New and Old World monkeys, and hominoids. Attendant aspects of paleoecology and behavior.

128A. Primate Behavior Nonhuman to Human. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Review of primate behavior as known from laboratory and field studies. Theoretical issues of animal behavior, with special reference to nonhuman primates. Discussion of human behavior as the product of such evolutionary processes. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Silk

128B. Behavioral Ecology of Primates. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 128A. Analysis of evolution of sociality, sexual strategies, parenting behavior, fighting and contests, and altruism and cooperation in primate species. Ms. Silk

128P. Primate Behavioral Neurobiology: Evolutionary and Comparative Perspectives. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 7 or 12. Strongly recommended: course 128A, Biology 5, Chemistry 11A. Survey of use of nonhuman primates to model neurobiological bases of complex behavioral and emotional states in nonhuman primates. Attention to empathy, xenophobia, aggression, and social cognition. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Raleigh

129P. Laboratory Methods in Biological Anthropology: Skeletal. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 10, 12, consent of instructor. Limited to majors and graduate students. Laboratory methodology and analysis of human variation on skeletal material. Ms. Kennedy

129Q. Paleopathology. Lecture, one hour; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisites: course 129P, upper division standing, consent of instructor. Investigation into diseases, trauma, health status, subsistence activities, and ethnic mutilation (i.e., cranial deformation, trepanation) through analysis of human skeletal materials. Course has worldwide scope, with some emphasis on the New World. Ms. Kennedy

Cultural Anthropology

130. Study of Culture. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: one lower division sociocultural anthropology course or equivalent, upper division standing. The 20th-century elaboration and development of the concept of culture. Examination of five major paradigms: culture as a human capacity, as patterns and products of behavior, as systems of meaning and cognition, as generative structure and semiotic system, as a component in social action and reality construction. (Core course for cultural field.)

132. Technology and Environment. Significance of material culture in archaeology and ethnology; problems of invention and the acceptance of innovations; ecological and sociological concomitants of technological systems; selected problems in material culture. Mr. Earle

133R. Aesthetic Systems. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Provides framework for a cross-cultural understanding of aesthetic phenomena that meets the requirements of anthropological research. Human capacities for aesthetic experience; sociocultural formation of aesthetic production; ethno-aesthetics; experiential dimension of aesthetic production.

135A-135B. Introduction to Psychological Anthropology. Lecture, three hours. P/NP or letter grading:

135A. Historical Development. Prerequisite: course 9 or consent of instructor. Survey of the field of psychological anthropology, with emphasis on early foundations and historical development of the field. Topics include study of personality, pathology and deviance, altered states of consciousness, cognition, motivation, and emotion in different cultural settings. Mr. Hollan

135B. Current Topics and Research. Prerequisite: upper division standing or consent of instructor. Survey of the field of psychological anthropology, with emphasis on current topics and research. Topics include study of personality, pathology and deviance, altered states of consciousness, cognition, motivation, and emotion in different cultural settings. Mr. Hollan

135C. Seminar: Psychocultural Studies. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: course 9 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Firsthand exposure to current research in psychocultural studies. Various university scholars are brought in to discuss their on-going research. Using these presentations as models, students develop proposals for future research. P/NP or letter grading.

135S. Anthropology of Deviance and Abnormality. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 9 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Relationship between culture and recognition of, responses toward, and forms of deviant and abnormal behavior. Mr. Edgerton

M136Q. Laboratory for Naturalistic Observations: Developing Skills and Techniques. (Same as Psychiatry M112.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Skill of observing and recording behavior in natural settings, with emphasis on field training and practice in observing behavior. Group and individual projects. Discussion of some of the uses of observations and their implications for research in social sciences. Mr. Weisner (W)

138. Methods and Techniques of Ethnography. Introduction to problems and procedures of extracting cultural data from documentary sources and their interpretation and analysis. Relevant documentary sources of various New World regions are selected as case histories to illustrate more concretely problems and challenges in this major area of anthropological concern.

139. Field Methods in Cultural Anthropology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Corequisite: course 139L. Introduction to skills and tools of data ascertainment through fieldwork in cultural anthropology. Emphasis on techniques, methods, and concepts of ethnographical research and how basic observational information is systematized for presentation, analysis, and cross-cultural comparison.

139L. Field Methods in Cultural Anthropology. Laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Corequisite: course 139. Supervised practicum of field methods in cultural anthropology. Field methods and techniques presented in course 139 practiced and applied in simulated field situations. Discussion of styles of presenting ethnographical information.

Linguistic Anthropology

M140. Language in Culture. (Same as Linguistics M146.) Prerequisite: upper division standing or consent of instructor. Study of language as an aspect of culture; relation of habitual thought and behavior to language; and language and the classification of experience. Holistic approach to study of language, with emphasis on relationship of linguistic anthropology to fields of biological, cultural, and social anthropology, as well as archaeology. (Core course for linguistics field.) Mr. Kroskrity

141. Ethnography of Everyday Speech. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 33, upper division standing or consent of instructor. Course has two interrelated objectives: (1) to introduce students to ethnography of communication — description and analysis of situated communicative behavior — and the sociocultural knowledge which it reflects and (2) to train students to recognize, describe, and analyze relevant linguistic, proxemic, and kinesic aspects of face-to-face interaction. (Alternates yearly with courses 142A-142B and 143.) Mr. Duranti, Mr. Kroskrity (Sp)

142A-142B. Microethnography of Communication. Lecture, three hours. Course 142A or Sociology CM124A or consent of instructor is prerequisite to 142B. Students make primary records (sound tape, videotape, or film) of naturally occurring social interactions which are analyzed in class for interactive tasks, resources, and accomplishments displayed. Laboratory and fieldwork outside of class and minimal fees to offset costs of equipment maintenance and insurance required. (Alternates yearly with courses 141 and 143.)

143. Field Methods in Linguistic Anthropology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: Linguistics 20 or prior experience in linguistics. Practice in eliciting linguistic data from informants. Initial focus on phonetic transcription and phonological structures; introduction to skills and strategies pertinent to morphological, syntactic, and textual analysis. Practice with native speakers of non-Indo-European languages is normally an important aspect of student participation. P/NP or letter grading. (Alternates yearly with courses 141 and 142A-142B.)

Mr. Duranti, Mr. Kroskrity

144. American Indian Ethnolinguistics and Sociolinguistics. Prerequisite: prior coursework in either anthropology, linguistics, or American Indian studies. Introduction and comparative analysis of sociocultural aspects of language use in Native North American Indian speech communities. Specific foci include both micro- and macro-sociolinguistic topics. Micro-sociolinguistic topics are comprised of such issues as multilingualism, cultural differences regarding appropriate communicative behavior and variation within speech communities (e.g., male and female speech, baby talk, ceremonial speech, etc.). Macro-sociolinguistic considerations include language contact and its relationship to language change and language in American Indian education.

Mr. Kroskrity

M145. Afro-American Sociolinguistics: Black English. (Formerly numbered 145.) (Same as Afro-American Studies M166.) Lecture, three hours. Basic information on Black American English, an important minority dialect in the U.S. Social implications of minority dialects examined from perspectives of their genesis, maintenance, and social functions. General problems and issues in fields of sociolinguistics examined through a case-study approach.

Ms. Morgan

146. Language and Culture of Polynesia: Past, Present, and Future. Lecture, three hours. Introduction to Polynesian cultures and languages, with particular emphasis on past and present sociocultural systems, patterns of language structure and language use, verbal art, language socialization strategies, and forms of cultural assimilation and resistance to European contact. Fieldwork on contemporary Polynesian cultures in U.S. urban areas.

Mr. Duranti

Social Anthropology

150. Study of Social Systems. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9 or consent of instructor. Introduction to more specialized social anthropology courses. Evaluation of variation in sociocultural systems and how societies are organized and social relations maintained. Basic frameworks of anthropological analysis; historical context and development of social anthropology discipline.

Ms. Levine, Ms. Simons

151. Marriage, Family, and Kinship. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9. Survey of marital patterns, descent, and family structure in a range of societies. Emphasis on relationship between kinship and other aspects of the sociocultural system and on importance of kinship for general anthropological research.

Ms. Levine

152. Politics: Tribe, State, Nation. Lecture, three hours. Cross-cultural examination of politics and political organization. Law and the maintenance of order; corporate groups; ideology. Relations of political institutions to other institutions of society and to issues of identity and representation.

Ms. Simons

153. Evolution of Human Societies. Lecture, three hours. Review of economic and ecological approaches to studying organization of production and exchange. Economic life viewed from three perspectives: adaptation, decision making, and social structure. Comparative theories discussed in context of ethnographic evidence from a wide variety of cultural systems.

Mr. Earle, Mr. Johnson

M154. Women in Culture and Society. (Formerly numbered M163.) (Same as Women's Studies M154.) Lecture, three hours. Open to upper division social sciences majors. Comparative study of women's lives globally and locally from an anthropological perspective. Critical review of relevant theoretical and practical issues using ethnography, case studies, and student research and presentation. P/NP or letter grading.

Ms. Sacks

155. Women's Voices: Their Critique of Anthropology of Japan. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: introductory sociocultural anthropology course. The anthropology of Japan has long viewed Japan as a homogeneous whole. Restoration of diversity and contradiction in it by listening to voices of Japanese women in various historical contexts. P/NP or letter grading.

Ms. Tamanoi

M155Q. Women and Social Movements. (Formerly numbered M155.) (Same as Women's Studies M160.) Lecture/discussion, three hours. Recommended (but not prerequisite): prior women's studies or anthropology courses. Comparative studies of social movements (e.g., nationalist, socialist, liberal/reform), beginning with Russia and China and including Cuba, Algeria, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique, Nicaragua, and Iran. Analysis of women's participation in social transformations and the centrality of gender interests. P/NP or letter grading.

Ms. Hale

156. Comparative Religion. Survey of various methodologies in comparative study of religious ideologies and action systems, including understanding particular religions through descriptive and structural approaches, and identification of social and psychological factors which may account for variation in religious systems cross-culturally.

158. Hunting and Gathering Societies. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9. Survey of hunting and gathering societies. Examination of their distinctive features from both an ecological and cultural viewpoint. Discussion of the possibility of developing a general framework for synthesizing these two viewpoints. Use of this synthesis as a basis for illustrating the relevance of hunting and gathering societies as an understanding of complex societies.

Mr. Read

158P. Pastoral Nomads. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9 or 150 or consent of instructor. Survey of pastoral nomad societies. Consideration of environmental and social demands of livestock domestication and production. Focus on ecological features, cultural practices, and social organization, with special attention to historical interactions between pastoral nomads and settled peoples.

Ms. Simons

159. Warfare and Conflict. Lecture, three hours. Examination of conflict and violent confrontation as these have been treated in anthropological literature. Cross-cultural comparison of institutions such as raids, feuds, ritual warfare. Consideration of application of anthropology to study of militaries, modern warfare, and large-scale ethnic conflict.

Ms. Simons

Applied Anthropology

161. Development Anthropology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 9 and upper division standing, or consent of instructor. Comparative study of planned and unplanned development, in particular as it affects rural societies. Emphasis on impact of capital, technological change and gender differences, economic differentiation and class, urban/rural relations, and migration. Discussion of theoretical issues in light of case studies.

162. Contemporary American Indian Problems. Contemporary problems of the American Indian both on and off the reservation. Topics include self-determination, land claims, activism, urban Indians, and role of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

M162P. Destruction and Survival of Indigenous Societies. (Same as World Arts and Cultures M162P.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9 or upper division standing or consent of instructor. Clarification of concepts and forms of destruction and survival; analysis directed to different processes threatening the institutions of a group and its survival. Exploration of current theories of ethnocide and genocide for their relevance and validity. P/NP or letter grading.

M164. The Afro-American Experience in the U.S. (Same as Afro-American Studies M164.) Promotes understanding of contemporary sociocultural forms among Afro-Americans in the U.S. by presenting a comparative and diachronic perspective on the Afro-American experience in the New World. Emphasis on utilization of anthropological concepts and methods in understanding the origins and maintenance of particular patterns of adaptation among black Americans.

Ms. Morgan

165. Demographic Problems in Nonindustrial Societies. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9. Dynamic interaction between environment, cultural belief, social structure, and population in hunting and gathering, pastoral, horticultural, and agricultural societies. Principal theories of population change and current issues in population policy considered in light of the anthropological evidence.

Ms. Levine

167. Urban Anthropology. Open to upper division majors in social sciences, and others with consent of instructor. Survey of urbanization throughout the world, with emphasis on urban adaptation of rural migrants. Special focus on problems of rural/urban migration of ethnic minority groups and subsequent adaptation of them within the U.S. explored in terms of methods and perspectives of anthropology.

M168. Health in Culture and Society. (Same as Nursing M158.) Prerequisite: upper division standing. Examination of theories and methods of medical anthropology in relation to cross-cultural health systems, role networks, attitude and belief systems of the participants. Emphasis on interaction networks in health care systems.

Regional Cultures

Africa

171. Sub-Saharan Africa. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing or consent of instructor. Issues of ecology and political economy; continuing impacts of colonialism, nationalism, and current challenges for development; changes in social relations. Examination of Africa's significance to development of anthropology. Cultural background for understanding events in contemporary Africa provided.

Mr. Hammond, Ms. Simons

North America

172R. Cultures of the Pueblo Southwest. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 8 or 9 or upper division standing or consent of instructor. Survey of ethnographic and ethnohistorical research of Pueblo Indians (Hopi, Zuni, Tanoan, and Keresan) and their immediate neighbors. Basic information on history, languages, social organization, and traditional cultural systems of these groups.

Mr. Kroskrity

M172T. Ethnohistory of Hispanic Cultures in the U.S. Southwest. (Same as Chicana and Chicano Studies M172T.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9 or consent of instructor. Ethnography of social and cultural adaptations of Hispanic peoples in the U.S. Southwest: their respective social organization, economic and political institutions, sacred and secular belief systems, and expressive cultures. P/NP (undergraduates), S/U (graduates), or letter grading.

Middle America

173Q. Latin American Communities. Overview of social and cultural anthropology of small communities in Latin America. Similarities and contrasts in social organization and interpersonal relations described in context of economic, political, and cultural environments.

Mr. Johnson

South America

174P. Ethnography of South American Indians. Introduction to ethnography of South American Indians, with special emphasis on Lowland South America. Survey of history and development of man and society in this world area and examination of exemplary cultures symptomatic of various levels of cultural achievement.

174Q. Ethnology of South American Indians. Prerequisite: course 174P or consent of instructor. Introduction to ethnology of South American Indians, with special emphasis on Lowland South America. Methods and theories applied to study of man and culture on the subcontinent, including biological anthropology, linguistics, and sociocultural anthropology.

Asia

175R. Societies of Central Asia. Lecture, three hours. Overview of culture and society among the diverse peoples of Inner Asia, including Mongolia, Tibet, and Soviet Central Asia. Topics include environment and economic adaptation, politics in traditional isolation and within the framework of recent national integration, kinship, forms of marriage and status of women, religion and the social order in Hindu/Buddhist culture contact zone, and current problems of modernization. P/NP or letter grading.

Ms. Levine

175S. Japan. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9. Overview of contemporary Japanese society. General introduction, kinship, marriage and family life, social mobility and education, norms and values, religions, patterns of interpersonal relations, social deviance. P/NP or letter grading.

Ms. Tamanoi

175U. Cultures of the Indonesian Archipelago. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9 or consent of instructor. Introduction to past and contemporary civilizations and cultures of Indonesia, including Javanese, Balinese, Toraja, Dayak, and Minangkabau. Geographical, ecological, and historical overview with examination of such topics as religious and political ideas and institutions, art, symbolism and ritual, illness and healing, and psychological issues and themes.

175V. Ethnology of Korea: Re-Presenting Lives in Contemporary South Korea. Lecture, three hours. Examination of South Korea's contemporary structural positioning, with focus on its dynamic development out of a history of colonialism and war to capitalism; multiple and conflicting linkages of Korean people involving class, gender, family/kinship, and nation.

Ms. Park

Middle East

176. Culture Area of the Middle East. Lecture, three hours. Study of the Middle East has suggested many theories as to developmental history of humankind, evolution of human society, birth of monotheism, and origin of agriculture, trade, and the city. Presentation of anthropological material relevant to understanding the Middle East as a culture area, and Islam as basis of its shared tradition.

Pacific

177. Cultures of the Pacific. Four major culture areas of Australia, Melanesia, Polynesia, and Micronesia. General geographical features, prehistory, and language distribution of the whole region. Distinctive sociocultural features of each culture area presented in context of their adaptive significance.

History, Theory, and Method

180. Quantitative Methods in Anthropology. (Formerly numbered 186A.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 80 or equivalent. Methods of quantitative data analysis. Topics to be selected from linear regression analysis (univariate and multivariate), principal component analysis, discriminant analysis, cluster analysis, nonparametric tests, and log-linear models. Emphasis on computer-based applications of data analysis techniques. Mr. Read

182. History of Anthropology. Brief survey of development of Western social science, particularly anthropology, from Greek and Roman thought to emergence of evolutionary theory and concept of culture in the late 19th century. "Root paradigm" of Western social science and its influence on such notables as Durkheim, Freud, Hall, Lombroso, Marx, Piaget, Terman, and others. Consideration of how this influences ethnocentrism and Eurocentrism, sexism, racism, perception of deviance, and our view of culture in general.

183. History of Archaeology. Prerequisite: at least one upper division archaeology course or consent of instructor. Development of world archaeology from the Renaissance to the present, stressing how each of the major branches of archaeology has evolved a special character determined by peculiarities of its own data, methods, and intellectual affiliation. Mr. Sackett

184. History of Human Evolutionary Theory. The men, events, and spirit of the time which mark man's attempts to understand his origins and diversity.

186. Models and Modeling in Anthropology. (Formerly numbered 186B.) Lecture, three hours. Modeling from both individual and social structure viewpoints. Introduction to four groups of models, along with ethnographic examples — decision tree models, indifference curve and marginal cost models, adaptation and learning models, and information diffusion models. Mr. Read

186P. Models of Cultural Evolution. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 9 or 10 or equivalent. Introduction to Darwinian models of cultural evolution. How organic evolution has shaped the capacity for culture. How processes of cultural transmission and modification explain cultural variation in space and time. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Boyd

M189A-M189B. Theoretical Behavioral Ecology. (Same as Biology M189A-M189B.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: one upper division introduction to behavioral ecology course, one university-level mathematics course (preferably calculus or probability and statistics). Course M189A or consent of instructor is prerequisite to M189B. Students expected to do simple algebra, elementary calculus, and probability. A rich body of mathematical theory describing the evolution of animal behavior exists. Introduction to this body of theory at a pace and mathematical level that allows students to grasp this information. Within each area of theory (e.g., kin selection, optimal foraging theory, etc.), presentation of basic corpus of models so that students understand assumptions that underlie the models, and how main results are derived. Presentations supplemented by a survey of results printed in the literature, especially those derived using more advanced methods. Mr. Boyd

Special Studies

C191. Writing for Anthropology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 9. Teaching of writing skills in various academic forms, including term papers, essay examinations, journal articles, and reports. Class projects require student writing and evaluation of professional writing. Emphasis on organization and presentation of a scholarly argument. Concurrently scheduled with course C291.

Mr. Earle, Ms. Levine

197H. Departmental Honors Seminar. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: junior standing, consent of instructor. Five discussion segments dealing with major debates, questions, and issues in each departmental field (archaeological, biological, linguistic, and sociocultural). Discussion each week in seminar format of readings on a major topic.

199HA. Directed Studies for Honors. Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: anthropology honors program standing. Discussion meetings with adviser to help define research and preparation for the project. Extensive reading and research in the field of proposed honors thesis. Project often involves summer fieldwork. In Progress grading (credit to be given only on completion of course 199HC). (Sp)

199HB. Directed Studies for Honors. Prerequisites: course 199HA, anthropology honors program standing. Must be taken in Fall Quarter of senior year. Continued reading and research directed toward analysis and presentation of data in a draft of honors thesis (no more than 30 pages). In Progress grading (credit to be given only on completion of course 199HC). (F)

199HC. Directed Studies for Honors. Prerequisites: courses 199HA, 199HB, anthropology honors program standing. Preparation of final version of honors thesis (no more than 30 pages) that argues a central thesis of anthropological relevance. Must be submitted by last day of class in Winter Quarter of senior year. (W)

Graduate Courses

Admission to all graduate courses is subject to consent of instructor and completion of appropriate course requirements (when so indicated). Graduate courses are normally nonrepetitive in content but may be repeated for credit with consent of instructor and graduate counselor.

200A-200B. Proseminars: Practice of Anthropology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Required of new graduate students. Discussion of anthropology as a four-field discipline and interconnections among the four major fields. Practice of anthropology as exemplified through faculty presentations of how research is conceived, formulated, and executed. Students develop individual research proposals. In Progress and S/U or letter grading. (F,V)

M201A-M201B. Graduate Core Seminars: Archaeology (6 units each). (Same as Archaeology M201A-M201B.) Seminar, three hours. Required of anthropology students in archaeology field. Seminar discussions based on carefully selected list of 30 to 40 major archaeology works. These core seminars provide students with foundation in breadth of knowledge required of a professional archaeologist. Archaeological historiography, survey of world archaeology, and archaeological techniques. Emphasis on appreciation of the multidisciplinary background of modern archaeology and relevant interpretative strategies. May be repeated for credit with consent of adviser.

202. Biological Anthropology Colloquium. Seminar, three hours. Selected topics on status of current research in biological anthropology. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

203. Core Seminar: Sociocultural Anthropology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: two courses from 130, 135A, 150, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Essential concepts, theories, and methodologies of sociocultural anthropology. Reading of and critical discussion on a body of significant literature.

204. Core Seminar: Linguistic Anthropology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Theoretical and methodological foundations of study of language structure and language use from a sociocultural perspective. Discussion of linguistic, philosophical, psychological, and anthropological contributions to understanding of verbal communication as a social activity embedded in culture.

Mr. Duranti, Mr. Kroskirty

Archaeology

210. Analytical Methods in Archaeological Studies. Prerequisites: one term of statistics, consent of instructor. Data analysis procedures in archaeology. Emphasis on conceptual framework for analysis of archaeological data, beginning at level of the attribute and ending at level of the region.

Mr. Earle

212P. Selected Topics in Hunter/Gatherer Archaeology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Prehistory and ethnohistory of hunter/gatherer peoples. Consideration of range of issues, including (but not limited to) technological innovations, exchange systems, settlement and mobility, and social change. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

Ms. Arnold

212Q. Problems in Southwestern Archaeology. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Consideration of prehistoric cultural systems in the American Southwest, with emphasis on description and explanation of organizational variability and change. Specific research questions vary with each course offering. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Hill

212R. Problems in Oceanic Archaeology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Prehistory of Oceania. Content may vary, but problems considered include history and process of island occupation, island adaptation, and evolution of social stratification. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Earle

M212S. Special Topics in Archaeology (6 units). (Same as Archaeology M205.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing in archaeology or in other departments. Open to undergraduates with consent of instructor. Special advanced topics in archaeology such as new strategies, methodologies, excavation projects, regional synthesis, or comparisons on a worldwide basis, including current work by core faculty of the program and special visitors.

213. Selected Topics in Old World Archaeology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Sackett

214. Selected Topics in Prehistoric Civilizations of the New World. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Mesoamerican and Andean civilizations normally constitute major focus of seminar. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Donnan, Mr. Leventhal

215. Field Training in Archaeology (4 to 8 units). Prerequisite: prior experience in archaeology. Advanced training in archaeological excavation techniques, including organization of projects, supervision of field crews, methodology of field recording, and preliminary analysis of field data. May be repeated for credit.

C215R. Strategy of Archaeology. Seminar, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Introduction to problem formulation, theory, and method in archaeology, with emphasis on development of research designs. Focus on how archaeological research is conceived and planned, with consideration of differing viewpoints and their usefulness. Concurrently scheduled with course C115R. Complete research proposal required of graduate students.

M216. Dating Techniques in Environmental Sciences and Archaeology. (Same as Geography M278.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Colloquium devoted to topics in dating techniques in environmental sciences, archaeology, and biological anthropology, as well as laboratory instruction and experimental work. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Berger

217. Explanation of Societal Change. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Examination of processes of societal evolution, emphasizing usefulness of a variety of explanatory models from general systems theory, ecology, anthropology, and other sources. Specific research questions vary with each course offering. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Hill

218. Style and Ethnicity. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. How stylistic variation in material culture informs on and mediates the shape, boundaries, and interrelations of ethnic groups. Aimed primarily toward archaeologists and ethnographers, seminar also welcomes students specifically interested in either material culture or style as such.

Mr. Sackett

219. Complex Hunters/Gatherers in Theoretical Perspective. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Examination of economic, political, and social foundations of complex hunter/gatherer societies, with focus on theory of emergence of complex cultural organization and recognition of complex middle-range societies in the archaeological record. Role of craft specialization in cultural evolution. S/U or letter grading.

Ms. Arnold

Biological Anthropology

220. Current Problems in Biological Anthropology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Detailed examination of current research in biological anthropology (specific topics to be announced). Emphasis on nature of hypotheses and their testing in ongoing student and faculty research. May be repeated for credit.

221A-221B. Fossil Evidence for Human Evolution. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Examination and analysis of fossil evidence for man's evolution.

Ms. Kennedy

223P. Biology and Ecology of Foraging Peoples. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Detailed discussions of topical issues in study of foraging societies, including perspectives of cultural ecology and ethnoarchaeology. Primary emphasis on theoretical and practical topics in human ecology and biology, including health and nutrition, growth and development, life history variables, foraging, and sex differences.

Mr. Bailey

C226P. Introduction to Field Methods in Human Ecology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division or graduate standing. Survey of methods used in anthropological investigations emphasizing human biology and human ecology. Study design, physical assessment of nutritional status, growth and maturation, demographic surveys, systematic observation of behavior, energy expenditure, subsistence ecology, data analysis. Demonstrations and labs. Course fee required. Concurrently scheduled with course C126P.

Mr. Bailey, Ms. Peacock

228P. Ecology of Human Reproduction. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Critical examination of current research concerning responsiveness of the human reproductive system to a variety of biobehavioral and ecological influences, including stress, exercise, nutrition, and disease. Influence of reproductive hormones on human behavior. Evolutionary and cross-cultural perspectives. S/U or letter grading.

Ms. Peacock

M229A. Seminar: Human Behavioral Ecology. (Same as Education M281A and Psychiatry M279A.) Lecture, one hour; discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Examination of predictive models from animal behavioral ecology used to study human diet and subsistence; settlement patterns and territoriality; sharing and helping; reproduction and mortality. Comparison with other economic and ecological approaches in anthropology.

Mr. Blurton Jones

M229B. Seminar: Reproduction, Families, and Parenting. (Same as Education M281B and Psychiatry M279B.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Guided forum for graduate students to discuss and broaden their studies of human reproduction and child rearing from varied viewpoints. Representation and debate of theories, questions, and methods from social and biological sciences.

Mr. Blurton Jones

M229C. Seminar: Selected Topics in Human Ethnology. (Same as Education M281C and Psychiatry M279C.) Lecture, one hour; discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Consideration of appropriateness and contributions of using animal behavior methodology in study of human behavior. Analysis: describing and recording behavior; causation; development, especially longitudinal studies; adaptation; evolutionary origins.

Mr. Blurton Jones

Cultural Anthropology

230P. Ethnology. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Seminar on ethnological method and theory concentrating on ideational systems. May be repeated for credit.

230Q. Theories of Culture. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Exploration of aspects within culture theory: emergence of culture with modes of production, discovery of culture, and "cultural capital" and cultural change. Investigation of production of culture and transformations of meaning within cultural domains of politics, economy, and religion. S/U or letter grading.

Ms. Park

231. Asian Americans: Personality and Identity. Prerequisite: graduate standing. Effect of class, caste, and race on the Asian American personality within the framework of anthropological theories.

232Q. Myth and Ritual. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Nature and function of myth and ritual in nonindustrialized societies. Associated value systems and philosophies examined as infrastructure of culture rather than as phenomena proposed by structuralist rationalism and cultural material empiricism. May be repeated for credit.

M232R. South American Folklore and Mythology Studies. (Same as Folklore M257.) Prerequisite: course 174P or consent of instructor. Examination of oral traditions and related ethnological data from various South American Indian societies against the background of the religious systems of these people.

M232S. Ethnography of Humor. (Same as Folklore M214.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing in anthropology or folklore and mythology. Examination and analysis of selected humorous expressions and events in cross-cultural perspective, with emphasis on major psychological and sociocultural approaches to their study and interpretation.

232T. Person, Self, and Identity in Contemporary Anthropology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. Survey of anthropological literature on person, self, and identity. Conceptual and theoretical relationships among these terms and their use in contemporary ethnography. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Hollan

232V. Current Issues in Ethnography. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. S/U or letter grading.

233P. Symbolic Anthropology. Prerequisite: course 133R or consent of instructor. Nature of symbolic relations (as distinguished from other referential ones), significance of symbolic systems (in terms of action, cognition, affectivity, contemplation), symbolic and isomorphic logic (as opposed to the causal one) are among questions to be selected for analysis and discussion. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

233Q. Aesthetic Anthropology. Prerequisite: course 133R or consent of instructor. Selected questions concerning visual aesthetic phenomena in their relationships with the sociocultural context examined in depth. May be repeated for credit.

M234. Seminar: Psychocultural Studies. (Same as Psychiatry M210.) Seminar, three hours. Devoted to present state of research in psychocultural studies. Survey of work in child development and socialization, personality, psychobiology, transcultural psychiatry, deviance, learning, perception, cognition, and psychocultural perspectives on change.

Mr. Edgerton

M234P. Transcultural Psychiatry. (Same as Psychiatry M222.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Consideration of psychiatric topics in cross-cultural perspective, such as studies of drug use, deviance, suicide, homicide, behavioral disorders, "culture specific" syndromes, non-Western psychiatries, and questions of "sick" societies. May be repeated for credit.

M234Q. Psychological Anthropology. (Same as Psychiatry M272.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Various psychological issues in anthropology, both theoretical and methodological. Areas of interest include such things as culture and theory, culture and personality, and culture psychiatry. Discussion of questions relating to symbolic and unconsciousness process as they relate to culture. Topics vary from term to term. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Edgerton

M234T. Anthropology of Human Body. (Same as Psychiatry M282.) Seminar, three hours. Exploration of how sociocultural and political dynamics shape perceptions of and understandings about the human body, and how, reciprocally, those perceptions and understandings influence social processes. Includes materials from both non-Western and Western societies.

Ms. Browner

M235A-M235B. The Individual in Culture. (Same as Psychiatry M213A-M213B.) Lecture, three hours. Course M235A is prerequisite to M235B. In Progress grading.

M235S. Culture, Adaptation, and Intervention. (Same as Psychiatry M215.) Prerequisite: consent of instructors. Role of ecological, social, and cultural influences on family adaptation, child competence, and interventions, including theory, empirical research, and applied/policy topics. Review and critique of current research in this field.

Mr. Gallimore, Mr. Weisner

M236P. Cross-Cultural Studies of Socialization and Children. (Same as Psychiatry M214.) Seminar, three hours. Selected topics in cross-cultural study of socialization and child training. Methods, ethnographic data, and theoretical orientations. Emphasis on current research.

Mr. Weisner

M236Q. Laboratory for Naturalistic Observations: Developing Skills and Techniques. (Same as Education M222A, Psychiatry M235, and Psychology M295.) Skill of observing and recording behavior in natural settings, with emphasis on field training and practice in observing behavior. Discussion of some uses of observations and their implications for research in social sciences. Students expected to integrate observational work into their current research interests.

Mr. Levine, Mr. Weisner (W)

239P. Selected Topics in Field Ethnography (4 to 8 units). Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Discussion and practicum in various techniques for collecting and analyzing ethnographic field data. S/U or letter grading.

Linguistic Anthropology

M241. Topics in Linguistic Anthropology. (Same as Linguistics M246C.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Problems in relations of language, culture, and society. May be repeated for credit.

242. Ethnography of Communication. Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. Seminar devoted to examining representative scholarship from fields of sociolinguistics and ethnography of communication. Particular attention to theoretical developments including relationship of ethnography of communication to such disciplines as anthropology, linguistics, and sociology. Topical foci include style and strategy, speech variation, varieties of noncasual speech genres, languages and ethnicity, and nonverbal communication behavior.

Mr. Duranti, Mr. Kroskrity

243P. American Indian Ethnolinguistics and Sociolinguistics. Prerequisites: prior coursework in either anthropology, linguistics, or American Indian studies, consent of instructor. Social and cultural aspects of language use in Native North American speech communities. Specific foci include both micro-sociolinguistic topics (such as multilingualism, cultural differences regarding appropriate communicative behavior, and variation within speech communities) and macro-sociolinguistic topics (such as language contact, language change, and language in American Indian education). Graduate students conduct library and/or other research and participate in group discussion.

Mr. Kroskrity

M243Q. Afro-American Sociolinguistics: Black English. (Same as Afro-American Studies M200D.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Basic information on Black American English, an important minority dialect in the U.S. Social implications of minority dialects examined from perspectives of their genesis, maintenance, and social functions. General problems and issues in fields of sociolinguistics examined through a case study approach. Students required to conduct research in consultation with instructor and participate in group discussion.

Ms. Morgan

244. Field Methods in Linguistic Anthropology. Seminar, three hours; work with informant, one hour. Prerequisite: Linguistics 20 or prior experience in linguistic analysis. Practice in eliciting and transcribing linguistic data from native informants. Initial focus on phonetic transcription and phonological structures; introduction to skills and strategies pertinent to morphological, syntactic, and pragmatic analysis. Practice with native speakers of non-Indo-European languages is important aspect of student participation. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Duranti, Mr. Kroskrity

245. Linguistic and Intracultural Variation. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Problem of variation as it impinges on disciplines of anthropology and linguistics. Among objectives of course are the following: to acknowledge importance of speech variation in anthropological linguistics research, to critically assess a broad and representative sample of modern scholarship devoted to study of intra-individual and inter-individual variation, and to evaluate utility and potential applicability of recent linguistic models to anthropological linguistics and anthropological theory.

Mr. Kroskrity

246. Research Design and Field Training in Linguistic Anthropology. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Supervised collection of linguistic information in the field. Students spend full time in the field for most of term. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Duranti, Mr. Kroskrity

247. Analysis of Linguistic Field Data. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: course 202 or 242 or 246 or consent of instructor. Supervised analysis of linguistic field data by students who have participated in a related field training course. Students work with their own as well as general project data in preparation of articles for professional journals. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Duranti, Mr. Kroskrity

248. Practicum in a Field Language (4 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Intensive training in an indigenous language as preparation for work in the field.

Mr. Duranti, Mr. Kroskrity

M249A-M249B. Ethnographic Methods in Applied Linguistics A, B. (Same as Teaching English as a Second Language M270A-M270B.) Course M249A is prerequisite to M249B. Two-term sequence on ethnographic approaches to recording and analyzing communicative events and practices in their sociocultural context, involving student-initiated fieldwork in a community setting. Emphasis on hands-on activities within theoretical framework that considers language as a social and cultural practice. First term devoted to skills related to collecting socially and culturally meaningful data; second term devoted to production of ethnographic analysis, including how to present an analysis in form of a conference talk and how to develop an analysis into a grant or dissertation proposal.

Mr. Duranti, Ms. Ochs

Social Anthropology

250. Selected Topics in Social Anthropology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Intensive examination of current theoretical views and literature. S/U or letter grading.

Ms. Levine

251P. Cultural Ecology. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Earle

252P. Comparative Systems of Social Inequality. Seminar, three hours. Examination in historical and contemporary perspective of particular systems of structured social inequality based on rank, class, caste, ethnicity, gender, age, sexual preference, disability, etc., to develop a unified theory of social inequality. Examples from Asian, Pacific, European, African, and American cultures. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Hammond

252Q. Anthropology of Resistance. Lecture, one hour; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: at least one upper division sociocultural anthropology course. Exploration of recent works in anthropology and other disciplines which address practice and resistance, as part of an effort to understand processes that have shaped modern and postcolonial society and culture.

Ms. Tamanoi

253. Economic Anthropology. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit.

253P. Technology and Economy. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Analysis of technological systems and patterns of technical evolution in context of corresponding social and economic change (e.g., in labor organization, kinship, property rights), using examples mainly from Asian peasant societies, past and present. S/U or letter grading.

254. Kinship. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit.

Ms. Levine

255. Comparative Political Institutions. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit.

256. Anthropology of Conflict. Seminar, three hours. Open to undergraduates with consent of instructor. Examination of events and institutions associated with large-scale or ongoing conflict in a variety of settings. Particular consideration to roots of violence, violent manifestations and cross-cultural misunderstandings, and nature and content of armed confrontation. S/U or letter grading.

Ms. Simons

Applied Anthropology

260. Urban Anthropology. Prerequisite: course 167 or consent of instructor. Intensive anthropological examination of the urban setting as a human environment. S/U or letter grading.

Ms. Park, Ms. Sacks

261Q. Issues in Applied Anthropology. Seminar, three hours. Use of seminar format to explore selected domestic and international problems from applied anthropological perspective. Consideration of history of applied anthropology, ethics, and careers strategies.

Mr. Hammond

M262P. Culture and Human Reproduction. (Same as Community Health Sciences M240.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Exploration of human behavior related to reproduction. Cross-cultural exploration of biological and behavioral factors, with particular reference to human adaptation. Ms. Scrimshaw

263P. Gender Systems. Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Current theoretical developments in understanding gender systems cross-culturally, with emphasis on relationship between systems of gender, economy, ideational systems, and social inequality. Selection of ethnographic cases from recent literature. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Levine, Ms. Sacks

M263Q. Advanced Seminar: Medical Anthropology. (Same as Community Health Sciences M244, Nursing M273, and Psychiatry M273.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Limited to 15 students. Examination of interrelationships between society, culture, ecology, health, and illness. Bases for written critical analysis and class discussion provided through key theoretical works. Ms. Browner, Ms. Scrimshaw (Sp)

265. Public Archaeology. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Archaeology as part of the national heritage, both in the U.S. and other countries. Legal, ethical, cultural, and scholarly aspects of salvage and contact archaeology. Designed for researchers and managers of cultural resources.

M266. Medical Anthropology in Public Health. (Same as Community Health Sciences M232, Nursing M250, and Psychiatry M250.) Seminar, three hours. Cross-cultural aspects of human behavior as they relate to perception, treatment, incidence, and prevalence of disease and illness. Ms. Browner, Ms. Scrimshaw

M269. Contemporary Issues of the American Indian. (Same as American Indian Studies M200C and Sociology M275.) Introduction to most important issues facing American Indians as individuals, communities, tribes, and organizations in the contemporary world, building on historical background presented in American Indian Studies M200A and cultural and expressive experience of American Indians presented in American Indian Studies M200B. Mr. Champagne

M269P. Feminist Perspectives on Women, Reproduction, and Health. (Same as Nursing M280 and Psychiatry M280.) Seminar, three hours. Analysis of sociocultural and political economic factors that affect reproduction and women's health. Topics include relationships between women's domestic and extra-domestic roles and their health, policies of reproduction, and impact of new reproductive technologies. May be repeated for credit. Ms. Browner

Regional Cultures

M272. Indians of South America. (Same as Latin American Studies M250A.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Survey of literature and research topics related to Indian cultures of South America. May be repeated for credit.

273. Cultures of the Middle East. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Survey of literature and problems of various cultures of the Middle East.

274. Cultures of the Pacific Islands. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Topics in contemporary socio-cultural anthropology and classic ethnography of Melanesia, Polynesia, and Micronesia. May be repeated for credit.

277. Aspects of Chinese Society. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Anthropological perspective on historical evolution of and contemporary changes in such key institutions of Chinese society as family, lineage, and associations, setting individuals and groups in the larger political, economic, and class framework of society and state. S/U or letter grading.

History, Theory, and Method

281. Selected Topics in History of Anthropology. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Particular problems in history of anthropology as dictated by interests of students and faculty. May be repeated for credit.

281P. Contemporary Problems in Africa. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Problematic issues in Africa in light of classical anthropological literature and recent work by anthropologists and other fieldworkers in Africa, with cases from eastern and southern Africa. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Simons

282. Research Design in Cultural Anthropology. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Primarily intended for graduate students preparing for fieldwork. Unique position of anthropology among the sciences and resulting problems for scientific research design. Review of typical research problems and appropriate methods. Students prepare their own research designs and present them for class discussion. Mr. Johnson

283. Formal Methods of Data Analysis in Anthropology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Current topics and issues related to formal analysis of data and representation of cultural constructs: formal models of kinship terminologies, structural models of cognitive systems, graph theoretic models of networks, models of decision making, hierarchical information systems, stability in complex adaptive systems. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Read

M284. Qualitative Research Methodology. (Same as Community Health Sciences M216.) Discussion, three hours; laboratory, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Intensive seminar/field course in qualitative research methodology. Emphasis on using qualitative methods and techniques in research and evaluation related to health care. Ms. Scrimshaw

285. Schools, Domains, and Strategies in World Archaeology. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Comparative examination of schools of world archaeology, contrasting their respective databases, research strategies, and relations to allied intellectual disciplines. Archaeologists from all departments are welcome, as are students interested in history or philosophy of science. Mr. Sackett

285P. Selected Topics in Anthropological/Archaeological Theory. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing and/or consent of instructor. Variable topics course on important theoretical subjects in anthropology and archaeology. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Leventhal

286P. Selected Topics in Computer Simulation and Modeling. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: course 180 or consent of instructor. Applications of computer simulations and/or models to specific problem areas of interest to anthropologists. Problem areas rotate with each offering and include cognitive ecological, demographic evolutionary, and other theoretical foci. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Read

287. Poststructural Theories. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Examination of development and application of poststructural theories in anthropology by exploring interdisciplinary connections, especially as they concern the concept of culture, narrative, ethnographic writing, reflexivity, politics of representation, historicity, and study of the self, identity, and the body. S/U or letter grading.

287P. Anthropology and Colonialism. Prerequisite: graduate standing. Exploration of multifaceted nature of colonialism and its cultural manifestations in a variety of geographical areas. Reconsideration of history of anthropology for, as Talal Asad argues, "anthropology emerged as a distinctive discipline at the beginning of the colonial era." S/U or letter grading. Ms. Tamanoi

M289. Computer Methodologies in Latin American Studies and Anthropology. (Same as Latin American Studies M225.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Basic principles of computing and information processing, along with their potential application in Latin American research. Examination of impact that computers are having in Latin American society. Mr. Behrens

C291. Writing for Anthropology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Teaching of writing skills in various academic forms, including term papers, essay examinations, journal articles, and reports. Class projects require student writing and evaluation of professional writing. Emphasis on organization and presentation of a scholarly argument. Concurrently scheduled with course C191. Graduate students expected to prepare a higher level of the scholarly research paper. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Earle, Ms. Levine

292. Making Oral Presentations. Lecture/student presentations, two hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. How to organize and present seminar reports, papers at scholarly conferences, and lectures to professional audiences. Opportunity for students to develop their speaking skills through actual practice in workshop atmosphere of mutual support and constructive criticism. S/U grading. Mr. Sackett

Special Studies

375. Teaching Apprentice Practicum (1 to 4 units). Prerequisite: apprentice personnel employment as a teaching assistant, associate, or fellow. Teaching apprenticeship under active guidance and supervision of a regular faculty member responsible for curriculum and instruction at the University. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

495. Teaching Anthropology (2 to 4 units). Seminar/workshop, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing. Required of all new teaching assistants. Workshop and seminar in teaching techniques, including evaluation of each student's own performance as a teaching assistant. Four-day workshop precedes beginning of term, followed by 10-week seminar during term designed to deal with problems and techniques of teaching anthropology. Unit credit may be applied toward full-time equivalence but not toward nine-course requirement for M.A. S/U grading.

501. Cooperative Program (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of UCLA adviser and graduate dean, and host campus instructor, department chair, and graduate dean. Used to record enrollment of UCLA students in courses taken under cooperative arrangements with USC. S/U grading.

596. Individual Studies for Graduate Students (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Directed individual studies. S/U or letter grading.

597. Preparation for Ph.D. Qualifying Examinations (2 to 12 units).

598. Research for and Preparation of M.A. Thesis (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor (faculty adviser). Preparation of research data and writing of M.A. thesis. S/U grading.

599. Research for Ph.D. Dissertation (2 to 12 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Ph.D. dissertation research or writing. Students must have completed qualifying examinations and ordinarily take no other coursework.

Scope and Objectives

Since language permeates every aspect of our social, economic, political, and academic pursuits, it is small wonder that we have deep abiding curiosity about its origin, its use, and its acquisition. The UCLA doctoral program in applied linguistics provides a rich and supportive environment for graduate students and faculty to define and resolve questions that satisfy that curiosity.

Faculty members of the Department of Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics, as well as professors in Anthropology, Linguistics, Psychology, Sociology, and Education, represent a wide range of expertise and experience in language-related research. Their guidance and collaboration with students as they apply relevant elements of linguistics, psycholinguistics, and sociolinguistics result in substantial research findings in the areas of discourse/grammar analysis, language acquisition, and language assessment. Graduates of the program are well prepared to pursue academic and professional careers at the highest level of service and inquiry.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

The basic requirement for admission is completion of the UCLA Master of Arts degree in Teaching English as a Second Language (TESL) or in Linguistics or the equivalent of one of these. Applicants with a graduate degree in TESL, linguistics, applied linguistics, psycholinguistics, or sociolinguistics from another recognized institution may be admitted provided they then make up the courses in one or the other of the two UCLA M.A. programs whose equivalents they have not yet taken. Students with graduate degrees in other related disciplines (such as a foreign language, English, education, psychology, sociology, or anthropology) are advised to complete the UCLA M.A. in Linguistics or TESL before seeking admission to the Ph.D. program.

Prospective candidates are required to submit (1) a statement of purpose describing their research background and the type of dissertation they hope to prepare, (2) three letters of recommendation from professors who are well acquainted with their academic background, (3) their M.A. thesis or related research papers, and (4) Graduate Record Examination (GRE) scores; international applicants should also submit their Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) scores. The admissions committee considers all of the above criteria, as well as undergraduate and graduate grade-point averages, in decisions on program applicants.

Applications for admission to Fall Quarter should reach UCLA Graduate Application Processing by the preceding December 15; the supporting materials should reach the Applied Linguistics Program (3300A Rolfe Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1531) no later than January 8.

Major Fields and Specializations

Three areas of specialization are available: discourse/grammar analysis, language acquisition, and language assessment. For details on each specialization, contact the program office.

Foreign Language Requirement

Before advancement to candidacy, you must demonstrate proficiency in one foreign language. If your native language is English, you may fulfill the requirement by one of the following methods: (1) a reading examination, (2) a research paper based on extensive sources in the language, (3) a conversation examination showing knowledge in depth, or (4) a score of 550 or better on the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT). If your native language is not English, you may use English to fulfill the requirement. In consultation with the interdepartmental committee, you must select the most appropriate means of fulfilling the requirement.

Course Requirements

In addition to fulfilling the general University requirements, candidates for the Ph.D. in Applied Linguistics must meet the program requirements listed below. All courses taken to fulfill breadth and specialization requirements must be approved each term by your faculty adviser.

Basic Preparation—Any of the following courses not already taken must be completed as early as possible and before advancement to candidacy for the degree. For basic preparation in linguistics, you can select a phonetics and phonology track, a syntax and semantics track, or a discourse analysis track. For all tracks, you must take Linguistics 120A and 120B. Students selecting the phonetics and phonology track would then take Linguistics 165A or 200A, followed by Linguistics 201 or 203 or 204. Students selecting the syntax and semantics track would take Linguistics 165B, and 200B or 215. Students selecting the discourse analysis track would take Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics 283, followed by one course from Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics 250, 252, Sociology C244A, C244B, Anthropology 204, or 242. For basic preparation in applied linguistics, you must take Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics 241.

Units and Courses—As a breadth requirement, all candidates must take at least 32 units of graduate-level coursework (in the 200 or 500 series). These 32 units may not include courses taken while completing basic preparation courses, Linguistics 275, Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics 400, or Applied Linguistics 597 or 599. No more than eight of the 32 units may be in 596 courses. The 32 units must include eight units in one area outside your area of specialization.

Appropriate graduate courses taken at UCLA after completion of the M.A. but before admission to the doctoral program may be applied toward the 32-unit requirement for the Ph.D. Credit may be transferred for up to two courses taken at another institution, but only for graduate-level courses taken after completion of the M.A. and preferably taken within the framework of UCLA's Applied Linguistics 501.

Within Graduate Division limits, courses that may be taken on an S/U basis include undergraduate courses taken as prerequisites to needed graduate courses, undergraduate courses not required, reading courses in a foreign language, graduate courses taken in addition to the required 32 units, Applied Linguistics 501, 597, 599, Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics 400, and Linguistics 275. All other courses must be taken for letter grades.

Research Papers

In lieu of a written qualifying examination, two original research papers of publishable quality in different areas of specialization are required. These may be revised or extended seminar papers but must be prepared after admission to the Ph.D. program. The topics of these papers are to be selected by the student, in consultation with appropriate faculty members and with consent of the Ph.D. program adviser. Each of the finished papers is evaluated by two faculty members.

The doctoral committee administers the University Oral Qualifying Examination before advancement to Ph.D. candidacy.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Dissertation/Final Oral Examination

All candidates are required to prepare a dissertation as a demonstration of their ability to carry out original research under the guidance of their doctoral committee. As the dissertation nears completion, you must make a public report on the results of your research. This may be done, at your choice, at a meeting of the colloquium of either the Department of Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics or the Department of Linguistics. You must, therefore, enroll in either Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics 400 or Linguistics 275 during the appropriate term. The public report determines whether a final oral examination is required.

Graduate Courses

501. Cooperative Program (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of UCLA program adviser and graduate dean, and host campus instructor, department chair, and graduate dean. Used to record enrollment of UCLA students in courses taken under cooperative arrangements with USC. S/U grading. (F,W,Sp)

596. Directed Individual Study (4 to 8 units). Prerequisite: doctoral standing. Independent study in an area of applied linguistics. Up to eight units may be applied toward Ph.D. course requirements. May be repeated for credit. (F,W,Sp)

597. Preparation for Ph.D. Candidacy Examination (4 to 8 units). Prerequisite: completion of at least six courses of the 32-unit requirement for Ph.D. May not be applied toward the 32-unit requirement. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading. (F,W,Sp)

599. Research for and Preparation of Ph.D. Dissertation (4 to 16 units). Prerequisite: advancement to Ph.D. candidacy. Required of all Ph.D. candidates each term they are registered and engaged in dissertation preparation. May be repeated for credit but may not be applied toward Ph.D. course requirements. S/U grading. (F,W,Sp)

Applied Linguistics Course List

Discourse/Grammar Analysis

English 241. Studies in Structure of the English Language

Linguistics 201. Phonological Theory II

202. Language Change

203. Phonetic Theory

204. Experimental Phonetics

205. Morphological Theory

206. Syntactic Theory II

207. Formal Semantics

209A, C209B. Natural Language Processing I, II

210A, 210B. Field Methods I, II

214. Survey of Current Syntactic Theories

215. Syntactic Typology

220. Linguistic Areas

225. Linguistic Structures

251. Topics in Phonetics and Phonology I: Proseminar

252. Topics in Syntax and Semantics I: Proseminar

253. Topics in Language Variation I: Proseminar

254. Topics in Linguistics I: Proseminar

256A, 256B. Topics in Phonetics and Phonology II: Proseminar

257A, 257B. Topics in Syntax and Semantics II: Proseminar

258A, 258B. Topics in Language Variation II: Proseminar

259A, 259B. Topics in Linguistics II: Proseminar

263A-263B-263C. Seminars: Language Variation (only one of these may be applied toward the 32-unit requirement)

Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics 249. Current Issues in Language Analysis

250. Advanced Seminar: Cohesion Analysis of English Structure

252. Advanced Seminar: Contextual Analysis of English Structure

263. Cross-Linguistic Topics in Functional Grammar I: Typology

264. Cross-Linguistic Topics in Functional Grammar II: Discourse

283. Discourse Analysis

285. Language Socialization

288. Discourse Laboratory

289. Current Issues in Language Use

Additional Courses in Other Departments

Anthropology 204. Core Seminar: Linguistic Anthropology

M234Q. Psychological Anthropology

242. Ethnography of Communication

245. Linguistic and Intracultural Variation

249. Social Interaction

Education 204D. Minority Education in Cross-Cultural Perspective

German (Germanic Languages) C238. Linguistic Theory and Grammatical Description

Sociology C244A-C244B. Conversational Structures I, II

258. Talk and Social Institutions

266. Selected Problems in Analysis of Conversation

267. Selected Problems in Communication

Spanish (Spanish and Portuguese) 209. Dialectology

256A-256B. Studies in Spanish Linguistics

257. Studies in Dialectology

Language Acquisition

Linguistics 213. Psycholinguistics

C235. Theoretical Issues in Disorders of Language Development

254. Topics in Linguistics I: Proseminar

259A, 259B. Topics in Linguistics II: Proseminar

264A-264B-264C. Seminars: Special Topics in Linguistic Theory

Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics 227. Experiential Seminar: Second Language Learning

251. Advanced Seminar: Interlanguage Analysis

260. Psycholinguistics and Language Teaching

261. Second Language Acquisition

269. Current Issues in Language Acquisition

271. Cross-Linguistic Topics in Second Language Acquisition

Additional Courses in Other Departments

Education 217D. Language Development and Education

227B. Research on Cognitive and Language Characteristics of Exceptional Individuals

Psychiatry 257A-257B-257C. Communication Disorders Associated with Developmental Disabilities and Psychiatric Disorders

Psychology 240A-240B. Developmental Psychology

242F. Seminar: Developmental Psychology — Development of Language and Communication

260A-260B-260C. Proseminars: Cognitive Psychology

262. Human Learning and Memory

263. Psycholinguistics

268D. Seminar: Human Information Processing — Language and Thought

Language Assessment

Teaching English as a Second Language and Applied Linguistics 209. Current Issues in Experimental Design and Statistics for Applied Linguistics

222. Language Testing for Teachers of English as a Second Language

225. Program Evaluation in Applied Linguistics

232. Advanced Seminar: Construction and Administration of Language Tests

258. Laboratory: Advanced Topics in Language Assessment

Additional Courses in Other Departments

Education 200B. Survey Research Methods in Education

200C. Analysis of Survey Data in Education

202. Evaluation Theory

210A. Introduction to Research Design and Statistics

210B. Statistical Inference

210C. Analysis of Variance

210D. Multivariate Analysis

210E. Factor Analysis

211A. Measurement of Educational Achievement and Aptitude

211B. Measurement in Education: Underlying Theory

211C. Item Response Theory

218A. Multiple Regression Analysis

218B. Advanced Quantitative Models in Nonexperimental Research: Multilevel Analysis

218C. Structural Equation Modeling
 218D. Analysis of Categorical and Other Nonnormal Data
 219. Laboratory: Advanced Topics in Research Methodology
 221. Computer Analyses of Empirical Data in Education
 222C. Qualitative Data Reduction and Analysis
 412A. Criterion-Referenced and Norm-Referenced Test Construction
Psychology 250A, 250B. Advanced Psychological Statistics
 252A. Multivariate Analysis
 253. Factor Analysis
 254A. Psychological Scaling
 254B. Cluster Analysis
 255. Quantitative Aspects of Assessment
 M257. Multivariate Analysis with Latent Variables
 259. Quantitative Methods in Cognitive Psychology

Scope and Objectives

The interdisciplinary program offers M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Archaeology. It brings together interests and specialties represented by those departments offering courses in archaeology, as well as others offering courses relevant to archaeology.

The primary purpose of the program is to train scholars in archaeology for university-level teaching and research and other professional aims. Its resources are intended for those archaeology students whose academic goals cannot be met within any single department and who, consequently, require an individually designed plan of study combining academic preparation in two or more departments. Applications are especially encouraged from students whose interests may form bridges with disciplines and departments not offering archaeology (e.g., botany, chemistry, geology, mathematics, statistics, zoology, etc.). There are opportunities for participation in a variety of field, laboratory, and computer studies.

Admission

Any undergraduate major may be considered for admission to the program although those applicants who have had little previous archaeological education may be admitted under probationary status and may be required to take a series of courses to make up deficiencies. A Graduate Record Examination (GRE) General Test report is required. The following application materials should be submitted directly to the chair of the program: an acceptable plan of study (including a statement of objectives, an outline of projected coursework, and a general indication of an M.A. paper or dissertation topic); three letters of recommendation; a research paper preferably relevant to archaeology or comparable evidence of scholarly work. Applicants are accepted for admission to Fall Quarter only. The program's "Study Guidelines" brochure will be sent to applicants on request to the Chair, Archaeology Program, A148 Fowler Building, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1526.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

Africa; analysis of archaeological materials; ancient Near East; Andean South America; Caribbean; China and the Far East; classical Greece and Rome; dating techniques in archaeological sciences; Europe; India and Central Asia; Mesoamerica; Pacific; paleoenvironmental studies; Western North America.

Other areas of specialization are also available.

Fieldwork

No graduate degree is awarded until you have worked in the field and have demonstrated your competency to direct field research in archaeology. Both theoretical and practical knowledge of methods and techniques used in the field are necessary.

This requirement may be met in several ways. Ordinarily you take a regular UCLA field course such as Anthropology 115P, Archaeology 259, Ancient Near East 261, or History 276, or similar courses offered by other departments. Comparable courses offered by other institutions may also be accepted. An informal report, submitted by the director of an excavation, describing work performed by the students under supervision, may be sufficient. Excepting the four courses listed above, any given formula to fulfill the requirement must be cleared in advance with the program chair.

Master of Arts Degree

The structure of the M.A. program includes the successful completion, within seven academic terms, of fieldwork (described above) plus the following requirements.

Foreign Language Requirement

The ability to read at least one modern foreign language, relevant to your field of interest and approved by your adviser, is required for the M.A. You may meet this requirement by (1) passing the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with a score of 550 or better, (2) completing the third course in an introductory, regular sequence of the selected language at UCLA with a minimum grade of A, or (3) taking a reading examination administered by the program.

The foreign language requirement must be completed by the end of your sixth term in residence, unless an earlier deadline is imposed by your adviser.

Course Requirements

A minimum of 42 units (at least nine courses, of which five must be graduate) taken for a letter grade are required, to be distributed as follows: a minimum of five courses (26 units) in the 200 and 500 series, including Archaeology 200 (six units), M201A-M201B (six units each), and two elective graduate courses*, one of which may be course 596. Course 596 (letter-graded) may be taken twice for a maximum of 12 units, but only six units may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement. Four upper division elective courses* (a minimum of 16 units, excluding 199s) are also required.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

You are required to take a comprehensive core examination during your third term in residence. This written examination is based largely on a reading list which has been the focus of the seminar discussions in Archaeology M201A-M201B. The examination is graded high pass, pass, or no pass and may be repeated once.

M.A. Paper

A master's-level research paper, normally no longer than 35 pages and graded by the three members of the M.A. committee, is to be submitted to the program chair by the end of the third week of the seventh term.

*Of the six combined elective courses, no more than four may be offered by the same department. At least one must be outside your sphere of regional interest to be selected from a pool of eligible courses by your adviser.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

Completion of a master's program is required. Applicants who do not have a UCLA M.A. in Archaeology should refer to the admission section under "Requirements for Graduate Degrees" above. All applicants must submit Graduate Record Examination (GRE) scores. Admission to the doctoral program for students completing a UCLA M.A. in Archaeology is based on written recommendation by all three members of the M.A. committee and at least a high pass on either the M.A. core examination or the M.A. paper.

Doctoral students entering the program with an M.A. from another university are required to pass the comprehensive core examination (see "Master of Arts Degree") unless they can demonstrate to the chair and the members of the admissions committee that the examination should be waived.

Foreign Language Requirement

Reading competence in two modern foreign languages relevant to your interests is normally required and may be demonstrated as outlined for the master's degree. Other languages may be required by your dissertation committee.

Course Requirements

You must be enrolled in a minimum of 12 units per term. Archaeology M201A-M201B are required, and your dissertation committee may suggest additional requirements.

Qualifying Examinations

By the end of your fourth term in the doctoral program, after the foreign language requirement has been fulfilled, you must take a written qualifying examination in the following three areas: (1) topical specialization, (2) analytical theory, method, and technique, and (3) regional culture history. If you pass this examination, you may then make arrangements to take the oral examination. If the written examination or any portion thereof is failed, you may make one further attempt if your committee deems it appropriate.

The University Oral Qualifying Examination must be taken by the end of your sixth term in the doctoral program. You are required to submit to the doctoral committee a formal dissertation proposal (of about 10 pages), including the particular research problem on which you will be examined during the oral qualifying examination.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

The final oral examination may be waived by your doctoral committee.

Upper Division Course

C110. Archaeological Materials Identification and Characterization (6 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory, four hours. Laboratory-oriented introduction for archaeologists to identification and quantitative description of solid materials, especially metals, ceramics, and other inorganic and some organic substances. Concurrently scheduled with course C210.

Graduate Courses

200. Archaeology Colloquium (1 or 6 units). Discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: archaeology major or consent of instructor. Required of all students. Development of archaeology as a discipline. Major intellectual trends and current issues in archaeology. Scientific and humanistic viewpoints presented by archaeologists from different academic departments. May be repeated for credit but may be applied only twice toward departmental M.A. requirements. S/U grading only for students enrolled for one unit. (Sp)

M201A-M201B. Graduate Core Seminars: Archaeology (6 units each). (Same as Anthropology M201A-M201B.) Seminar, three hours. Required of all M.A. students. Seminar discussions based on carefully selected list of 30 to 40 major archaeology works. These compulsory core seminars provide students with foundation in breadth of knowledge required of a professional archaeologist. Archaeological historiography, survey of world archaeology, and archaeological techniques. Emphasis on appreciation of the multidisciplinary background of modern archaeology and relevant interpretative strategies. May be repeated for credit with consent of adviser.

(F, M201A; W, M201B)

M205. Special Topics in Archaeology (6 units). (Same as Anthropology M212S.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing in archaeology or in other departments. Open to undergraduates with consent of instructor. Special advanced topics in archaeology such as new strategies, methodologies, excavation projects, regional synthesis, or comparisons on a worldwide basis, including current work by core faculty of the program and special visitors.

C210. Archaeological Materials Identification and Characterization (6 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory, four hours. Laboratory-oriented introduction for archaeologists to identification and quantitative description of solid materials, especially metals, ceramics, and other inorganic and some organic substances. Concurrently scheduled with course C110.

259. Fieldwork in Archaeology (2 to 12 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Participation in archaeological field excavations or museum research under supervision of staff archaeologists at UCLA. Minimum of one month of field time away from campus required. May be repeated for credit with consent of adviser.

M265. Depositional History and Stratigraphic Analysis. (Same as Ancient Near East M265.) Lecture, two hours. Theoretical understanding of depositional processes ("laws") which lead to site formation and of stratigraphic procedures to be used in recovery of embedded cultural materials. Study of issues covered in the literature, with specific test cases from actual excavations and site reports. Coverage of theoretical implications of such disciplines as surveying and pedology with the help of specialists. S/U or letter grading.

501. Cooperative Program (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of UCLA graduate adviser and graduate dean, and host campus instructor, department chair, and graduate dean. Used to record enrollment of UCLA students in courses taken under cooperative arrangements with USC. S/U grading.

596. Individual Studies for Graduate Students (2 to 12 units). Hours to be arranged. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit with consent of adviser.

597. Preparation for Ph.D. Qualifying Examinations (2 to 12 units). Prerequisites: completion of formal coursework, passing of language examinations before enrollment, consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit with consent of adviser. S/U grading.

598. M.A. Paper Preparation (2 to 12 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit with consent of adviser. S/U grading.

599. Ph.D. Dissertation Research and Preparation (2 to 12 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit with consent of adviser. S/U grading.

Related Courses in Other Departments

Related courses, not listed individually, include regional geography, ancient and regional history, ethnography, folklore, history of technology, and the Earth sciences. Also recommended are the appropriate modern and ancient languages for your area of study.

Most archaeology courses are taught in the various departments. The following is a list of such courses, by topic and department. You are encouraged to examine the course listings of all departments for a truly interdisciplinary course of study.

Scope and Objectives

The department offers programs leading to the Bachelor of Arts, Master of Arts, and Ph.D. degrees. Art history courses survey Western and non-Western art from earliest human history to the present. Students learn to treat artistic monuments and trends from a historical point of view, analytically rather than subjectively. This curriculum prepares students for careers in which broad knowledge of art is important and provides students preparing for graduate study with a foundation for research requiring independent critical judgment.

The rich and varied art resources available at UCLA and throughout Southern California offer students extraordinary opportunities to supplement the formal curriculum.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

Preparation for the Major

Required: Two courses from Art History 50, 51, 54, 57 and two courses from 55A, 55B, 56A, 56B. It is strongly recommended that these courses be taken prior to enrollment in upper division courses.

The Major

Required: Eleven upper division art history courses as follows:

(1) A total of six courses (24 units) from the following 12 areas, distributed as follows: one course from three different areas in Group A (three courses total) and one course from three different areas in Group B (three courses total):

Group A — (1) 101A, 101B, M102A, M102B, M102C, M102D, M102E, (2) M102F, M102G, M102H, M102I, M102J, M102K, (3) 105A, 105B, 105C, 105D, 105E, (4) 106A, 106B, 106C, 106D, 108A, 108B, (5) 109A, 109B, 109C, 109D, (6) 110A, 110B, 110C, 110D, 110E, 110F, 110G, (7) C112A, C112B, C112C.

Group B — (8) 104A, 104B, C104C, (9) 114A, 114D, 114F, C115A, (10) 114C, 114E, C115B, C115C, C115D, C115E, C115F, (11) C117A, C117B, C117C, 118D, 118E, (12) 118A, 118C, C119A, C119B.

(2) Five art history electives from the above 12 areas; courses 127, 197, and 199 may also be included.

Two terms of one foreign language or equivalent are also required. The language is in addition to the college foreign language requirements.

Art history majors should be aware that the upper division course requirements in the major (44 units) do not meet the upper division requirement of 72 units for graduation. Additional upper division units must be taken to reach the 72-unit total.

It is recommended that you have each term's program approved by the departmental adviser.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

A minimum grade-point average of 3.25 overall and 3.5 in upper division art history courses is required. The Graduate Record Examination (GRE) is required, although no minimum score has been established. Three letters of recommendation (preferably from art historians) are required, as are two writing samples (two 10-page research papers). The statement of purpose submitted with the application is given weight in the evaluation and should be as specific as possible about your interests in art history. In addition, you must have completed six full courses in the history of art (grades of B or better and not including studio courses), with at least two courses from Fields A and B (see below). Specific areas may not be offered in satisfaction of more than one requirement.

Field A — (1) Aegean, (2) American, (3) Greek and Roman, (4) medieval and Byzantine, (5) modern and contemporary, (6) Renaissance and baroque.

Field B — (7) African, (8) Chinese, (9) Indian/Southeast Asian, (10) Islamic, (11) Japanese, (12) Native North American, (13) oceanic, (14) pre-Columbian.

Field C — (15) Critical theory.

Applicants demonstrating exceptional promise but lacking some or all of the six required courses may, at the discretion of the graduate review committee, be admitted on condition that they make up those courses. Deficiencies must be made up during your first two terms in residence and may not be applied toward degree requirements. Instead of taking a course, you may substitute a competency examination in the deficient area.

Prospective students may contact the Counselor, Department of Art History, 3209 Dickson, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1417, for brochures and information. The department has no special departmental application; admission is limited to Fall Quarter.

Major Areas or Subdisciplines

Fifteen major areas in three fields, as noted under "Admission" above.

Foreign Language Requirement

Reading knowledge of French and German is required of all students except those intending to major in Asian (i.e., Chinese, Japanese, South Asian, Southeast Asian), pre-Columbian, Islamic or, with consent of the adviser, Italian art history. Students majoring in Chinese or Japanese art history must substitute either Chinese or Japanese respectively for either French or German. Those majoring in South Asian, Southeast Asian, or Islamic art history must substitute, for either French or German, an appropriate classical research language of South Asia, Southeast Asia, or the Islamic Middle East. Those majoring in Italian art history may, with consent of their major adviser, substitute Italian for French. In all cases, the final decisions regarding choice must be made in consultation with, and with the consent of, the major adviser. Students majoring in pre-Columbian art history must substitute Spanish for French.

With the exception of Asian and Islamic art history majors, all students must demonstrate reading fluency in both foreign languages by any of the following methods: (1) passing the department language examination, (2) passing the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with a minimum score of 600, (3) enrolling in and completing with a minimum grade of B, UCLA's French 5, German 6, Italian 5, and/or Spanish 25. One of these language requirements must be satisfied by the end of the second term in residence and the other by the end of the sixth.

Students majoring in Asian or Islamic art history must satisfy their European language requirement by the end of the sixth term in residence and may do so by any of the three methods listed above. The Asian or Islamic language requirement, however, is normally satisfied by enrolling in an appropriate course sequence for six consecutive terms (normally beginning with the first term of graduate study) and by maintaining a grade of B or better in those courses. Details and/or exceptions must be worked out with the major adviser.

Course Requirements

The M.A. degree requires the completion of a major and two minors in art history; there are three major/minor course options available (see the department counselor for option details). For options 1 and 2, you are required to take a minimum of 10 graduate and upper division courses, of which at least eight must be in art history and of which at least six must be graduate courses (200 series and 596). For option 3, you are required to take a minimum of 13 graduate and upper division courses (but may be required to take up to 14), of which at least eight must be in art history and of which at least six must be graduate courses (200 series and 596). At least four of these courses (in all options) must be in the 200 series, and no more than two may be 596 courses (Art History 597 and 598 may not be applied toward the degree).

All students must take course 200 and either 201 or 202. Courses should be selected in consultation with your major and minor advisers.

Thesis Plan

The thesis committee is established after completion of all course requirements. At the same time, you select a thesis topic in your major field. The thesis should deal succinctly with the topic in an independent, critical, and original fashion while taking fully into account the present state of research on the problem.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

The M.A. in Art History is usually required for admission to the Ph.D. degree program. However, students with an M.A. degree in other disciplines may apply for admission. The graduate review committee determines the equivalency of the M.A. on an individual basis. An M.A. in Art History from another institution may be accepted as equivalent to that from UCLA or the holder may be accepted into the program at a stage determined by the graduate review committee. All incoming Ph.D. students must have taken and passed with a grade of B or better at least two courses (upper division and/or graduate) in areas not related to the proposed major (as outlined in the M.A. course requirements). Deficiencies must be made up during your first two terms in residence and may not be applied toward degree requirements.

The application must include, in addition to official transcripts and Graduate Record Examination (GRE) scores, all of the following:

- (1) A standard statement of purpose (approximately 400 words) which should be as specific as possible about your interests in art history.
- (2) A copy of the M.A. thesis or, if no thesis was written, one major research paper written at the M.A. level in the major (or intended major) field.
- (3) Three or more letters of recommendation from individuals familiar with your scholarly work, one of which must be a detailed letter of assessment and endorsement from your major adviser for the M.A.
- (4) A written statement from the intended Ph.D. major adviser of willingness to supervise your Ph.D. work.
- (5) Evidence, prior to admission, of reading fluency in two appropriate foreign languages.

Students applying directly to the Ph.D. program from the M.A. in Art History program at UCLA follow a slightly modified procedure. For details, see the department counselor.

Reading knowledge of French and German is requisite for admission at the Ph.D. level for those majoring in all areas except Asian, Islamic, pre-Columbian, or Italian art history. You may demonstrate this knowledge by submitting a Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) score of 600 or better, taking and passing the relevant department language examination(s) after officially being admitted, or completing UCLA's German 6, French 5, and/or Italian 5 with a grade of B or better.

Students intending to major in Asian or Islamic art history must demonstrate, by the methods outlined above, reading fluency in either French or German. In addition, they must complete with a grade of B or better six consecutive quarter courses (or equivalent) in an appropriate Asian or Islamic language. Determination of the appropriate language and acceptable equivalencies should be worked out in advance with the intended major adviser.

Students intending to major in pre-Columbian art history must demonstrate, by the means outlined above, reading fluency in German and Spanish. In the latter case, UCLA's Spanish 25, passed with a grade of B or better, fulfills the requirement.

Students who have passed a required foreign language at another institution must either take and pass the relevant UCLA departmental foreign language examination or submit an official recent (within two years) GSFLT score of 600 or better in that language.

Prospective students may contact the Counselor, Department of Art History, 3209 Dickson, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1417, for brochures and information. The department has no special departmental application; admission is limited to Fall Quarter.

Major Areas or Subdisciplines

Field A — (1) Aegean, (2) American, (3) baroque, (4) Byzantine, (5) contemporary (post-1945), (6) 18th-century, (7) Greek, (8) medieval, (9) 19th-century, (10) Renaissance, (11) Roman, (12) 20th-century.

Field B — (13) African, (14) Chinese, (15) Indian, (16) Islamic, (17) Japanese, (18) Native North American, (19) oceanic, (20) pre-Columbian, (21) Southeast Asian.

Field C — (22) Critical theory.

Foreign Language Requirement

You are normally required to demonstrate, no later than the time of your University Oral Qualifying Examination, reading fluency in one or more foreign languages in addition to those required for admission. Among those areas requiring such reading fluency are Aegean, Greek, Roman, medieval, Byzantine, Renaissance, Islamic, pre-Columbian, and all Asian areas. The applicability of this requirement, the language(s) required, and the exact methods of satisfying the requirement are determined in consultation with the major adviser.

Course Requirements

There are three major/minor course options available (see the department counselor for option details). For options 1 and 2, a minimum of eight graduate and upper division courses is required, of which at least four must be art history graduate courses (200 series and 596). For option 3, a minimum of 11 graduate and upper division courses is required, of which at least four must be art history graduate courses (200 series and 596). Of these totals (eight or 11), you must take at least two, and may take up to five, extra-departmental upper division and/or graduate courses, which must be approved by your major or minor adviser (where applicable).

If you enter the Ph.D. program deficient in Art History 200 or its equivalent, you must add it to your total requirements. In some cases, course 201 may also be required (if recommended by your faculty adviser).

Qualifying Examinations

After completion of coursework and language requirements, you must take the Ph.D. written comprehensive examination to test your breadth and depth of knowledge in the major and minor fields of study. If you fail the examination, or any part thereof, that portion may be repeated during the subsequent term in residence. No further repetition is allowed.

A dissertation topic is selected after you pass the written comprehensive examination; the members of your doctoral committee are then nominated, and the committee is appointed by the dean of the Graduate Division.

After having submitted a dissertation proposal, you then take the University Oral Qualifying Examination, given by your doctoral committee. Assuming there is no more than one no pass vote, you may initiate the procedure to advance to candidacy.

Final Oral Examination

The doctoral committee may decide, by unanimous agreement, to waive the final oral examination (not normally required). If a final oral examination is required, it is held after the final draft of the dissertation has been circulated among the committee members. In case of failure, the doctoral committee decides, by unanimous agreement, whether or not you may be reexamined.

Scope and Objectives

The Asian American Studies Program, an interdepartmental program supported by the Asian American Studies Center, promotes the study of Asian and Pacific peoples in the U.S. from several disciplines. The undergraduate program provides a general introduction to Asian American studies for those who anticipate advanced work at the graduate level or careers in research and community work related to the Asian American. An undergraduate major in Asian American studies is pending final approval. Students currently can pursue the undergraduate specialization. The graduate program leads to the M.A. degree.

A major goal of the program is to communicate the experiences of Asians as an American ethnic group. Courses examine the important issues and concerns of Asian Americans, including their history, mental health, social organization, and culture.

Special Undergraduate Program

Preparation for the Specialization

Required: Asian American Studies 100A-100B.

Upper Division

Since this is not a degree-granting program, students participating in it must complete an organized major.

For further information on the undergraduate specialization, contact the Curriculum Coordinator, Asian American Studies Center, at the above address.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

In addition to the University's minimum requirements, applicants are expected to present evidence of their previous interest in Asian American studies through courses taken at the undergraduate level, by research papers written independently or for related classes, or by work experience in an Asian American community. In any case, applicants are required to submit a paper or article, preferably on Asian Americans, directly to the Asian American Studies Program (3230 Campbell Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1546) as part of their application. Three letters of recommendation are also required.

Major Fields

Since the program is interdepartmental, its major fields are determined by the participating faculty members from various departments.

Research Tool or Language Requirement

Prior to advancement to candidacy, you must fulfill one of the following requirements:

(1) Foreign Language — Two years of university coursework or equivalent in an Asian language. This requirement may be fulfilled before entering the program, but you must pass a proficiency examination administered by the interdepartmental committee.

(2) Research Methods — Three upper division or graduate courses in research methods with grades of B or better (e.g., statistics, computer science, field and observational techniques, or archival methods). Courses should be selected from the interdepartmental committee's approved list.

You must justify your requirement choice in a written statement. The rationale must specify the courses selected and how they directly relate to research and career goals.

Course Requirements

A total of 11 upper division and graduate courses is required for the degree. Of that number, seven must be graduate courses, including the required Asian American Studies 200A, 200B, 200C. Three of the graduate courses must be selected from Anthropology 231, Education 204D, 253G, English M260A, History 201H, 245, Sociology 235, 261, 263, and graduate seminars in Asian American studies. The remaining four courses of the 11-course total, three of which may be upper division, must be approved by your faculty adviser and should be selected to give you additional training in a discipline or greater understanding of a particular topic.

Two courses in the 500 series may be applied toward the required 11 courses; however, only one of the two may be applied toward the required seven graduate courses.

Thesis Plan

In partial fulfillment of the requirements for the M.A. degree, you are required to complete either one of two thesis plans or a comprehensive examination.

Plan A (Thesis)—The thesis is intended to provide the opportunity for independent scholarly research on the historical and contemporary experiences of the Asian American population. It should be an original contribution to the field and the length and quality of a publishable journal article. You are expected to submit a research plan to your thesis committee for approval at the beginning of Fall Quarter of your second year in residence. After your thesis is approved and completed, the committee conducts an oral examination on its subject, usually in Spring Quarter of your second year. Academic credit for thesis research and preparation is given through Asian American Studies 598.

Plan B (Field Research Thesis)—A field research thesis is recommended for students who are interested in the practical application of what they have learned in their graduate coursework or who are intending to pursue careers with Asian American community organizations and agencies. Your field research thesis committee meets with you to approve your project plan at the beginning of Fall Quarter of your second year in residence. After your thesis is completed, the committee conducts an oral examination on the written report of the project, usually in Spring Quarter of your second year. Academic credit for field research is given through course 596 or 598.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

You may elect to complete the M.A. degree by taking a written comprehensive examination based on an annually updated "Approved List of Core Works in Asian American Studies," a collection of approximately 200 of the most significant scholarly and creative books, novels, articles, and reports in the field of Asian American studies. The examination is normally offered during the break between Winter and Spring Quarters. You must notify the program chair of your intent to take the examination at least one academic term before it is administered. If you fail the examination, you may repeat it once. Academic credit for examination preparation is given through Asian American Studies 596.

Lower Division Course

M196A-196E. Critical Issues in U.S.-Asian Relations. (Formerly numbered 196A-196E.) Prerequisite: sophomore standing. Critical examination of U.S. involvement in specific Asian countries, including study of historical, political, and socioeconomic factors that shape relations between Asia and the U.S. Exploration of impact of relationships in the Pacific Rim, as well as on Asian Americans and the Asian American experience. Consult Asian American Studies Center for topics to be offered in a specific term. P/NP or letter grading. M196A. The U.S. and the Philippines. (Same as History M153.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours. Recommended (but not prerequisite): knowledge of Southeast Asian or U.S. history, or both. Examination of interrelationships of immigration and of colonialism and independence between the U.S. and the Philippines, focused mainly within the time period from 1898 to the present; 196B. U.S.-Korea Relations; 196C. U.S.-Vietnam Relations; 196D. U.S.-Japan Relations; 196E. U.S.-China Relations.

(F,W,Sp)

197A-197Z. Topics in Asian American Studies. (Formerly numbered 197.) Lecture, three to four hours. Prerequisite: junior/senior standing. Variable topics in Asian American studies on selected issues in education, literature, social process, public policy, and economic development. P/NP or letter grading.

M197A. Introduction to Indo-American Studies. (Same as Community Health Sciences M197A.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: junior/senior standing in Asian American studies or at least one course in Southeast Asian or Indian history or consent of instructor. Introductory study of Indian American immigration experiences in the U.S., including historical background, demographics, immigration policies and effects, and adaptation experiences. Class projects include sample survey of quality of life, annotated bibliography, and review of creative works.

Mr. Kar (Sp)

M197B. Investigative Journalism and Communities of Color. (Same as Afro-American Studies M195.) Lecture, three hours. Impact of investigative journalism on communities of color; exploration of dimensions of power and oppression as these relate to communities of color. Coursework stresses learning by doing, with students required to apply their knowledge through writing for campus and community media.

Mr. Omatsu

M197H. Culture, Media, and Los Angeles (6 units). (Same as Afro-American Studies M102 and Honors Collegium M102.) Lecture, four hours; screenings, two hours. Role of media in society and its influence on contemporary cultural environment, specifically in Los Angeles; issues of representation as they pertain to race, ethnicity, gender, and sexuality.

Mr. Gabriel (Sp)

199. Special Topics in Asian American Studies (2 to 4 units). Prerequisites: course 100A or 100B or comparable knowledge in Asian American studies, junior or senior standing, consent of instructor. Special individual studies on topics such as ethnic literature, public policies, economic development, immigrant education, and/or social policies related to Asian American studies. May be repeated for a maximum of eight units.

Graduate Courses

200A. Critical Issues in Asian American Studies. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Examines and seeks to develop a critical appreciation of research literature on Asians in America and to develop alternative interpretations of the Asian American experience. Topics include Asian American history and economic/political and social/psychological issues.

Ms. Matsumoto (F)

200B. Critical Issues in Asian American Communities. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Evaluation of traditional and contemporary theories and models of community for their appropriateness to understanding Asian Pacific American communities. Consideration of specific topics which explicate development, structure, and dynamics of Asian Pacific American communities in studying community issues and concerns.

Ms. Park (W)

200C. Critical Issues in Asian American Studies. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Critical review of research methods, strategies, and philosophies in Asian American studies.

Mr. Nakanishi (Sp)

M261. Issues in Third World Literatures and Cultures. (Same as Comparative Literature M274.) Seminar, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Investigation of politics of power, gender, and race in the complex relationships between the so-called First World and Third World, using both theoretical and textual approaches. S/U or letter grading.

M297A-297Z. Topics in Asian American Studies. (Formerly numbered 297.) Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. Selected topics in Asian American studies:

M297A. Topics in Asian American Literature. (Same as English M260A.) Lecture, three hours. Graduate seminar that examines and critically evaluates writings of Asian Americans.

Ms. Cheung

M297B. Asian Migration to the U.S. (Same as Urban Planning M242A.) Emphasis on Asia as main regional source for international migrants. Topics include patterns and theories of international migration and their relevance to the Asian experience, sending and receiving country perspectives, research and policy issues. S/U or letter grading.

M297C. Urbanization in Asia—Policy Issues and Problems. (Same as Urban Planning M242B.) Urbanization in less-developed countries in Asia with specific reference to its peculiar features and characteristics, and relationship of urbanization to the development process. Topics include urbanization development, structural and policy determinants of urbanization, urban policy and strategies, and country case studies. S/U or letter grading.

M297D. Asian Americans and Legal Ideology. (Same as Law M315.) Exploration of Asian American experience as it relates to American legal system, considering both dominant and oppositional concepts of law. Consideration of primary historical documents to examine ways Asian Americans have been victims of the legal system, as well as astute manipulators of the legal system.

490. Writing Workshop for Graduate Students (2 units). Lecture, one hour; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Practice in writing reports, grant proposals, abstracts, theses, and article-length research papers. Analyzing rhetorical and stylistic features of essays in various Asian American journals helps students improve both their prose style and editorial abilities. Four units may be applied toward M.A. degree requirements. May be repeated once for credit. S/U grading.

Ms. Cheung

596. Directed Individual Study or Research (2 to 8 units). Hours to be arranged. Prerequisite: consent of instructor.

598. Research for and Preparation of M.A. Thesis (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Preparation of research data and writing of M.A. thesis. S/U grading.

Scope and Objectives

Astronomy, the oldest science, has now become a meeting place of nearly all physical sciences. It is difficult for any educated person to escape the awe and wonder of such things as the nature of the other planets, the likelihood of black holes in space, the origin and future of the universe, and the possibility of life elsewhere.

*The faculties of the Departments of Astronomy and Physics have proposed a merger of the two units into a new Department of Physics and Astronomy. If adopted, the proposal would be effective as of July 1, 1994. All degrees associated with current programs would continue to be offered.

The Astronomy Department, therefore, has several educational missions: to develop skills in graduate students which will enable them to make contributions at the frontier of astronomical research, to prepare undergraduate majors for entry into a graduate program, and to provide insight and understanding for nonmajors and nonscience students.

Graduate training of future astronomers, up to the Ph.D. level, is the department's first responsibility. Applicants must have solid backgrounds in physics and mathematics. The program provides training in both theoretical and observational astronomy; its strengths, at present, are in solar physics, stellar structure and evolution, magnetohydrodynamics, gaseous nebulae and interstellar medium, infrared instrumentation, galaxies, quasars, and observational and theoretical cosmology.

The department's second responsibility is to the undergraduate astrophysics major who hopes for a career in astrophysics. Some Bachelor of Science degree recipients go on to graduate work; some opt for teaching careers, for which their training in physics, astrophysics, and mathematics is most useful; still others find excellent jobs in industry, where their broad background in physical science with a specialty in astrophysics makes them particularly valuable (especially in computer science, space, and aeronautical fields).

Classes for Nonmajors

The department offers general courses to all University students, including those who are not science oriented.

The Astronomy 2A-2B two-term sequence covers the material in courses 3, 4, and 6. You may take one sequence or the other, but not both.

Astronomy 3 is the fundamental one-term course for students who do not major in physical sciences and should be taken in the first or second year. If you had an astronomical introductory course in high school, you should take either courses 2A-2B, or 3H.

Astronomy 4, 5, and 6 develop the topics covered in course 3 to somewhat greater depths. They use more mathematics but are still aimed at nonscience majors. Course 4 details the stars and stellar systems; course 5 concentrates on the problem of life in the universe; course 6 discusses endpoints of stellar evolution and the structure and evolution of the universe. These three courses may be taken in any order by students with a grade of C or better in course 3, or whose astronomical knowledge is on a similar level.

Students who have had at least two courses in high school algebra and one course in trigonometry are advised to take, instead of Astronomy 3, the parallel honors course, Astronomy 3H. Declared or potential majors in astrophysics or in physical sciences should take course 3H if they need an elementary introductory course in astronomy.

Astronomy 81 and 82 are general survey courses recommended for science majors in their second year. They systematically introduce astrophysics and require a good background in physics and mathematics (at least two terms of the Physics 8 series and two terms of the Mathematics 31/32 series).

Students of junior and senior standing in physics or related sciences are invited to select any of these courses: 115, 117, 127, 140, 180.

Bachelor of Science in Astrophysics

Preparation for the Major

Required: Astronomy 81, 82, Physics 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, 8D/8DL, 8E, Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, 33B, Program in Computing 3 or 10A. Recommended: Astronomy 3H, Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A. Systematic study of astrophysics should begin with Astronomy 81 and 82, taken in the second year.

The Major

Required: Astronomy 115, 117, 127, 140, 180; Physics 105A, 105B, 110A, 110B, 115A, 115B, 131. Recommended: Physics 108, 112, 123, 124, 132.

Honors Program

Senior majors in astrophysics with a 3.4 grade-point average in all astronomy, mathematics, and physics courses are eligible for the honors program in astrophysics. In addition to completing all courses required for the major, you must complete two terms of Astronomy 199. To receive honors and highest honors at graduation, your grade-point average must remain at 3.4 or better, and your work in course 199 must reflect original research and be accepted by the departmental honors committee.

Graduate Study

Admission

The basic requirement for admission is a bachelor's degree in physics or astronomy. Students in closely related fields (e.g., mathematics or chemistry) may be admitted at the discretion of the department. All students who apply should submit at least three letters of recommendation and take the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) General Test and Subject Test in Physics. For further information, contact the Graduate Adviser, Department of Astronomy, 3-164 Knudsen Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1547.

New students and those who have not been admitted to candidacy for the Ph.D. should consult with the graduate adviser at the beginning of Fall Quarter to determine a program for the year.

Master of Science Degree

Course Requirements

Nine courses are required for the master's degree, of which at least five must be at the graduate level in astronomy (excluding Astronomy 200). The B segments of the graduate multiple-term courses (Astronomy 204B, 208B, 217B, 219B, 227B, 230B) count as 1.5 courses each for the purpose of receiving degree credit. Courses taken in the 300 or 500 series may not be applied toward the total course requirement or the graduate course requirement.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

To receive the master's degree, you must obtain at least a B average in all the departmental written comprehensive examinations taken. The examinations are divided into sections, with one section for each course in the A or B series that you may apply toward the M.S., M.A.T., or Ph.D. requirements. The examination is scheduled at the time the final examination for the course would normally be scheduled and is letter graded. You may repeat failed courses for credit but may not repeat the departmental examinations for departmental credit.

Master of Arts in Teaching

The department is not admitting students to the program at this time.

Course Requirements

Nine courses are required for the academic portion of the M.A.T. program. They must include at least five graduate courses in astronomy (excluding Astronomy 200), mathematics, or physics, or 100- or 200-series courses in education required for the instructional credential. The B segments of the graduate multiple-term courses (Astronomy 204B, 208B, 217B, 219B, 227B, 230B) count as 1.5 courses each for the purpose of receiving degree credit. Although it does not count for degree credit, Physics 370 is also required. Courses taken in the 300 or 500 series may not be applied toward the total course requirement or the graduate course requirement.

In order to obtain a secondary credential with the M.A.T. in Astronomy, additional courses in education, including supervised teaching, should be taken.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

This plan is the same as for the M.S. degree.

Ph.D. Degree

Course Requirements

Required for the degree are Astronomy 200, 204A, 208A, 217A, 219A, 227A, 230A; at least four courses from 204B, 208B, 217B, 219B, 227B, 230B; and at least two courses (projects) from 204C, 208C, 217C, 219C, 227C, 230C. You are required to take course 250 each term in residence.

Teaching Experience

Before receiving a Ph.D., you are required to spend at least three terms as a teaching assistant at UCLA or have equivalent experience elsewhere.

Comprehensive Examinations

The departmental written comprehensive examinations are the same as described under the M.S. degree. To be qualified to go on to the Ph.D., you must receive a minimum score on these examinations.

After the written comprehensive examinations are completed, you must then fulfill the normal University requirements for a dissertation and pass the University Oral Qualifying Examination.

Projects

During the Fall Quarters of your second and third years, you are expected to complete a research project. You should work closely with one of the staff both when the project subject is selected and throughout the course of the work. The project may be a continuation of work begun during the preceding Spring Quarter; the goals of the project should be selected to reflect the amount of work completed in the Spring Quarter.

Evaluation of the project is based as much on the quality of the written report as on the quality of the research itself. The project report should include statements of the project goals, the relationship of the project to broader issues in astronomy, the techniques selected to attack the project problem, and the reasons for this choice. If the project is original and interesting, but incomplete, you are encouraged to complete it later, but the grade assigned is based on the portion completed by the end of the Fall Quarter.

Final Oral Examination

You must pass a final examination after completing your dissertation.

Lower Division Courses

2A-2B. Introduction to the Physical Universe. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Thorough introductory survey of astronomy for students not planning to major in physical sciences. Same topics as course 3 but in greater depth, with emphasis on physical reasoning. 2A. Planets and Stars; 2B. Galaxies and Cosmology. Enforced requisite: course 2A (C or better). Mr. Malkan

3. Astronomy: Nature of the Universe. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Not open to students with credit for or currently enrolled in course 3H or 81 or 82. No special mathematical preparation required beyond that necessary for admission to the University in freshman standing. Course for general University students, normally not intending to major in physical sciences, on development of ideas in astronomy and what has been learned of the nature of the universe, including recent discoveries and developments. (F,W,Sp)

3H. Introductory Astronomy and Astrophysics.

Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Not open to students with credit for or currently enrolled in course 3. Introduction to astronomy and astrophysics for freshmen who are seriously interested in science. Requires ability to understand mathematical and physical concepts, but high school algebra and trigonometry classes provide sufficient qualification. Particularly recommended for declared or potential majors in astrophysics or in physical and mathematical sciences. Mr. Morris (F)

4. Universe of Stars and Stellar Systems. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enforced requisite: course 3 or 3H. Essentially nonmathematical course for general University students with previous introduction to astronomy; sequel to course 3, dealing in greater detail with stars and stellar systems. Various observed types of stars in relation to their internal structure and evolutionary state. Interacting binary stars, pulsating stars, explosive stars (novae and supernovae). Mass loss from stars, stellar wind. Galactic and planetary nebulae and their relation to stars. Interstellar medium. Initial stages of stellar evolution (protostars, T Tauri stars) and final stages (degenerate and collapsed stars). Stellar systems from clusters to galaxies. Mr. Plavec (F)

5. Life in the Universe. Preparation: prior introduction to astronomy. Life on Earth and prospects for life elsewhere in the context of the evolution of the universe from the simple to complex. Course material primarily from astronomy and biology but includes some chemistry, geology, and physics. Selected topics treated in some depth, but with little or no formal mathematics. Mr. Zuckerman (W)

6. Cosmology: Our Changing Concepts of the Universe. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enforced requisite: course 3 or 3H. Essentially nonmathematical exposition of our ideas about the structure and evolution of the universe. Historical development of ideas up to the present time. Problem of cosmic center and cosmic edge. Space and time. Curvature of space. General relativity. Black holes. Expanding universe and cosmological redshift. Early stages of the universe, Big Bang, current ideas of the inflationary universe. Mr. Malkan, Mr. Wright (Sp)

81. Astrophysics I: Stars and Nebulae. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, one hour. Enforced requisites: Mathematics 31A, 31B, Physics 8A. Open to qualified sophomore and upper division students. Survey of our knowledge about stars: their distances, masses, luminosities, temperatures, and interrelations between these parameters. Methods and importance for astrophysics. Variable stars. Planetary and gaseous nebulae. Mr. Morris, Mr. Plavec (W)

82. Astrophysics II: Stellar Evolution, Galaxies, and Cosmology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enforced requisites: Mathematics 31A, 31B, Physics 8A. Recommended: course 81, Physics 8B, 8C. Open to qualified sophomore and upper division students. Basic principles of stellar structure and evolution. Red giants, white dwarfs, novae, supernovae, neutron stars, and black holes. Pulsars and galactic X-ray sources. Milky Way galaxy and the interstellar medium. Extragalactic astronomy, galaxy clustering, active galactic nuclei, and quasars. Introduction to cosmology: Hubble law, thermal history of the Big Bang, and earliest moments of the universe. Mr. Coroniti, Mr. Malkan (Sp)

88A-88Z. Lower Division Seminars (2 units each). Discussion, two hours; outside study, four hours. Limited to freshmen. Variable topics; consult Schedule of Classes for topics to be offered in a specific term. P/NP or letter grading:

88A. Cosmic Evolution. Varied astronomical and physical processes of evolution; discussion of how, over billions of years, basic mechanisms of cosmic evolution have transformed universe from fiery origin at Big Bang into abode for intelligent life. Mr. Malkan

Upper Division Courses

115. Statistical Mechanics and Its Application to Astrophysics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, 33B, Physics 8A, 8B, 8C, 8D. Particle distributions, partition functions, black body radiation, Saha equation, degeneracy. Applications to stellar atmospheres, stellar interiors, and the interstellar medium. Mr. Jura (W)

117. Radiation and Fluids in Astrophysics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 115 or equivalent and junior standing in astrophysics or physics, or consent of instructor. Emission and absorption of radiation by matter, spectroscopy, spectral lines, and radiative transfer. Hydrodynamics and shock waves. Applications to stars, to interstellar and intergalactic media, and to the early universe. Mr. Jura, Mr. Morris (Sp)

127. Stellar Atmospheres, Interiors, and Evolution. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: senior standing in astrophysics or physics or consent of instructor. Recommended: courses 115, 117. Physical conditions in stellar interiors. Energy production in stars. Stellar evolution from star formation through normally observed stages to white dwarfs, neutron stars, and black holes. Novae, supernovae, other variable stars, chromospheres and coronae of sun and stars. Evolution of binary stars. Analysis of stellar atmospheres. Mr. Plavec, Mr. Ulrich (Sp)

140. Stellar Systems and Cosmology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: senior standing in astrophysics or physics or consent of instructor. Properties of star clusters and galaxies, with particular emphasis on Milky Way galaxy. Clusters and superclusters of galaxies. Extragalactic distance scale. Quasars and active galaxies. Topics in cosmology, including expansion of the universe, microwave background, galaxy formation from primordial fluctuations, and observational constraints on the Big Bang. Mr. Morris, Mr. Wright (W)

180. Astrophysics Laboratory. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, four hours. Prerequisites: junior or senior standing in astrophysics, physics, or a related field, consent of instructor. Lectures cover statistical methods in astrophysics, one- and two-dimensional random processes, and numerical methods. Laboratory experiments involve radio astronomy, interferometry, narrowband solar imaging, and visual photometry. Emphasis on use of computers for automatic collection of data and for processing two-dimensional astronomical images. Mr. McLean, Mr. Wright (F)

199. Special Studies (2 or 4 units). Prerequisites: senior standing in astrophysics or physics (with an outstanding record), consent of instructor. Special studies with an individual faculty member.

Graduate Courses

Prerequisite to all graduate courses is consent of instructor. Courses 204A through 230C are offered in alternate years and consist of three terms according to the following scheme: level A (Winter Quarter, four units) — a basic survey course presenting the minimum knowledge in the field expected of all students who wish to obtain the Ph.D., but who do not necessarily plan to specialize in the field covered by the course; level B (Spring Quarter, six units) — advanced level for those considering the possibility of taking up a research project in the field; level C (Fall Quarter, following academic year, 10 units) — individual research projects supervised by the instructor in the form of a laboratory. Course 240 is equivalent to the B courses.

200. Introduction to Graduate Study of Astronomy. Required of all new graduate students. Survey of various fields of astronomy and astrophysics; first acquaintance with working methods and with department. Survey of basic astronomical nomenclature; background in physics and mathematics outlined as required in graduate courses. Mr. Plavec

204A-204B-204C. Observational Astronomy (4 units, 6 units, 10 units). Star catalogs and charts. Radiation measurements, photoelectric photometry, and solid-state detectors. Radio and infrared techniques. Spectroscopic observations. Includes laboratory work. Mr. McLean, Mr. Ulrich, Mr. Wright

208A-208B-208C. Interstellar Medium (4 units, 6 units, 10 units). Dynamics and physics of interstellar gas and dust. Radio observations of interstellar medium. Diffuse and planetary nebulae. Magnetic fields in space. Star formation. Topics in high-energy astrophysics. Mr. Jura, Ms. Turner, Mr. Zuckerman

217A-217B-217C. Stellar Photospheres (4 units, 6 units, 10 units). Physics of stellar photospheres and radiative transfer. Continuous and line spectra of stars. Chemical abundances in stars. Stars with extended and unstable atmospheres. Mr. Plavec, Mr. Ulrich

219A-219B-219C. Stellar Systems (4 units, 6 units, 10 units). Statistical astronomy. Distance determination. Stellar motions and populations. Stellar dynamics. Structure of the galaxy. Galaxies and clusters of galaxies. Distribution of matter in space. Cosmology. Mr. Malkan, Mr. Wright

227A-227B-227C. Stellar Structure and Evolution (4 units, 6 units, 10 units). Structure and evolution of stars. Stellar energy sources and problems of nucleosynthesis. Theory of variable stars. Evolution of and mass exchange in binary stars. Final state of stellar evolution and degenerate stars. Supernova processes. Practical computation of stellar structure and evolution. Mr. Plavec, Mr. Ulrich, Mr. Zuckerman

230A-230B-230C. High-Energy Astrophysics (4 units, 6 units, 10 units). High-energy radiation processes. Observational techniques of X-ray and gamma ray astronomy. Theory and observational results of X-ray and gamma ray sources, pulsars, radio galaxies, and quasars. Mr. Coroniti, Mr. Wright

240. Modern Problems in Astronomy and Astrophysics. Open to qualified graduate students in astronomy and in related fields (physics, atmospheric sciences, Earth and space sciences). Special topics offered by distinguished visiting professors. May be repeated for credit.

250. Seminar: Current Astronomical Research (2 units). Required of all graduate students. Current astronomical problems. S/U grading. (F,W,Sp)

M285. Origin and Evolution of Solar System. (Same as Earth and Space Sciences M285.) Dynamical problems of solar system; chemical evidences from geochemistry, meteorites, and solar atmosphere; nucleosynthesis; solar origin, evolution, and termination; solar nebula, hydromagnetic processes, formation of planets and satellite systems. Content varies from year to year. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading. Mr. Newman (Sp)

296A-296Z. Seminars: Research Topics in Astronomy (2 to 4 units each). Discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced study and analysis of current topics in astronomy. Discussion of current research and literature in research speciality of faculty member teaching course. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading: Mr. Malkan

296A. Active Galactic Nuclei. Mr. Malkan

296B. Solar Physics. Mr. Ulrich

296C. Infrared Instrumentation. Mr. Becklin, Mr. McLean

M297. Research Tutorial: Astroparticle Physics (2 or 4 units). (Same as Physics M297.) Lecture, one hour; discussion, two hours. Required of each graduate student doing research in this field. Seminar and discussion by faculty, postdoctoral fellows, and graduate students on topics of current interest in astroparticle physics. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading. Mr. Becklin, Mr. Cline

375. Teaching Apprentice Practicum (1 to 4 units). Prerequisite: apprentice personnel employment as a teaching assistant, associate, or fellow. Teaching apprenticeship under active guidance and supervision of a regular faculty member responsible for curriculum and instruction at the University. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

The following courses may be repeated at the discretion of the department:

596A. Directed Individual Studies (4 to 10 units).

596L. Advanced Study and Research at Lick Observatory (4 to 12 units). Intended for graduate students who require observational experience, as well as those working on observational problems for their thesis. Mr. Kraft

599. Ph.D. Research and Writing (10 to 12 units).

Scope and Objectives

The atmospheric sciences present a wide variety of problems of compelling scientific interest and increasing social concern. This is exemplified by efforts to improve air quality, depredations caused by severe storms and floods, attempts to control or modify weather phenomena, problems of long-range weather forecasts and climate change, and expanding scientific frontiers into our outer atmosphere and atmospheres of other planets.

The department offers a broad curriculum in dynamic and synoptic meteorology, atmospheric physics and chemistry, and upper atmosphere and space physics.

The Bachelor of Science degree qualifies students for entry-level technical positions or represents valuable background for training in other professions. Master of Science and Ph.D. degree holders work in universities, research centers, laboratories, and government services and, increasingly, in the rapidly burgeoning private sector.

Bachelor of Science Degree

Preparation for the Major

Required: Atmospheric Sciences 2A or 6A, 3A, Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, Mathematics 31A or 31AQ, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, 33B, Physics 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, 8D/8DL, Program in Computing 3.

The Major

Required: Atmospheric Sciences 94, 104A, 104B, 104C, C105, 161; two courses from Atmospheric Sciences CM140, C141, C142, 143, 144, 146, 151, C152, C154, C162; two courses from Chemistry and Biochemistry 11B, 11C, 103, 110A, 110B, 113A, C113B, Mathematics 115A, 115B, 132, 135A, 135B, 136, 145, 146, M150A, 150B, Physics 110A, 110B, M122, 123, 131, 132, Statistics 154A, 154B. Recommended: Four units of Atmospheric Sciences 198 for students preparing for a career in the operational meteorology field.

Students preparing for graduate studies in atmospheric chemistry should take Chemistry and Biochemistry 11B, 103, Mathematics 115A, 135A, 136, Physics 8E, 131, 132; students preparing for graduate studies in upper atmosphere and space physics should take Mathematics 115A, 135A, Physics 8E, 110A, 110B, M122; students preparing for graduate studies in atmospheric dynamics and physics should take Atmospheric Sciences CM140, C141, C142, Mathematics 115A, 135A, 136, 145, Physics 8E, 131, 132.

Environmental Studies Sequences — The department offers two sequences of courses designed for students who wish to obtain a broader background in environmental problems, including air pollution, global climate change, and ozone depletion. One sequence is offered at the general education level (Atmospheric Sciences 2E, 3E, 6E) for all students seeking to fulfill GE requirements. Courses 2E/3E and 3E/6E fulfill the complementary course requirement; course 3E fulfills the laboratory and/or demonstration requirement. Completion of the three general education courses concludes the sequence.

The sequence of upper division courses (Atmospheric Sciences C142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 151) is designed for physical sciences, engineering, and life sciences majors or other qualified students. Completion of three of the courses constitutes fulfillment of the upper division sequence. Courses C142 or 144, 145, and 151 are recommended for students who wish to focus on air pollution; C142, 143, and 145 have a global climate change focus; and C142, 145, and 151 focus on ozone depletion.

Graduate Study

The Department of Atmospheric Sciences offers the M.S., C.Phil., and Ph.D. degrees.

Admission

There are no admission requirements in addition to University minimum requirements and no application form in addition to the one used by UCLA Graduate Application Processing. Three letters of recommendation are required. For departmental brochures and information, write to Department of Atmospheric Sciences, 7127 Math Sciences, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1565. In addition to students holding bachelor's degrees in meteorology or atmospheric sciences, graduates with degrees in related disciplines — astronomy, chemistry, engineering, geophysics, mathematics, oceanography, and physics — are encouraged to apply for graduate standing in the department. Programs are arranged by consultation between the student and the department's graduate advisers, and considerable flexibility is maintained so that maximum advantage may be taken of the candidate's previous education.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

Dynamic and synoptic meteorology; atmospheric physics and chemistry; upper atmosphere and space physics.

Master of Science Degree

Course Requirements

A total of nine courses must be completed, five of which must be in the 200 or 500 series. You must also attain a grade of B (3.0) or better in one course in each of two fields other than your field of specialization. Atmospheric Sciences C200A is required of all students without formal background in fluid dynamics, while course C200B is required of all students without formal background in atmospheric sciences. Major field requirements are as follows: atmospheric physics and chemistry — courses M203A, C203B, 203C; dynamic and synoptic meteorology — courses C201A, 201B, 201C; upper atmosphere and space physics — courses C205A, 205B, 205C.

Only one 500-series course (four units) may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement for the M.S. degree.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

The comprehensive examination is based on selected coursework and is conducted at the end of Fall and Spring Quarters. It is composed of two parts — one written, one oral. Grading of the examination is based on a 4.0 scale, with a 3.0 required for a pass at the M.S. level, and a 3.5 or better to continue toward the Ph.D. You are permitted two attempts to obtain the requisite grade either for termination at the M.S. level or for continuation toward a Ph.D. You are encouraged to take the examination as soon as possible. You must, however, attempt the examination by the end of your first two years of study and, if necessary, retake the examination at the earliest available time.

Contact the department for the specific examination requirements of the three major fields.

The special oral examination, conducted by a three-member departmental guidance committee, is based on an individual list of topics which you select in consultation with the guidance committee members. The list should represent the equivalent of three advanced courses (one of which may be 596) in your area of research specialization.

Thesis Plan

If you have a grade-point average of 3.5 or better, you may petition the department to obtain the M.S. by writing an original thesis. The petition must be received by the graduate advisers at least one year before you complete the degree (at the end of your first year of study). Provided you maintain a high academic standard in coursework, the accepted thesis may be used instead of the comprehensive examination for continuation toward the Ph.D. program.

Ph.D. Degree

Course Requirements

Students entering the department with an M.S. degree have no specific course requirements other than Atmospheric Sciences 270 in which you must present a formal seminar attended and graded by all faculty members. The graduate advisers may, at their discretion, prescribe courses in areas in which they deem students to have insufficient background to help them in preparing to pass the comprehensive examination.

Teaching Experience

There is no formal requirement for teaching experience, but it is strongly encouraged, and approximately 65 percent of our graduate students serve as teaching assistants for one or more terms.

Qualifying Examinations

If you selected the M.S. comprehensive examination plan, you must also take an in-depth oral examination in your area of research specialization. A doctoral committee is appointed to conduct the University Oral Qualifying Examination on your selected dissertation topic and related areas, and the final oral examination which is required of all students. Each of these examinations must be passed in no more than two attempts.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

This examination is required of all students.

Lower Division Courses

1. Introduction to Weather Maps and Weather Forecasting. Lecture, three hours. Introduction to weather maps and satellite imagery and their use in making a weather forecast. Discussions also include structure of the National Weather Service and services it provides to the general public. Course allows students to make weather forecasts for Los Angeles and one city east of the Rocky Mountains.

2. Air Pollution. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Causes and effects of high concentrations of pollution in the atmosphere. Topics include nature and sources of gaseous and particulate pollutants, their transport, dispersion, modification, and removal, with emphasis on atmospheric processes on scales ranging from individual sources to global effects; interaction with biosphere and oceans; stratospheric pollution. Mr. Cassmassi (F,Sp), Mr. Turco (W)

2A. Air Pollution (5 units). Lecture, three hours; discussion, three hours. Preparation: major in physical sciences, life sciences, or engineering, or other majors who have completed Physics 6B and Mathematics 3A. Course for majors parallel to course 2; discussion section includes use of calculus. Discussion topics include composition of the atmosphere, air pollution, depletion of stratospheric ozone layer, global geochemical cycles, global greenhouse warming, polar ozone hole, nuclear winter. Mr. Turco (W)

2E. Air Pollution (5 units). Lecture, three hours; discussion, three hours. Course for students with interests in environmental studies parallel to course 2; discussion section focuses on intersection of science and policy for issues in local, regional, and global air pollution; use of case-study approach and participation of experts from social, health, and life sciences in class discussions. Letter (majors) or P/NP or letter (nonmajors) grading. Mr. Turco (W)

3. Introduction to the Atmospheric Environment. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Nature and causes of weather phenomena, including winds, clouds, rain, lightning, tornadoes and hurricanes, solar and terrestrial radiation; phenomena of the higher atmosphere; ionosphere and auroras; causes of air pollution; proposed methods and status of weather modification.

Mr. Fovell (W), Mr. Lew (F,Sp)

3A. Introduction to the Atmospheric Environment (5 units). Lecture, three hours; discussion, three hours. Enforced requisite: Physics 8B. Course for majors parallel to course 3; discussion section includes use of calculus. Discussion topics include atmospheric thermodynamics, extratropical synoptic-scale disturbances, atmospheric aerosol and microphysical processes, clouds and storms, radiative processes, atmospheric dynamics. Mr. Lew (F)

3E. Introduction to the Atmospheric Environment (5 units). Lecture, three hours; discussion, three hours. Course for students with interests in environmental studies parallel to course 3; discussion section emphasizes environmental aspects of atmospheric phenomena, with focus on scientific issues of severe weather and climate change and particular attention to those topics that are relevant to policy issues. Letter (majors) or P/NP or letter (nonmajors) grading. Mr. Lew (Sp)

4. California Weather and Climate. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enforced requisite: course 3 or 3A. Sequel to course 3 dealing in greater detail with atmospheric phenomena relevant to the weather of California, and nature of weather and climate of various regions of the state. Topics include extratropical cyclones and fronts, thunderstorms, severe weather, sea and land breezes, Santa Ana winds, low-level temperature inversions, air pollution, climate change, and discussion of present weather.

5. Climates of Other Worlds. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Introduction to atmospheres of planets and their satellites in the solar system using information obtained during the recent planetary exploration program. Elementary description of origin and evolution of atmospheres on the planets. Climates on the planets, conditions necessary for evolution of life, and its resulting effect on planetary environment. Mr. Thorne (W)

6. Climate and Climatic Change. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Introduction to physical causes of climate, classification of climate, and global distribution of climate types. Description of climate changes over time scales ranging from lifetime of Earth to el niño events. Discussion of causes of climatic change (e.g., long-term steady increase in solar luminosity, short-term fluctuations in solar luminosity, changes in Earth's orbit, changes in atmospheric composition, volcanoes, anthropogenic changes such as increased CO<sub>2</sub> and nuclear war). State of the art in modeling and predicting climate. Mr. Mechoso (Sp)

6A. Climate and Climatic Change (5 units). Lecture, three hours; discussion, three hours. Enforced requisite: Physics 8D. Course for majors parallel to course 6; discussion section includes use of calculus. Discussion topics include atmospheric circulation, oceanic circulation, greenhouse effect, ice ages, ocean/atmosphere interactions, ozone hole, past climates, climate prediction. Mr. Mechoso (Sp)

6E. Climate and Climatic Change (5 units). Lecture, three hours; discussion, three hours. Course for students with interests in environmental studies parallel to course 6; discussion section places scientific and technological aspects of climate and climate change in context of societal impacts of climate variations. Discussion of modern methods used to predict climate change and their impact. Letter (majors) or P/NP or letter (nonmajors) grading. Mr. Mechoso (Sp)

8. Clouds, Rain, and Storms. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. The raindrop and the ice crystal. Relation of meteorological conditions to cloud types. Precipitation mechanisms from clouds. Different scales of atmospheric cloud organization. Description and dynamics of spectacular weather systems, ranging from tornadoes to hurricanes. Severe weather forecasting.

88. Lower Division Seminar. Seminar, three hours. Variable topics; consult Schedule of Classes or department for topics to be offered in a specific term. P/NP or letter grading.

94. Survey of Atmospheric Sciences (2 units). Preparation: undergraduate physical sciences major. General introductory seminar on current research topics in atmospheric sciences. Students are directed in a library research project and prepare a brief class presentation/term paper under supervision of participating faculty member. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Blier (F)

Upper Division Courses

104A. Atmospheric Thermodynamics. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisites: Mathematics 32B, Physics 8B. Basic thermodynamics, including first, second, and third laws. Atmospheric statics. Dry adiabatic processes. Phase changes of water and moist adiabatic processes. Introduction to cloud microphysics. Gravitational stability. Mr. Wakimoto (F)

104B. Introduction to Dynamic Meteorology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course 104A. Kinematic properties of velocity field: streamlines and trajectories, vorticity and divergence. Equations governing atmospheric motions: equation of motion, equation of mass continuity, thermodynamic energy equation. Static equilibrium, pressure as vertical coordinate. Geostrophic flow. Circulation and vorticity. Quasi-geostrophic motion. Dynamics of extratropical cyclones, baroclinic instability, fronts. Mr. Yanai (W)

104C. Introduction to Synoptic Meteorology. Laboratory, six hours. Prerequisite: course 104B. Weather map analysis. Thermodynamic diagrams. Satellite interpretation. Severe weather forecasting. Isentropic analysis. Mr. Blier (Sp)

C105. Advanced Synoptic Meteorology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course 104C and Program in Computing 3, or consent of instructor. Structure and analysis of the wave cyclone. Characteristics of frontal zones. Frontogenesis. Diagnosis of vertical velocity; quasi-geostrophic omega equation: derivation, applications, and alternative formulations. Sawyer/Eliassen equation. Diabatic effects on cyclogenesis. Modeling studies. Discussion of current research topics. Concurrently scheduled with course C227. Mr. Blier (F)

CM140. Introduction to Fluid Dynamics. (Same as Earth and Space Sciences M140.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Corequisite: Physics 131. Equations of fluid motion. Circulation theorems. Irrotational flow. Vortex motion. Rotating frame. Hydrostatic and geostrophic balance. Sound and shock waves. Viscous flow. Concurrently scheduled with course C200A. Mr. Mechoso (F)

C141. Introduction to Geophysical Fluid Dynamics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: Physics 131 or consent of instructor. Recommended: course CM140. Equations of motion in a rotating frame, with special emphasis on shallow-water model. Potential vorticity. Geostrophic motion. Gravity and Rossby waves. Geostrophic adjustment. Quasi-geostrophic motion. Laplace tidal equation. Kelvin and mixed Rossby gravity waves. Baroclinic instability. Concurrently scheduled with course C201A. Mr. McWilliams (F)

C142. Introduction to Atmospheric Science. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Introductory course for physical sciences, life sciences, or engineering majors interested in environmental issues. Introduction to atmospheric environment, with emphasis on structure, thermodynamics, and dynamics of extratropical atmosphere. Concurrently scheduled with course C200B. Mr. Blier (W)

143. Physical Oceanography. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: Mathematics 3B or 31B. Introductory course for physical sciences, life sciences, or engineering majors interested in environmental issues. Observations of temperature, salinity, density, and currents. Methods. Wind-driven and geostrophic currents. California Current and Gulf Stream. Internal waves. Surface waves and tides. Air/sea interactions. Coastal upwelling. Biological/physical interactions. El niño. Role of ocean in climate and global change. Santa Monica Bay field trip. Mr. Halpern (W)

144. Air Pollution Meteorology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course C142 or consent of instructor. Structure of surface layer of the atmosphere, including its temperature, humidity, and winds; properties of regional weather systems and implications for air pollution transport and dispersion; turbulence and diffusion in lower atmosphere; advective transport and deposition processes for air pollutants; air pollutant source/receptor relationships in urban and regional air-sheds.

145. Physics and Chemistry of Atmospheric Environment. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: Physics 6C or 8D or consent of instructor. Introductory course for physical sciences, life sciences, or engineering majors interested in environmental issues. Structure and composition of the atmosphere; atmospheric evolution; chemical and photochemical processes; aerosol and cloud microphysical processes; radiation transfer in clear, cloudy, and polluted air; human influences on atmospheric composition and chemistry; effects on global climate. Mr. Thorne (Sp)

146. Remote Sensing of the Environment. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: Physics 6B or 8D or consent of instructor. Introductory course for physical sciences, life sciences, or engineering majors interested in environmental issues. Introduction to properties of radiation in the atmosphere and principles of active and passive remote sensing of atmospheres and surfaces as it applies to monitoring of Earth's environment and global change. Mr. Venkateswaran (W)

151. Environmental Chemistry Laboratory. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, three hours. Laboratory experience for students who may wish to pursue a career in environmental science. Essential laboratory procedures to be performed in context of timely environmental issues involving smog formation, acid rain, and ozone depletion. Hands-on experience using scientific instruments and analytical techniques appropriate for environmental assessment. Ms. Paulson (W)

C152. Physics of Clouds and Precipitation. Lecture, three hours. Recommended (but not prerequisite): Physics 110A. Thermodynamics of moist air, phase changes of water substance, latent heats, moist adiabatic processes; elementary cloud dynamics; cloud microstructure; microphysics of cloud droplets, nucleation phenomena, droplet hydrodynamics, coalescence and precipitation; ice physics; charge separation mechanisms; macrostructure of clouds and storms. Concurrently scheduled with course C203B. Mr. Lew (W)

C154. Introduction to Solar System Plasmas. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: Mathematics 33A and Physics 8D, or consent of instructor. Introduction to basic plasma physical processes occurring in the sun, solar wind, magnetospheres, and ionospheres of planets, using simple fluid (magnetohydrodynamic) models as well as individual particle (radiation belt dynamics) approach. Solar-planetary coupling processes, geomagnetic phenomena, aurora. Concurrently scheduled with course C205A. Mr. Thorne (F)

161. Numerical Methods in Atmospheric Sciences. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisites: Mathematics 33B and Program in Computing 3, or consent of instructor. Numerical solutions of problems selected from atmospheric sciences. Matrix inversion. Solution of oscillation, decay, advection, and vorticity equations. Mr. Fovell (Sp)

C162. Statistics in Atmospheric Sciences. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: Mathematics M150A or Statistics M152A or equivalent. Survey of methods used for data analysis in atmospheric sciences, with emphasis on practical applications. Methods include linear regression, factor analysis, and cluster analysis. Concurrently scheduled with course C213. Mr. Fovell (F)

195. Senior Paper. Prerequisite: senior standing in atmospheric sciences. Supervised through individual consultation with an appropriate faculty member, students write a research paper on a topic of their own choosing within their area of concentration in the major. May be used for writing honors thesis. (F,W,Sp)

198. Operational Meteorology (2 units). Laboratory, six hours. Prerequisites: course 104C, junior or senior standing in atmospheric sciences. Daily contact with weather data and forecasting, satellite and radar data. Introduction to weather forecasting for aviation, air pollution, marine weather, fire weather, and public use. Includes daily weather map discussions and visits to observing, radiosonde, and radar installations. Mr. Blier, Mr. Wakimoto (F,W,Sp)

199. Special Studies in Meteorology (2 or 4 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Special individual studies.

Graduate Courses

C200A. Introduction to Fluid Dynamics. (Formerly numbered C200.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Corequisite: Physics 131. Equations of fluid motion. Circulation theorems. Irrotational flow. Vortex motion. Rotating frame. Hydrostatic and geostrophic balance. Sound and shock waves. Viscous flow. Concurrently scheduled with course CM140.

Mr. Mechoso (F)

C200B. Introduction to Atmospheric Science. (Formerly numbered C201.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Intended for graduate students with little or no prior background in atmospheric sciences. Introduction to atmospheric environment, with emphasis on structure, thermodynamics, and dynamics of extratropical atmosphere. Concurrently scheduled with course C142.

Mr. Blier (W)

C201A. Introduction to Geophysical Fluid Dynamics. (Formerly numbered C202.) Lecture, three hours. Equations of motion in a rotating frame, with special emphasis on shallow-water model. Potential vorticity. Geostrophic motion. Gravity and Rossby waves. Geostrophic adjustment. Quasi-geostrophic motion. Laplace tidal equation. Kelvin and mixed Rossby gravity waves. Baroclinic instability. Concurrently scheduled with course C141.

Mr. McWilliams (F)

201B. Atmospheric Wave Motions. (Formerly numbered 210A.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course C141/C201A. Wave motions in a compressible, stratified, and rotating atmosphere. Acoustic and gravity waves, anelastic and quasi-static approximations. Kelvin/Helmholtz instability. Quasi-static oscillations of a planetary atmosphere. Quasi-geostrophic motions. Baroclinic and barotropic instabilities. Propagation of planetary waves.

Mr. McWilliams (W)

201C. Introduction to Atmospheric Turbulence and Convection. (Formerly numbered 226.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course C200A or consent of instructor. Small-scale nonhydrostatic motions in the atmosphere. Introduction to turbulence and thermal convection. Planetary boundary layer, effects of moisture on atmospheric motions, theory of moist convection, cumulus convection.

Mr. Yanai (Sp)

M203A. Introduction to Atmospheric Chemistry. (Same as Civil Engineering M262A.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite for undergraduates: Chemistry 11C. Principles of chemical kinetics, thermochemistry, spectroscopy, and photochemistry; chemical composition and history of Earth's atmosphere; biogeochemical cycles of key atmospheric constituents; basic photochemistry of troposphere and stratosphere, upper atmosphere chemical processes; air pollution; chemistry and climate.

Ms. Paulson (F)

C203B. Physics of Clouds and Precipitation. (Formerly numbered 203B.) Lecture, three hours. Thermodynamics of moist air, phase changes of water substance, latent heats, moist adiabatic processes; elementary cloud dynamics; cloud microstructure; microphysics of cloud droplets, nucleation phenomena, droplet hydrodynamics, coalescence and precipitation; ice physics; charge separation mechanisms; macrostructure of clouds and storms. Concurrently scheduled with course C152.

Mr. Lew (W)

203C. Atmospheric Radiation. Lecture, three hours. Survey of atmospheric radiation and radiative processes; thermal radiation, infrared radiative transfer in atmospheres, energy balance relationships; solar radiation, Rayleigh and Mie scattering, atmospheric optics; radiation climatology, energy balance and climate; remote sensing of atmospheres.

Mr. Venkateswaran (Sp)

C205A. Introduction to Solar System Plasmas. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Introduction to basic plasma physical processes occurring in the sun, solar wind, magnetospheres, and ionospheres of planets, using simple fluid (magnetohydrodynamic) models as well as individual particle (radiation belt dynamics) approach. Solar-planetary coupling processes, geomagnetic phenomena, aurora. Concurrently scheduled with course C154. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Mr. Thorne (F)

205B. Descriptive Solar-Terrestrial Physics. (Formerly numbered 205C.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Solar, interplanetary, magnetospheric, ionospheric, auroral, geomagnetic phenomenological background for studies in space physics. Complements theoretical space physics courses. Contextual understanding and literacy in space physics terminology provided. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Mr. Lyons (Sp)

205C. Planetary Upper Atmospheres. (Formerly numbered 205B.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Aeronomy of upper atmospheres of Earth and other planets and some of their satellites — thermospheric structure and morphology, circulations, and disturbances; ionospheres as collisional and magnetized (unmagnetized) plasmas: currents, drifts, and instabilities. Examples of upper atmospheric interaction with lower atmosphere and magnetosphere. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Dynamic and Synoptic Meteorology

210. Dynamics of Planetary Circulations. (Formerly numbered 210B.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 201B. Interaction between waves and mean zonal and meridional circulations. Vacillation. Regimes of thermally forced planetary circulations and their stability. Frontogenesis. Geostrophic turbulence. Forced planetary waves. Persistent anomalies of atmospheric circulation. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

212A. Numerical Methods in Geophysical Fluid Dynamics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite or corequisite: course C201A. Basic numerical methods for initial-boundary value problems in fluid dynamics, with emphasis on applications to atmospheric and oceanographic problems. Finite-difference methods and truncation error. Linear and nonlinear computational instability. Computational modes and computational boundary conditions. Nonlinear shallow-water equation model. Spectral methods. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Mr. Mechoso (W)

212B. Numerical Modeling of the Atmosphere I. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 201B and 212A, or consent of instructor. Dynamics of numerical weather prediction and climate models and their computational design. Basic governing equations. Vertical and horizontal coordinates. Quasi-geostrophic and balanced models. Shallow-water equation model. Three-dimensional primitive equation models. Limited-area modeling. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

212C. Numerical Modeling of the Atmosphere II. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 201C or consent of instructor. Formulation of physical processes in numerical weather prediction and climate models. Planetary boundary layer processes. Turbulence closure models. Condensation processes. Parameterization of moist-convective processes. Cloudiness parameterization. Parameterization of gravity wave drag. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

C213. Statistics in Atmospheric Sciences. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: Mathematics M150A or Statistics M152A or equivalent. Survey of methods used for data analysis in atmospheric sciences, with emphasis on practical applications. Methods include linear regression, factor analysis, and cluster analysis. Concurrently scheduled with course C162. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Mr. Fovell (F)

214. Theoretical Climatic Dynamics. Lecture, three hours. Radiative transfer and energy-balance models (EBMs). Multiple equilibrium climates and their stability. Coupled EBMs of the atmosphere and oceans. Climatic history of our planet. Continuum mechanics of ice sheets and mantle. Oscillatory models of Quaternary glaciation cycles. Transitions from equilibrium to periodic and aperiodic climate behavior. Climatic predictability. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Mr. Ghil (Sp)

216A. Tropical Motions with Moist Processes. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 201C. Cumulus convection and the boundary layer in the tropics. Cloud clusters and mesoscale convection systems. Interaction of cumulus convection with large-scale environment. Tropical cyclones. Monsoon meteorology. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Mr. Yanai (F)

216B. Wave Motions in the Tropical Atmosphere. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 201B. Basic theory of equatorially trapped waves. Observations of tropical wave disturbances. Generation mechanisms of tropical waves. Tropical 30-50 day oscillation. Quasi-biennial and semiannual oscillations. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

218. Dynamics of the Atmosphere/Ocean System. Lecture, three hours. Transfer of properties between atmosphere and ocean; wind-driven ocean currents; coastal upwelling. Air/sea interactions. Effects of oceans on climate. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

220. Dynamics of the Middle Atmosphere. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses C200B, C201A. Structure and composition of the middle atmosphere. Waves in the middle atmosphere, including tides, planetary waves, and gravity waves. Quasi-biennial oscillations. Stratospheric sudden warmings. Semiannual oscillations. Wave-mean flow interactions. Interactions between middle and lower atmosphere. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

M224B. Atmospheric Diffusion and Air Pollution. (Same as Civil Engineering M262B.) Lecture, three hours. Nature and sources of atmospheric pollution; diffusion from point, line, and area sources; pollution dispersion in urban complexes; meteorological factors and air pollution potential; meteorological aspects of air pollution. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

C227. Advanced Synoptic Meteorology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course 104C and Program in Computing 3, or consent of instructor. Structure and analysis of the wave cyclone. Characteristics of frontal zones. Frontogenesis. Diagnosis of vertical velocity; quasi-geostrophic omega equation: derivation, applications, and alternative formulations. Sawyer/Eliassen equation. Diabatic effects on cyclogenesis. Modeling studies. Discussion of current research topics. Concurrently scheduled with course C105. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Mr. Blier (F)

228. Mesometeorology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Observations of phenomena with length scales ranging from 20 km to 2,000 km. Topics include polar lows, air mass thunderstorms, multicell storms, supercell tornadoes, gust fronts, downbursts, microbursts, and the dry line. Discussions on design of field project. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Mr. Wakimoto (W)

229. Mesoscale Modeling. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 201C and 228, or consent of instructor. Numerical and analytical modeling of convective and mesoscale motions, from shallow heat sources to large complex systems. Model frameworks, assumptions, parameterizations, and solution techniques. Role of modeling efforts in understanding dynamic structure and behavior of systems. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Atmospheric Physics and Chemistry

230A-230B. Atmospheric Chemistry I, II. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course M203A or consent of instructor. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

230A. Photochemistry of remote troposphere; physical chemistry of surfaces and solutions; precipitation chemistry and acid rain; atmospheric organic chemistry; regional and global biogeochemical cycles; current issues in global change. Ms. Paulson (Sp)

230B. Photochemistry of stratosphere and mesosphere; basic ionospheric processes; stratospheric pollution and the ozone layer; physical chemistry of upper atmosphere clouds and aerosols; comparative photochemistry of planetary atmospheres; observational techniques and results.

232. Chemical Transport Modeling. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses M203A and 230A-230B, or consent of instructor. Equations of tracer transport and chemical kinetics modeling in three dimensions; numerical techniques; coupled simulations of gas-phase and aerosol microphysics and chemistry; computational versus observational results; current problems in tracer modeling. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

234A-234B. Cloud and Precipitation Physics I, II. Lecture, three hours. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

240A. Radar Meteorology. Lecture, three hours. Radar detection of spherical and nonspherical particles; use of radar in studying size distributions of cloud and precipitation particles, precipitation intensity and amount, updraft velocities, horizontal wind speed, and turbulence; radar observations of convective clouds, thunderstorms, tornadoes, hurricanes, squall lines, and fronts; clear air echoes. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

240B. Remote Sensing. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 203C and 240A, or consent of instructor. Theory and techniques of remote sensing; atmospheric spectroscopy; methods based on scattering, absorption, and extinction; passive and active techniques; inversion methods; remote sensing of terrestrial meteorological parameters and trace constituents; remote sensing of surfaces and biosphere; remote sensing of planetary atmospheres. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

244. Methods of Radiative Transfer. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 203C and 240B, or consent of instructor. Analytical and numerical methods of radiative transfer, pure scattering atmospheres, and Chandrasekhar's solution; discrete ordinates; n-stream representations; exponential sums; Monte Carlo techniques and three-dimensional problems; computational laboratory. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Upper Atmosphere and Space Physics

250A. Solar System Magnetohydrodynamics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course C205A or consent of instructor. Derivation of MHD equations with two fluid aspects, generalized Ohm's law, small amplitude waves, discontinuities, shock waves, and instabilities. Applications to statics and dynamics of solar wind and planetary magnetospheres and to solar wind/magnetosphere/ionosphere coupling. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

250B. Solar System Microscopic Plasma Processes. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course C205A or consent of instructor. Adiabatic charged particle dynamics; incoherent radiation processes; collective effects in a plasma; propagation characteristics of electrostatic and electromagnetic waves; introduction to resonant interaction between charged particles and plasma waves. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

256. Ionospheric Electrodynamics. Lecture, three hours. Ionospheric structure, currents, and electric fields; equatorial and high-latitude ionospheres; ionospheric control of magnetospheric phenomena. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

257. Radiation Belt Plasma Physics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 250B or consent of instructor. Turbulent plasma instabilities and their relation to satellite observations and magnetospheric structure. Processes responsible for source, loss, and transport of energetic radiation belt particles. S/U grading for majors with consent of instructor after successful completion of written and oral comprehensive examination and for nonmajors at discretion of major department.

Special Studies

270. Seminar: Atmospheric Sciences (2 units). Lecture, one hour. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

271. Seminar: Atmospheric Dynamics (2 units). Lecture, one hour. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

M272A-M272B-M272C. Seminars: Climate Dynamics (2 to 4 units each). (Same as Earth and Space Sciences M270A-M270B-M270C and Geography M270A-M270B-M270C.) Lecture, two hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Archaeological, geochemical, micropaleontological, and stratigraphic evidence for climate change throughout the geological past. Rheology and dynamics of climatic subsystems: atmosphere and oceans, ice sheets and marine ice, lithosphere and mantle. Climate of other planets. Modeling, simulation, and prediction of modern climate on monthly, seasonal, and interannual time scale. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Ghil (F,W,Sp)

273. Seminar: Atmospheric Physics (2 units). Lecture, one hour. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

274. Seminar: Atmospheric Chemistry (2 units). Lecture, one hour. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Tyrco (F,W,Sp)

M275A-M275B-M275C. Seminars: Space Physics (2 units each). (Same as Earth and Space Sciences M288A-M288B-M288C.) Lecture, one hour. Problems of current interest concerning particles and fields in space. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

(F,W,Sp)

276. Seminar: Mesoscale Processes (2 units). Seminar, one hour. Selected topics of current research interest in convection, extratropical cyclones, and fronts. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Wakimoto (F,W,Sp)

281. Special Topics in Dynamic Meteorology (2 to 4 units). Individual meetings with instructor to be arranged. Content varies from year to year. S/U grading.

283. Special Topics in Atmospheric Physics (2 units). Individual meetings with instructor to be arranged. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

284. Special Topics in Atmospheric Chemistry (2 units). Individual meetings with instructor to be arranged. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

285. Special Topics in Solar Planetary Relations (2 to 4 units). Individual meetings with instructor to be arranged. Selected topics of current research interest in solar wind, magnetospheric, or ionospheric physics.

296A-296K. Advanced Topics in Atmospheric Sciences (2 units each). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced study and analysis of current topics in atmospheric sciences. Discussion of current research and literature in research specialty of faculty member teaching course. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

Scope and Objectives

Studies in biology touch every aspect of life, and seeking answers to the problems of living organisms is a major challenge to modern biology. To meet this challenge, the Biology Department offers a wide spectrum of undergraduate and graduate instruction in population, organismic, developmental, cell, and molecular biology. All of these subject areas relate in some way to practical problems facing contemporary society, and all influence individual and collective decisions on matters ranging from environmental degradation to viruses and cancer.

The Bachelor of Science degrees combine essential background studies in mathematics, chemistry, and physics with a general introduction to all of the biological subjects, as well as advanced in-depth exposure to some of them. The Master of Arts and Ph.D. degrees provide opportunities for advanced, concentrated study. The Master of Arts degree requires, in addition to specified coursework, completion of either a comprehensive examination or the performance of original research culminating in a thesis. The Ph.D. degree requires independent and innovative research that ultimately results in a dissertation.

Bachelor of Science in Biology

The Bachelor of Science degree is divided into four areas of concentration which build on similar lower division introductory courses and differ primarily in the upper division requirements. The first area of concentration — general biology — is designed for students who desire exposure to a wide range of biological subjects and for most students who will later seek admission to health sciences-related professional schools. The remaining three areas of concentration — ecology, behavior, and evolution (EBE), marine biology (MB), and plant biology (PB) — provide more specialized instruction and strong preparation for employment or subsequent graduate study in the respective disciplines.

Prebiology Major

Students who have not completed all the courses required as preparation for the major are considered prebiology majors. After completing those courses with a grade of C – or better in each, you must petition to enter the biology major in the Undergraduate Advising Office, 2312 Life Sciences.

Repetition of more than two preparation courses in which a grade of D or F was received or of any preparation course more than once results in automatic denial of admission to the major (effective Fall Quarter 1994 for all entering freshmen and transfer students).

In order to be admitted as prebiology majors, transfer students who have 80 or more units must have completed one year of general chemistry with laboratory, Biology 5, 5L, and 9, or equivalent, and at least one of the following: (1) one year of calculus, (2) one year of calculus-based physics, or (3) two organic chemistry courses with laboratory.

General Biology Concentration

This concentration is designed for students with a broad interest in biology who desire to pursue careers in a wide range of biological and related fields. It provides excellent background preparation for postgraduate training in medicine and other health sciences, in tracks leading to academic and public service careers in biology, in biological industries, and even in nonbiological careers such as business, agriculture, and law. The concentration emphasis is breadth of training to expose students to all levels of modern biology.

Preparation for the Major: Biology 5, 5L, 6, 9 or equivalent; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11CL; Mathematics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 31A, 31B, and 32A; Physics 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL.

The Major: Biology 108 or equivalent; one morphology and systematics course (Biology 101A, 101B, 103, 105, 110, 153/153L, or Microbiology and Molecular Genetics 101); one developmental and molecular biology course (Biology 121, 138, C141, or 146); one physiology course (Biology 158, 162, 166, or 167); two additional upper division biology courses; Chemistry and Biochemistry 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A, 153L; four additional upper division courses in biology, chemistry, mathematics (except Mathematics 104, 106), microbiology, physics, physiological science, or from Biomathematics 110, Biostatistics 100B, 100C, Earth and Space Sciences 116, Geography 112.

Ecology, Behavior, and Evolution (EBE) Concentration

This concentration is appropriate for students preparing for graduate study in ecology, behavior, and evolution. A strong field component involving study in terrestrial and marine locales such as coastal, desert, and mountain environments in California and the Southwest and in the Neotropics is required. This provides suitable background for such fields as environmental biology, animal behavior, conservation, forestry, teaching, museum work, and governmental positions dealing with environmental issues of wide importance and impact.

Preparation for the Major: Biology 5, 5L, 6, 9 or equivalent; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11CL, 15; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A; Physics 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL.

The Major: Biology 108 or equivalent; one morphology and systematics course (Biology 101A, 101B, 103, 105, 110, or 152); one physiology course (Biology 162, 166, or 167); three ecology, behavior, and evolution courses (Biology 111, 120, 122, 129, 135); one field quarter consisting of two to four courses from the Field Biology Quarter (FBQ), Marine Biology Quarter

(MBQ), or equivalent; additional upper division courses in biology, chemistry, mathematics (except Mathematics 104, 106), microbiology, or physics (recommended: Biology C119, M127, 146, 168 in ecological and behavioral processes and Biology 103, 107, 112, 113A, 114, 115 in taxon-oriented biology; Chemistry and Biochemistry 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A, 153L may be substituted for Chemistry and Biochemistry 15, Mathematics 32B, 33A).

Marine Biology (MB) Concentration

This concentration is designed for students who wish to specialize in the area of marine sciences. Completion of this concentration provides students with both an excellent background in biology and specialization in various disciplines such as oceanography, subtidal and intertidal ecology, and physiology of marine organisms. Graduates are well prepared for postgraduate opportunities in the marine sciences, many other areas of biology, and medicine. The concentration provides valuable field experience with concomitant individual research opportunities in marine biology.

Preparation for the Major: Biology 5, 5L, 6, 9 or equivalent; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11CL, 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A; Mathematics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 31A, 31B, and 32A; Physics 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL; Statistics 50; Earth and Space Sciences 15 or Atmospheric Sciences 6 or 6A.

The Major: Biology 108 or equivalent, C109; one marine organismic biology course (Biology 101A, 105, or 112); one physiology course (Biology 128, 162, 166, or 167); one ecology, behavior, or evolution course (Biology 120, 122, 129, or 135); one field quarter consisting of four courses from the Marine Biology Quarter (MBQ) or equivalent field courses given elsewhere (for a 16-unit equivalent — see undergraduate adviser); two physical, chemical, or geological oceanography courses from Anthropology 177, Atmospheric Sciences CM140, 143, Chemistry and Biochemistry 103, Earth and Space Sciences C107, C109, 153, Geography 100, 101, 103, 190, Mechanical, Aerospace, and Nuclear Engineering 103 (strongly recommended), 150A.

Molecular, Cellular, and Developmental Biology (MCD) Concentration

This concentration is closed to new students effective Fall Quarter 1993. Students currently enrolled may petition to transfer to the cell and molecular biology major in the Undergraduate Advising Office, 2312 Life Sciences.

Plant Biology (PB) Concentration

This concentration prepares students for postgraduate programs in plant biology, including environmental biology, ecology, agricultural sciences, and plant molecular, developmental, and cellular biology. Students select key courses to obtain a sound, broad foundation in plant biology, learning state-of-the-art research techniques. They are also given opportunity to participate in individual supervised research projects using plants as experimental organisms.

Preparation for the Major: Biology 5, 5L, 6, 9 or equivalent; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11CL, 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A; Mathematics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 31A, 31B, and 32A; Physics 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL.

The Major: Biology 108 or equivalent, 146 or 162; one plant morphology or anatomy course (Biology 101A, 101B, or 152); two molecular or cellular plant biology courses (Biology 121, C141); one ecology or evolution course (Biology 103, 120, or 122); one field quarter course involving research in plant biology (Biology 118, 124, or 148) or a laboratory internship (Biology 190 series or 199) which requires a written paper on some aspect of plant research; additional upper division courses in biology, chemistry, computer science, geography, or microbiology.

Additional Requirements

(1) A six-unit course counts as only one course toward requirements for the major.

(2) A maximum of eight units of Biology 190 or four units of Biology 199 may be applied toward the major. Credit for 199 courses from other departments may not be applied.

(3) Courses applied toward requirements for preparation for the major and the major must be taken for a letter grade. Biology majors must earn a C – or better in each course taken as preparation for the major, and at least a 2.0 (C) overall average in all courses applied toward the major.

Honors Program

An overall grade-point average of 3.4 and a 3.4 in the major are required for graduation with honors. Highest honors are awarded to majors who have a GPA of 3.6 overall and a 3.6 in the major at graduation and who have successfully completed Biology 190A-190B.

Field Biology

The department offers two quarter-long programs of advanced courses in field biology: the Field Biology Quarter (FBQ) and the Marine Biology Quarter (MBQ). These programs focus on the biology of organisms living in their natural environments, emphasize independent student research projects, and take place at field sites away from the UCLA campus. The course composition varies somewhat from year to year, but each program always carries 16 units of course credit. The Field Biology Quarter occurs during Spring Quarter and involves some combination of Biology 103, 107, 113B, 114, 115, 118, 124, C125, C126, 131, 132, and 134B. The Marine Biology Quarter occurs during Fall Quarter and includes some combination of Biology 102, C104, 123, 147, 148, 163, 164, and 165. To participate, you must enroll in all courses in the respective program. It is strongly recommended that you complete Biology C109 or C215 prior to applying for MBQ. Participants in both programs are selected by personal interview during Winter Quarter. Although most participants are upper division biology majors, both programs are available to any upper division student with adequate biological background. Information and applications are available in the Undergraduate Advising Office.

Bachelor of Science in Cell and Molecular Biology

The Bachelor of Science degree in Cell and Molecular Biology (CMB) is designed especially for students who intend to go on to postgraduate work in biology or medicine and for students aiming for entry-level positions in biotechnology-related fields. Students are exposed to basic biological and molecular concepts underlying recent technical advances in molecular, cell, and developmental biology in both animals and plants. Areas of emphasis include cell biology, immunology, molecular biology, plant biology, developmental biology, and neurobiology, among others.

Students currently enrolled in the molecular, cellular, and developmental biology (MCD) concentration may petition to transfer into this major in the Undergraduate Advising Office, 2312 Life Sciences.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Biology 5, 5L, 9; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11CL; Mathematics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 31A, 31B, and 32A; Physics 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL.

The Major

Required: Twenty units of core courses (Biology 100A, 100B, 108, either 138 or C141, and four units from C174A through C174F); Chemistry and Biochemistry 110A, 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A, 153B, 153L, 156; a minimum of three elective core courses from Biology CM156, 157, 171, M175A, M185A, CM185B; 12 additional units selected from the following: any biology course listed above not used to satisfy the core requirement, Biology 110, 121, 142, 146, 150, 162, 166, M175B, M175C, Chemistry and Biochemistry 153C, Microbiology and Molecular Genetics 101, 102, C104A, C104B, C104C, C119; eight units of upper division laboratory experience selected from Biology 155, 158, 162, 166, 190A through 190D, 199.

Additional Requirements

- (1) A five- or six-unit course counts as only one course toward requirements for the major.
- (2) A maximum of eight units of Biology 190 or 199 may be applied toward the major. Credit for 199 courses from other departments may not be applied. All 190 research must be performed in CMB faculty laboratories.

(3) Courses applied toward requirements for preparation for the major and the major must be taken for a letter grade. CMB majors must earn a C- or better in each course, and at least a 2.0 (C) overall average in all courses applied toward the major.

Graduate Study

The department offers M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Biology, with specialization in a wide spectrum of fields. Students who plan to enter graduate school are urged to seek the advice of staff members in their field of interest. Division I (molecular, cell, and developmental biology) does not accept students whose sole objective is a master's degree.

Admission

The department encourages applications from students in all areas of science, but expects successful applicants to have or to acquire a background comparable to the requirements for the bachelor's degree in biology at UCLA. A background in chemistry, physics, and mathematics is desirable. Deficiencies in these or other subjects must be made up at the earliest opportunity. Undergraduates who are prospective applicants should remedy their deficiencies by preparatory study at an appropriate institution. The Graduate Division or the department may initially restrict applicants with less distinguished accomplishments.

The department is organized for administrative purposes into two divisions based on mutual interest. Applications should be directed to either Division I (molecular, cell, and developmental biology) or Division II (integrative biology: cells, organisms, and populations). The major fields and subdisciplines are listed under faculty interests in the departmental brochure.

All applicants must take the General Test (verbal, quantitative, and analytical) of the Graduate Record Examination (GRE). The Subject Test in Biology is also required.

Three letters of recommendation are required. These should be from professors, supervisors, or others who may provide an evaluation of motivation, accomplishments or potential in research, scholarly activities, teaching, and related academic functions.

Applications, departmental brochures, and additional information may be obtained from the Graduate Affairs Office, Department of Biology, 2316 Life Sciences, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1606.

Program of Study

Study consists of coursework and research within the department and within related programs in biochemistry, geology, microbiology, and molecular biology on campus. Opportunities are also available off campus for intensive study of marine biology at a marine science center in Fall Quarter (MBQ), field biology in Spring Quarter (FBQ), and tropical biology within the FBQ program and through courses offered by the Organization for Tropical Studies.

You also are required to complete the departmental written qualifying examination at an early point in your graduate career.

Foreign Language Requirement

No foreign language is prerequisite to admission to the M.A. or Ph.D. program, and there is no uniform language requirement for obtaining the Ph.D. However, in the pursuit of certain subspecialties of biology, you may be required to gain proficiency in one or more foreign languages.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

Applications are evaluated by the appropriate divisional admissions committee.

Course Requirements

The program consists of at least nine courses completed in graduate standing, of which at least five must be graduate (200 series) courses. The remainder may be courses in the 100, 200, or 500 series as noted below. No more than two 596 courses (eight units) may be applied toward the nine courses required for the degree; only one 596 course (four units) may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement. Courses graded S/U may not be applied toward the minimum requirement, except that an S/U-graded course outside the major and applicable to the degree may be applied, provided that no more than one such course is taken per term.

Specific course requirements are established for you by your guidance committee.

Thesis Plan

A thesis reporting the results of an original investigation, written to conform to the requirements of the Graduate Division, is presented to and approved by the master's thesis committee of three faculty members. Before beginning work on the thesis, you must obtain approval of the subject and general plan from the faculty members concerned and from the thesis committee.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

If you select this plan, you must take a three-hour examination prepared and graded by your committee or committee chair and approved by the graduate adviser. The examination is graded pass or fail. If you fail, recommendation for or against a second examination must be made by the graduate adviser.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

Each division determines admission of students to the Ph.D. program separately. Ph.D. students in Division I (molecular, cell, and developmental biology) are admitted in Fall Quarter only, through UCLA ACCESS to Programs in Molecular and Cellular Life Sciences, 168 MBI, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1570, (310) 206-5280. Under special circumstances, Division I may admit new Ph.D. students directly. Applications to Division II (integrative biology: cells, organisms, and populations) are reviewed by the division's admissions committee following a January 1 deadline.

Course Requirements

There are no formal course requirements for the Ph.D. in Division II, although specific requirements may be established individually by your guidance committee. Division I students are required to take a minimum of four graduate-level courses, preferably in the first year (contact the Graduate Affairs Office for a course list). You must enroll for full-time study, as defined by the Graduate Division.

You are strongly encouraged to rotate laboratory and/or course experience with several faculty members during your first year of study as an aid to selecting a permanent adviser.

Teaching Experience

Each student is required to serve a minimum of three terms as a teaching assistant.

Qualifying Examinations

You must pass the departmental written qualifying examination at the Ph.D. level before you are eligible to take the University Oral Qualifying Examination, which is conducted by your doctoral committee as prescribed by the Graduate Division. It includes your preparation, presentation, and defense of an original written research proposal. The examination is graded pass, fail, or repeat. A failure requires dismissal. The second attempt at the examination is graded pass/fail. The examination must be completed by the end of the third year following first registration. You are advanced to candidacy following successful completion of this examination.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

The final oral examination is administered by your doctoral committee after you complete your dissertation. This examination is highly recommended but may be waived by your doctoral committee.

Lower Division Courses

If you have not completed the prerequisites indicated in the following course descriptions, you may be dropped from any of the courses at the discretion of the instructor.

2. Principles of Modern Biology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Designed for nonmajors. Not open to students with credit for course 5 or 9 or equivalent. Major themes in biology, including evolution, behavior, ecology, cell biology, photosynthesis, genetics, organismal diversity, and energetics as they relate to events occurring on our Earth today. P/NP or letter grading.

5. Biology of Organisms. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Comparative morphology and embryology of major plant and animal phyla; function of organ systems, including gas exchange, transport, regulation of internal environment, hormones, coordination, and nervous system. P/NP or letter grading.

5L. Organismic and Environmental Biology Laboratory. Discussion, two hours; laboratory, four hours. Enforced prerequisite: course 5. Introductory biology laboratory, including selected topics on genetics and molecular biology, anatomy, physiology, behavior, and ecology of plants and animals.

6. Ecology, Evolution, and Behavior. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Enforced prerequisites: course 5 and (Mathematics 3A or 31A). Survey of principles of population and community ecology, behavioral ecology, population genetics, and evolution.

9. Introduction to Cell and Molecular Biology. (Formerly numbered 7A.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enforced prerequisite: Chemistry 11A. Not open for credit to students with credit for former course 7. Biological macromolecules, energy production, principles of cellular organization and function, and principles of molecular biology.

10. Plants and Civilization. Lecture, three hours; demonstration, one hour. Designed for nonmajors. Origin of crop plants; man's role in development, distribution, and modification of food, fiber, medicinal, and other plants in relation to their natural history.

11. Biomedical Research Issues in Minority Communities. Limited to 30 students. Discussions and student presentations on biomedical research as it affects minority communities, with emphasis on methodology, design, consequences, and ethics of current research. Discussion leaders provide information on preparation and training for research careers. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. González (F)

12. Biodiversity and Extinction: Crisis and Conservation. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Examination of ecological and evolutionary principles necessary to understand nature and importance of worldwide environmental crisis. Research by students of specific conservation issues and presentation of results to class. P/NP or letter grading.

Mr. Hespenshield
13. Evolution of Life. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Not open to life sciences majors. Limited to 100 students. Introduction to biology within the framework of evolutionary theory. Relationships of evolutionary thought to other areas of knowledge and society. Natural selection and origin of variation examined in context of genetics, molecular biology, physiology, phylogeny, population dynamics, behavior, and ecology. Emphasis on critical role of historical processes.

21. Field Biology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours, or field trips, three to four hours. Recommended (but not requisite): course 2. Not open for credit to students with credit for course 6 or 122. Introduction to natural history of Western North America, especially Southern California. Classification, distribution, and ecology of common plants and animals.

25. Oceans. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Not open for credit to students with credit for Earth and Space Sciences 15. Physical and chemical processes that take place in oceans, with emphasis on their effects on organisms.

30. Biology of Cancer. Introduction to molecular, cellular, and clinical aspects of cancer and consideration of sociological and psychological impacts of cancer on the individual and society. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Bohman

40. AIDS and Other Sexually Transmitted Diseases. Introduction to interdisciplinary debate surrounding the personal and societal response to AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Bohman

50. Desert Life. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Introduction to fundamental structural, physiological, and behavioral features of desert organisms, with special emphasis on deserts of Western North America. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. A. Gibson (F)

70. Genetic Engineering and Society. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Designed for nonmajors. Not open to students with credit for course 9 or 108. Basic principles of genetic engineering. Overview of genetic engineering techniques and relationship of genetic engineering to medicine, agriculture, and society. Emphasis on specific genetic engineering applications to generate discussion on its use in society. Mr. Goldberg

80. The Green World: Plant Biology for Now and the Future. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Designed for nonmajors. Basic principles of plant biology and introduction to techniques for manipulating plants for improved agriculture, sources of renewable "clean" energy, reclamation of deforested and nutritionally depleted soils, and "biological factories" to produce biodegradable plastics, antibiotics, and other commodities. Underexploited agriculture crops also featured. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Hirsch, Mr. Thornber (F)

88A. Lower Division Seminar: Conservation of Biodiversity. Discussion, three hours; one weekend field trip. Introduction to patterns of biological diversity; selection, management, and use of natural reserves; human aspects on diversity; and effects of governmental and nongovernmental actions on biological conservation. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Mathias

88C. Lower Division Seminar: Frontiers of Molecular Biology — Historical Perspective. Seminar, three hours. Limited to freshmen who have not completed course 9; designed for nonmajors. Study of biology at molecular level has unlocked secrets of the gene, started the biotechnology revolution, and promises a new scientific age that will use gene therapy to cure human disease, produce superplants that grow in the desert, and uncover the mysteries of the mind. Exploration of origins and history of molecular biology by analyzing papers written by Mendel, Watson, Crick, and others who played a major role in changing society with their discoveries of new biological principles. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Goldberg

88D. First-Year Seminar: Genetics and Society. Discussion, three hours. Some ways genetics affects us now and what changes are possible for our children. Examination of biological basis of inheritance in order to understand scientific methods and science teaching. Mr. Merriam (F)

88E. First-Year Seminar: Genetics and Society — Current Status and Future Applications. Seminar, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Recent advances in genetics have opened up new possibilities in fields of forensics, medicine, agriculture, and industry, with corresponding legal, social, and economic ramifications. Examination of scientific/genetic basis underlying genetic engineering, genetic screening, gene therapy, eugenics, DNA fingerprinting, cloning, etc., and discussion of current and future applications. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Erickson

88F. First-Year Seminar: Science and Scientists — Expectations and Realities (2 units). Examination of change from when science was done by individuals as an avocation without societal goals to contemporary science which is done by professionals and is driven by societal needs and pressures. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Bohman

Upper Division Courses

Course 5L is prerequisite to all upper division laboratory courses. Course 108 is prerequisite to all upper division courses in cell, molecular, and developmental biology. If you do not complete the prerequisites, you may be dropped from those courses.

100A. Introduction to Developmental Molecular Biology. (Formerly numbered 7B.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course 9, Chemistry 11 series (may be taken concurrently). Recommended: course 108 (may be taken concurrently). Not open for credit to students with credit for former course 144. Introduction to principles of prokaryote and eukaryote molecular biology and their application to information storage and retrieval. Chromosome structure and function, gene transcription, RNA processing, basic principles of developmental biology, DNA synthesis and repair, gene regulation.

101A. Biology of Lower Plants (6 units). (Formerly numbered 100.) Lecture, four hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisite: course 5 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Not open for credit to students with credit for former course 100. Introduction to biology of algae, fungi, and bryophytes, with emphasis on form, function, and development, and role of lower plants in the environment. Students are strongly encouraged to take both courses 101A and 101B since these represent a course sequence surveying the entire plant world as appropriate background for upper division courses in plant biology.

101B. Biology of Vascular Plants (6 units). (Formerly numbered 101.) Lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisite: course 5 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Not open to students with credit for former course 101. Introduction to the diversity in form and reproduction of vascular plants, with emphasis on development, evolution, and function. Students are strongly encouraged to take both courses 101A and 101B since these represent a course sequence surveying the entire plant world as appropriate background for upper division courses in plant biology.

102. Biology of Marine Invertebrates. Five-week intensive course. Lecture, five hours; laboratory, 15 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, and 6, or consent of instructor. Morphology, systematics, life histories and natural history, ecology, behavior, and physiology of marine invertebrates; emphasis on local invertebrates of Southern California and their habitats. Given off campus at a marine science center.

Mr. Morin

103. Plant Evolution and Systematics. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: course 2 or 5 or consent of instructor. Evolution, systematics, morphology, principles of taxonomy, phylogeography, phylogenetic analysis, speciation, and natural history of plants. P/NP or letter grading.

Mr. A. Gibson

C104. Experimental Invertebrate Zoology (6 units). Lecture, two hours; laboratory, 12 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 6, consent of instructor. Advanced treatment of physiology, behavior, and ecology of invertebrates, with emphasis on independent laboratory and field investigations. Concurrently scheduled with course C212.

Mr. Hamner, Mr. Morin

105. Biology of Invertebrates (6 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory/field trips, six hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, and 6, or consent of instructor. Introduction to systematics, evolution, natural history, morphology, and physiology of invertebrates.

Mr. Hamner, Mr. Morin

106. Experimental Marine Invertebrate Biology (4 or 6 units). Lecture, two hours; laboratory, 12 hours. Prerequisites: courses 105, and 166 or 167 (either may be taken concurrently), or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Offered either as a six-unit quarter-long course or as a four-unit Marine Biology Quarter course. Advanced course of natural history, physiology, biochemistry of invertebrates, with emphasis on independent laboratory and field investigations.

Mr. Hamner

107. Entomology (6 or 8 units). Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, and 6, or consent of instructor. Offered either as a six-unit quarter-long course or as an eight-unit Field Biology Quarter course. Six-unit course has lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours; additional field trips. Morphology, physiology, development, systematics, behavior, and ecology of insects. Eight-unit course covers same basic lecture and laboratory material in two and one-half intensive weeks, followed by extended field trip where students do individual field projects in insect biology.

108. Introductory Genetics. (Formerly numbered 8.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, 90 minutes. Prerequisites: course 9, Chemistry 11 series (may be taken concurrently). Not open for credit to students with credit for former course 8. Principles of Mendelian inheritance and chromosomal basis of heredity in prokaryotes and eukaryotes, recombination, biochemical genetics, mutation, DNA, genetic code, gene regulation, genes in populations.

C109. Introduction to Marine Science. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours; weekend field trips. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, and 6, or consent of instructor. Strongly recommended for prospective MBQ students. Introduction to physical, chemical, and biological aspects of marine science. Emphasis on biological systems and natural communities. Concurrently scheduled with course C215.

110. Vertebrate Morphology (6 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory, five hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 6. Study of vertebrate morphology, function, and evolution from viewpoint of comparative anatomy of adult forms, biomechanics, development, and paleontology. Laboratory study of selected vertebrates.

Ms. Van Valkenburgh

111. Biology of Vertebrates. Lecture, three hours; demonstration/field trips/discussion, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 6. Adaptations, behavior, and ecology of vertebrates.

112. Ichthyology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, six hours; field trips. Prerequisites: courses 5 and 6, or consent of instructor. Highly recommended: courses 110, 111. Biology of freshwater and marine fishes, with emphasis on their evolution, systematics, morphology, zoogeography, and ecology. Field trips examine fishes of the Southern California shoreline, tidepools, and coastal streams.

Mr. Buth

113A. Herpetology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, one hour; weekend field trips. Prerequisites: courses 5, 6. Vertebrate zoology course restricted to biology of reptiles and amphibians of the world, covering current systematics, ecology, behavior, morphology, and physiology of these animals.

Mr. Nagy

113B. Field Herpetology. Prerequisites: courses 5, 6. Recommended: course 111. Two weeks of off-campus research projects followed by two-week lecture course and offered only as part of Field Biology Quarter. Biology, particularly ecology and behavior, of reptiles and amphibians in their natural habitat. Students carry out supervised research projects, then write up and orally present their results in seminar fashion.

Mr. Nagy

114. Ornithology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory/discussion/field trips, six hours. Prerequisites: course 111, consent of instructor. Limited enrollment. Systematics, distribution, physiology, behavior, and ecology of birds.

115. Mammalogy. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, four hours. Prerequisite: course 110 or 111 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Evolution, ecology, behavior, and physiology of mammals.

Ms. Van Valkenburgh

117. Evolution of Vertebrates. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: course 110. Recommended: one general geology course. Fossil record of the evolution of vertebrates, with emphasis on paleobiology and morphology of tetrapods.

Ms. Van Valkenburgh

118. Plant Adaptations (8 units). Lecture, one hour; field trip, 10 hours. Prerequisites: completion of preparation for the major courses, consent of instructor. Five-week course offered only as part of Field Biology Quarter. Field-oriented introduction to mechanisms by which vascular plants adapt themselves to their abiotic and biotic environments using community, population, and ecophysiological levels of integration.

Mr. Rundel (Sp)

C119. Mathematical Ecology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A. Differential equation models of population growth explore theory of evolutionary ecology to determine why natural environments of the world support the kinds of living organisms they do and why organisms of the world possess the adaptations they do. Concurrently scheduled with course C219.

Mr. Vance

120. Evolution. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 6, Mathematics 3A and 3B, or 31A. Recommended: course 108 or equivalent. Designed for biology majors specializing in environmental and population biology. Introduction to mechanics and processes of evolution, with emphasis on natural selection, population genetics, speciation, evolutionary rates, and patterns of adaptation. P/NP or letter grading.

Mr. Buth, Mr. Cody, Mr. Hespeneide

121. Molecular Biology and Evolution. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 9 and 108 or equivalent. Not open for credit to students with credit for former course 144. Molecular biology, with emphasis on evolutionary aspects. DNA replication, RNA transcription, protein synthesis, gene expression, and molecular evolution.

Mr. Brunk (W)

122. Ecology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 6, and Mathematics 3A and 3B, or 31A, or consent of instructor. Highly recommended: Mathematics 31B, 32A. Recommended for biology majors specializing in environmental and population biology. Introduction to population and community ecology, with emphasis on growth and distributions of populations, interactions between species, and structure, dynamics, and functions of communities and ecosystems.

Mr. Cody

123. Ecology of Marine Communities. Five-week intensive course. Lecture, five hours; laboratory, 15 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, and 6, or consent of instructor. Field study of natural history and ecology of marine organisms and communities, involving independent research project. Given off campus at a marine science center.

Mr. Vance

124. Field Ecology (4 or 8 units). Lecture, two hours; laboratory or field trip, 10 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 6. Recommended: courses 111, 120, 122. Offered either as a four-unit quarter-long course with weekend field trips or as a single field trip conducted between quarters, followed by lectures and tutorials for three weeks. When course is given as part of Field Biology Quarter, it is eight units and lasts for five weeks. Field and laboratory research in ecology; collection, analysis, and write-up of numerical data, with emphasis on design and execution of field studies.

Mr. Cody

C125. Tropical Animal Communication (4 or 8 units). (Formerly numbered 125.) Prerequisites: courses 5, 6. Offered either as a four-unit quarter-long course or as an eight-unit Field Biology Quarter course. Four-unit course has lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Animal communication behavior, tropical vertebrate biology, and evolution of information processing systems. Eight-unit course covers same basic lecture material in five or six intensive weeks, followed by extended field trips where students do individual projects in animal communication. Concurrently scheduled with course C225.

Mr. Narins

C126. Behavioral Ecology (4 or 8 units). Prerequisites: course 6, Mathematics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 31A, 31B, and 32A, or consent of instructor. Not open for credit to students with credit for course 129. Offered either as a four-unit quarter-long course or as an eight-unit Field Biology Quarter course. Four-unit course has lecture, three hours; discussion, three hours. Animal communication behavior, island biogeography, and evolution of social behavior. Eight-unit course covers same basic lecture material in five intensive weeks, followed by extended field trip where students do individual projects in behavioral ecology. Concurrently scheduled with course C227.

Mr. Narins

M127. Soils, Plants, and Society. (Same as Geography M127.) Lecture, three hours; field trip. Prerequisites: Chemistry 11A, 11B, and 11C, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. General treatment of soil development and morphology and physical and chemical properties of soils as they relate to plant growth and distribution; soil resources, management, conservation, and cultural aspects. Use of soil profiles examined on field trip to explain developmental phenomena.

128. Plant Physiological Ecology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory/field, three hours. Study of plant/environment interactions under natural conditions. Emphasis on transpiration and photosynthesis, leaf temperatures, and water movement in soil/plant/atmosphere continuum. Individual student projects.

Mr. Nobel (W)

129. Animal Behavior. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 6, 108 or equivalent. Introduction to behavioral ecology. Methods and results of evolutionary approaches to study of animal behavior, including foraging strategies, social competition, sexual selection, mating systems, cooperation, and social organization.

Mr. R. Gibson

130. Principles of Systematic Biology. (Formerly numbered 202.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course 6. Recommended: courses 120, 135. Concepts, principles, and methods of comparative biology as they apply to the inference of evolutionary relationships among organisms. Principles and application of biological nomenclature.

Mr. Buth

131. Insect Ecology (4 or 8 units). Lecture, two hours; laboratory or field trip, eight hours. Prerequisite: course 6. Recommended: courses 120, 122. Offered either as a four-unit quarter-long course with weekend field trips or as an eight-unit Field Biology Quarter course with amount of fieldwork increased accordingly. Analysis of ecological roles of insects in terrestrial communities, with emphasis on interactions with both plants and vertebrates. Group and individual field projects.

Mr. Hesperheide

132. Field Behavioral Ecology (8 units). Lecture, two hours; laboratory/field trip, 10 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 6. Recommended: course 129. Five-week course offered only as part of Field Biology Quarter. Field research in behavioral ecology, emphasizing animal communication. Design and execution of individual and small group field projects during extended field trip.

Mr. Narins

133. Vegetation and Ecosystem Dynamics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 6 or equivalent. Introduction to form and functional relationships of major world vegetation types in relation to their physical environments.

Mr. Rundel (W)

C134A. Physiological Ecology of Desert Animals. (Formerly numbered C134.) Lecture, three hours; laboratory, one hour; field trips, four hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 6. Consideration of physiological, behavioral, morphological, and ecological mechanisms desert animals use to enhance their survival in an arid habitat. Concurrently scheduled with course C214.

Mr. Nagy

134B. Field Physiological Ecology of Desert Animals (8 units). (Formerly numbered C134.) Prerequisites: courses 5, 6. Two weeks of off-campus research projects with two-week lecture course (four hours per day) and offered only as part of Field Biology Quarter. Consideration of physiological, behavioral, morphological, and ecological mechanisms desert animals use to enhance their survival in an arid habitat. Students carry out supervised research projects, then write up and orally present their results in seminar fashion.

Mr. Nagy

135. Population Genetics. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 108 or equivalent. Highly recommended: Mathematics 31A, 31B. Basic principles of genetics of population, dealing with genetic structure of natural populations and mechanisms of evolution. Equilibrium conditions and forces altering gene frequencies, polygenic inheritance, molecular evolution, and methods of quantitative genetics.

Mr. Taylor

138. Developmental Biology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 100A, 108. Strongly recommended: course 100B. Cellular and molecular basis of animal embryology.

Mr. Hartenstein, Ms. Lengyel

C139. Molecular Cell Biology (6 units). Prerequisites: course 100A, Chemistry 153A, consent of instructor. Introduction to cell biology for graduate students in basic medical sciences and selected undergraduates. Topics include membrane structure, assembly, and function; biogenesis of organelles, intercellular and intracellular signaling, immunity and gene structure, function and replication. Concurrently scheduled with course CM220.

Mr. Bok, Mr. Homsher (W)

C141. Molecular Basis of Plant Differentiation and Development. (Formerly numbered 141.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 5, 9 and 108 or equivalent, 100A. In-depth study of basic processes of growth differentiation and development in plants and molecular mechanisms underlying these processes. Discussion of a variety of plant systems, with focus on developing critical understanding of current experimental basis of research in this field. Concurrently scheduled with course C239.

Ms. Erickson, Mr. Singh, Ms. Tobin

142. Seminar: Topics in Developmental Biology (2 units). Prerequisites: course 138, consent of instructor. Undergraduate seminar on topics in developmental biology. Reading and group discussions on current research. P/NP or letter grading.

146. Physicochemical Biology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 5 and 9 or equivalent, or consent of instructor, Physics 6C or equivalent. Physicochemical analysis of physiology of cells and organelles, with emphasis on membranes, thermodynamics of solute and water movement, light absorption, and subcellular energy transduction.

Mr. Nobel (F)

147. Biological Oceanography. Five-week intensive course. Lecture, five hours; laboratory, 15 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 6, 9 or equivalent, Chemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, and 11C/11CL, or consent of instructor. Lectures include physical, chemical, and biological factors affecting abundance and distribution of organisms in marine environment. Laboratory includes experimental studies of local marine organisms, with emphasis on primary and secondary production and nutrient flux.

Mr. Muscatine

148. Biology of Marine Plants. Five-week intensive course. Lecture, five hours; laboratory, 15 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 9 or equivalent, Chemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, and 11C/11CL, or consent of instructor. Introduction to general biology of marine algae, including basics of structure reproduction, life histories, systematics, and introduction to physiology and ecology of marine algae. Techniques in culture and laboratory investigation and utilization of algae. Given off campus at a marine science center.

Mr. Chapman

150. Plant Chemical and Molecular Communication. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: completion of preparation for the major courses. Introductory course in chemical ecology and how natural compounds affect gene expression. Emphasis on role of natural compounds in plant/microbe, plant/plant, and plant/herbivore interactions; synopsis of principles of plant defense mechanisms and responses to microbial infections.

Mr. Chapman, Ms. Hirsch

152. Functional Plant Anatomy. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisite: course 5 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Structure and functional significance of various cell and tissue types in higher plants, plus patterns of growth and differentiation in roots, stems, leaves, flowers, and fruits.

Mr. A. Gibson, Ms. Hirsch

153. Cellular Physiology: Functional Histology. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 9 or equivalent, Chemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL, Mathematics 3A, 3B, 3C, Physics 6A, 6B, 6C. Emphasis on how cellular organelles (nucleus, mitochondria, smooth and rough endoplasmic reticulum, golgi apparatus, lysosomes, cytoskeleton, plasma membrane, extracellular matrix) contribute to function of tissues and organs in vertebrates.

Mr. Simmons

153L. Laboratory for Cellular Physiology: Functional Histology (2 units). (Formerly numbered 153.) Laboratory, four hours. Corequisite: course 153. Exploration of microanatomy of vertebrate tissues and organs.

Mr. Cascarano

155. Genetics Methods. Discussion, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Gene mapping and detection and analysis of gene variants by means of inheritance patterns.

Mr. Merriam (F)

CM156. Human Genetics. (Same as Microbiology CM156.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 100A, 108 or equivalent. Strongly recommended: course 100B. Application of genetic principles in human populations, with emphasis on cytogenetics, biochemical genetics, population genetics, and family studies. Lectures and readings in the literature, with focus on current questions in the fields of medical and human genetics and methodologies appropriate to answer such questions. Concurrently scheduled with course CM256.

Mr. Lusic, Mr. Merriam

157. Gene Manipulation: Genetic Engineering. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisites: courses 100A, 108, 138, consent of instructor. Strongly recommended: course 100B. Survey of methods and applications of recombinant DNA research as applied to both basic scientific research and the biotechnology industry.

Mr. Salsar

158. Cell Biology (6 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 9 and 108 or equivalent, Chemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL. Cell biology of eukaryotic cells, with emphasis on correlation of structure and function at molecular, organellar, and cellular levels.

Mr. Simmons, Mr. Zeiger

CM160. Biological Catalysis. (Same as Chemistry CM155.) Prerequisites: courses 100A, 100B, Chemistry 110A, 153A, 153B, or equivalent, consent of instructor. Reaction mechanisms in molecular biology; experimental approaches for study of enzymes, including kinetics, isotopic labeling, stereochemistry, chemical modification, and spectroscopy; design of pharmacologically active agents and artificial enzymes. Drug metabolism and interactions addressed on a mechanistic level. Concurrently scheduled with course CM252.

Mr. Cho, Mr. Fukuto, Mr. Sigman (W)

162. Plant Physiology (6 units). Lecture, four hours; laboratory, four hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 9 or equivalent, Chemistry 153A, 153L. Basic aspects of plant function, including photochemical, biochemical, and physiological aspects of photosynthesis. Carbon and nitrogen metabolism and its regulation; organellar interactions and compartmentation. Water relations, ion transport, flowering, hormone action, and plant responses to stress.

Ms. González, Mr. Zeiger

163. Biology of Marine Tetrapods. Five-week intensive course. Lecture, five hours; laboratory and fieldwork, 15 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 6, 9 or equivalent, Chemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL. Highly recommended: course 111. Survey of "higher" vertebrates living in marine habitats, including estuarine amphibians, marine reptiles, seabirds, and marine mammals. Laboratory emphasizes observational and experimental approaches to study of morphology, systematics, ecology, and behavior of local marine birds and mammals. Given off campus at a marine science center.

164. Field Biology of Marine Fishes. Five-week intensive course. Lecture, five hours; laboratory, 15 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, and 6, or consent of instructor. Recommended: Mathematics 3A, 3B, 3C. Selected aspects of natural history, ecology, and behavior of the diverse assemblage of local marine fishes. Fieldwork strongly emphasized. Given off campus at a marine science center. Mr. Butth

165. Ecological Physiology of Marine Vertebrates. Five-week intensive course. Lecture, five hours; laboratory, 15 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 6, 9 or equivalent, Chemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, and 11C/11CL, or consent of instructor. Recommended: Mathematics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 31A, 31B, and 32A, Physics 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL. Introduction to physiological adaptations of marine vertebrates to major physicochemical variables in the oceans of the world and to major marine habitats. Laboratory work emphasizes marine vertebrates of Southern California waters. Given off campus at a marine science center. Mr. Gordon

166. Animal Physiology (6 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory, five hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 9 or equivalent, Chemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL. Not open for credit to students with credit for course 167 or former course 170. Introduction to physiological principles, with emphasis on organ systems and intact organisms.

167. Regulatory Physiology (6 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory, five hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 9 or equivalent, Chemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL. Not open for credit to students with credit for course 166 or former course 170. Introduction to whole animal and organ physiology. Primary considerations to neuronal and endocrine regulations of body functions and integration of organ systems. Mr. Engelmann

168. Insect Physiology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisite: course 158 or 166 or 167 or equivalent. Survey of physiology of insects, with emphasis on functional adaptations. Mr. Engelmann

CM169. Macromolecular Metabolism and Subcellular Organization (6 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry CM169.) Lecture, five hours. Prerequisites: Chemistry 153A, 153B, 153C, consent of instructor. Recommended: Chemistry CM153G. Cell cycle; DNA replication and repair; structure and properties of cellular organelles; regulation of cell division; cell transformation; normal and aberrant expression of oncogenes; molecular aspects of development. Concurrently scheduled with course CM223.

Mr. McEntee and the Staff (W)

171. Principles of Neurobiology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 9, 100A, and 166, or consent of instructor. Strongly recommended: course 100B. Introduction to basic principles of neurobiology, including description of structure of neurons and nervous systems; ionic mechanisms responsible for generating membrane potentials, action potentials, and synaptic potentials; properties of synaptic transmission, information transduction and coding in sensory pathways, and neural control of movement; development of and trophic interactions between cells of nervous system. Mr. O'Laque

M173. Anatomy and Physiology of Sense Organs. (Formerly numbered 173.) (Same as Physiological Science M173.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 171 (or Physiological Science 111A) or M175A-M175B (or Physiological Science M180A-M180B) or equivalent. Structure and function of sense organs. Adoption of quantitative and comparative approach to provide insight into evolution of sense organs in both invertebrates and vertebrates. Mr. Fain, Mr. Narins, Mr. Simmons

C174A-C174F. Advanced Topics in Cell and Molecular Biology (2 units each). (Formerly numbered 174A-174F.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Series of five-week two-unit courses on recent developments in fields of cell and molecular biology. Two courses to be presented in succession in same term whenever offered; students may take either or both. Concurrently scheduled with courses C222A-C222F:

C174A. Molecular Evolution. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Current developments in the field of molecular evolution. Constructing evolutionary trees at molecular level; formal testing of evolutionary hypotheses using sequencing data. Mr. Lake

C174B. Molecular Biology of Cell Nucleus. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Animal cell nucleus regulation of cell metabolism. Structure/function relationships, nuclear-cytoplasmic exchange, DNA replication and gene expression. Ms. Kasamatsu

C174C. Eukaryotic DNA Replication and Cell Cycle Control. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Enzymatic mechanisms of DNA replication, protein kinases and cell cycle control, regulation of genes encoding DNA replication proteins. Mr. Ray

C174D. Molecular Biology of Extracellular Matrix. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Recommended: course 138. Synthesis of key extracellular matrix proteins and their assembly into supramolecular structures. Interactions of matrix proteins with cells and their influence on tissue formation. Mr. Fessler

C174E. Chromosome Structure and Gene Expression. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Genetic and biochemical approaches to analysis of relation between chromosome structure, genetic regulatory factors, and gene expression. Mr. Grunstein

C174F. Molecular Parasitology. Examination of recent advances in molecular biology of parasites and host/parasite relationship. Specific topics include parasite development, antigenic variation in trypanosomes, RNA editing, prospects for parasitic vaccines. Mr. Simpson

M175A-M175B-M175C. Neuroscience: From Molecules to Mind (5 units each). (Same as Neuroscience M101A-M101B-M101C, Physiological Science M180A-M180B-M180C, and Psychology M117A-M117B-M117C.) Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour:

M175A. Cellular Mechanisms. Prerequisites: course 9, Chemistry 132A, Physics 3B or 6B or 8C. Cellular physiology, pharmacology, molecular biology, and development of nervous system. Mr. Feldman, Mr. Narins, Mr. Tobin (F)

M175B. Integrative Mechanisms. Prerequisite: course 171 (or Physiological Science 111A or Psychology 115) or M175A (or Neuroscience M101A or Physiological Science M180A or Psychology M117A). Central and reflex mechanisms of homeostasis, sensory information processing, and motor control. Mr. Schein, Ms. Smith (W)

M175C. Neural Bases of Behavior. Prerequisite: course 171 (or Physiological Science 111A or Psychology 115) or M175B (or Neuroscience M101B or Physiological Science M180B or Psychology M117B). Neural mechanisms underlying motivation, learning, and cognition. Mr. Gallistel (Sp)

176. Advanced Topics in Animal Virus/Host Interaction (2 units). Five-week intensive course. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 100A, 108. Recommended: Chemistry 153B, Microbiology 102. Recent developments in fields of interaction of hosts with animal viruses. Emphasis on molecular and cellular approaches to understand host/virus interaction at level of entry, replication, assembly, and morphogenesis, as well as host defense and viral pathogenesis. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Kasamatsu, Ms. Nayak (W)

179. Invertebrate Endocrinology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 158 or 166 or 167 or consent of instructor. Comprehensive treatment of invertebrate endocrinology. Mr. Engelmann

181. Parasitology and Symbiosis (6 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 9 or equivalent. Introduction to principles, biology, and evolution of infectiousness, symbiosis, and parasitism, emphasizing protozoan and helminth parasites, including those of man.

M185A. Immunology (5 units). (Formerly numbered CM185.) (Same as Microbiology M185A and Microbiology and Immunology M185A.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, 90 minutes; outside study, 1 1/2 hours. Prerequisites: courses 9, 100A, 108 or equivalent. Recommended prerequisites or corequisites: course 100B, Chemistry 153A, 153L. Introduction to experimental immunobiology and immunochemistry; cellular and molecular aspects of humoral and cellular immune reactions. Mr. Clark, Ms. Morrison

CM185B. Intermediate Immunology. (Same as Microbiology CM185B.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course M185A or equivalent. In-depth exploration of topics introduced in course M185A. Concurrently scheduled with course CM285.

Mr. Aguilera, Mr. Kronenberg, Mr. Sercarz

188. Seminar: Biology and Society (2 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Investigations and discussions of current socially important issues involving substantial biological considerations, either or both as background for policy and as consequences of policy. May be repeated once for credit.

M189A-M189B. Theoretical Behavioral Ecology. (Same as Anthropology M189A-M189B.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: one upper division introduction to behavioral ecology course, one university-level mathematics course (preferably calculus or probability and statistics). Course M189A or consent of instructor is prerequisite to M189B. Students expected to do simple algebra, elementary calculus, and probability. A rich body of mathematical theory describing the evolution of animal behavior exists. Introduction to this body of theory at a pace and mathematical level that allows students to grasp this information. Within each area of theory (e.g., kin selection, optimal foraging theory, etc.), presentation of basic corpus of models so that students understand assumptions that underlie the models, and how main results are derived. Presentations supplemented by a survey of results printed in the literature, especially those derived using more advanced methods. Mr. Boyd

190A-190D. Honors Research in Biology (2 to 4 units each). Prerequisites: course 5L, senior standing, consent of undergraduate adviser. Individual research designed to broaden and deepen students' knowledge of some phase of biology. Must be taken with Biology Department faculty for at least two terms and for a total of at least eight units. In Progress grading (credit to be given only on completion of course 190B). Students may elect to enroll in additional research through courses 190C-190D (letter grading). A report on progress must be presented to undergraduate adviser each term a 190 course is taken. Eight units may be applied toward Biology Department majors. (F,W,Sp)

M191. Biological Bases of Psychiatric Disorders. (Same as Physiological Science M181 and Psychiatry M191.) Lecture, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Prerequisite: course M175A or Neuroscience M101A or Physiological Science 111A or M180A or Psychology M117A or consent of instructor. Underlying brain systems involved in a number of psychiatric neurologic disorders, including schizophrenia, depression, obsessive/compulsive disorder, as well as neurologic disorders exemplified by both clinical treatment and experimental research.

Mr. Levine and the Staff

192. Teaching Practicum in Biology (1 to 4 units). Prerequisites: junior or senior biology major, consent of department. Training and supervised practicum for advanced undergraduates in teaching biology. Students serve as junior teaching assistants and assist in preparation of materials and development of innovative programs. Consult Undergraduate Office for further information. May not be applied toward course requirements for any Biology Department major. P/NP or letter grading.

193. Teaching Practicum in Cell and Molecular Biology (1 to 4 units). Prerequisites: junior or senior cell and molecular biology major, consent of department. Training and supervised practicum for advanced undergraduates in teaching cell and molecular biology. Students serve as junior teaching assistants and assist in preparation of materials and development of innovative programs. Consult Undergraduate Office for further information. May not be applied toward course requirements for any Biology Department major. P/NP or letter grading.

199. Special Studies (2 to 16 units). Prerequisites: course 5L, consent of instructor and undergraduate adviser based on written proposal outlining the study or research to be undertaken. Studies to involve laboratory or field-related research, not literature surveys or library research. Proposal should be worked out in consultation with instructor and submitted for approval to undergraduate adviser before the day instruction begins in that term. At end of term a report describing progress of the study or research and signed by the student and instructor must be presented to undergraduate adviser. Students who wish to take more than eight units of course 199 in any one term must obtain authorization from department chair and appropriate dean. Only one 199 course may be applied toward Biology Department majors. (F,W,Sp)

Graduate Courses

Consent of instructor is required for admission to all graduate courses. Additional prerequisites are stated in the course descriptions.

201. Use of the Computer in Biology (2 units). Lecture, two hours; laboratory, one hour. Introduction to use of IBM PC microcomputer and VAX minicomputer in biological research. S/U grading.

Mr. Simpson

203. Marine Botany and Physiology. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; laboratory, six hours; experimental project. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Structure, reproduction, life histories, and biology of marine algae, with emphasis on physiological ecology and biochemistry. Techniques in culture and physiological, ecological, and biochemical investigation of algae. Given off campus at a marine science center.

204. Advanced Biology of Algae. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Consideration of current research in experimental phycoecology. Topics include discussion of appropriate aspects of chemical and physical oceanography and limnology; algal physiology; biochemistry, physiological ecology, and algal processes in ocean and freshwater habitats. Mr. Chapman

205. Marine Invertebrate Biology. Lecture, four hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Functional morphology, life histories, and systematics of marine invertebrates of all major and most minor taxa; emphasis on the living animal and its habitat. Given off campus at a marine science center.

206. Advanced Ichthyology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: course 111 or 112. Advanced study of various aspects of fish biology. Theme varies from year to year. May be repeated for credit. Mr. Buth

208. Advanced Vertebrate Morphology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisites: course 110 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Emphasis on a functional approach to evolution of vertebrate locomotor, feeding, and circulatory systems. Laboratory includes comparative and experimental analyses of morphological adaptation. Independent project required. May be repeated once for credit. Ms. Van Valkenburgh

209. Behavior of Arthropods. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course 105 or 107 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Advanced study of topics in behavior of terrestrial arthropods, including communication, feeding, reproductive, and social behavior. Emphasis on both mechanistic and adaptive approaches toward understanding behavior. Independent project required.

210. Advanced Ornithology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, two hours; fieldwork, two hours. Prerequisites: course 114 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Advanced study of topics in modern avian biology. Emphasis on experimental approaches to investigations of physiology (energetics, nutrition, osmoregulation), ecology (population and community organization), and behavior (foraging, breeding, sociality).

211. Physiology and Ecology of Digestion. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours; laboratory, two hours. Prerequisite: course 166 or 167 or equivalent. Introduction to function of digestive systems and intestinal adaptations to diet, stage of development, and nutritional state. Principles of digestion and membrane transport emphasized in lecture and discussion sections; modern techniques taught in laboratory. Students conduct individual projects in lab and field.

C212. Experimental Invertebrate Zoology (6 units). Lecture, two hours; laboratory, 12 hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, 6, consent of instructor. Advanced treatment of physiology, behavior, and ecology of invertebrates, with emphasis on independent laboratory and field investigations. Concurrently scheduled with course C104. Mr. Hamner, Mr. Morin

C214. Physiological Ecology of Desert Animals. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, one hour; field trips, four hours. Prerequisites: courses 5, 6. Consideration of physiological, behavioral, morphological, and ecological mechanisms desert animals use to enhance their survival in an arid habitat. Concurrently scheduled with course C134A. Mr. Nagy

C215. Introduction to Marine Science. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours; weekend field trips. Prerequisites: courses 5, 5L, and 6, or consent of instructor. Strongly recommended for prospective MBQ students. Introduction to physical, chemical, and biological aspects of marine science. Emphasis on biological systems and natural communities. Concurrently scheduled with course C109.

216. Quantitative Methods in Behavior and Ecology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisites: course 122 or 129 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Quantitative methods of data collection and analysis in behavioral and ecological research. Lectures review general nature of quantitative problems that arise in behavior and ecology and statistical methods used to solve them. Laboratory exercises emphasize analysis, using comprehensive statistical software routines on personal microcomputers, of the kinds of data that frequently arise in field biological research. Mr. R. Gibson

217. Marine Ecology. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Structure, diversity, and energetics of marine communities; behavior, population dynamics, and biogeography of component species; associated oceanography and geology. Given off campus at a marine science center. Mr. Vance

218. Oceanology. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Ecology and dynamics of pelagic and benthic associations; physicochemical properties of seawater and marine substrates and their biological significance; qualitative and quantitative methods of oceanology. Given off campus at a marine science center.

C219. Mathematical Ecology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A. Differential equation models of population growth explore theory of evolutionary ecology to determine why natural environments of the world support the kinds of living organisms they do and why organisms of the world possess the adaptations they do. Concurrently scheduled with course C119. Mr. Vance

CM220. Molecular Cell Biology (6 units). (Not the same as course C220 prior to Fall Quarter 1994.) (Same as Anatomy M209A and Physiology M209A.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Introduction to cell biology for graduate students in basic medical sciences and selected undergraduates. Topics include membrane structure, assembly, and function; biogenesis of organelles, intercellular and intracellular signaling, immunity and gene structure, function and replication. Concurrently scheduled with course CM139. Mr. Bok, Mr. Homsher (W)

C222A-C222F. Advanced Topics in Cell and Molecular Biology (2 units each). Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Series of five-week two-unit courses on recent developments in fields of cell and molecular biology. Two courses to be presented in succession in same term whenever offered; students may take either or both. Concurrently scheduled with courses C174A-C174F:

C222A. Molecular Evolution. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Current developments in the field of molecular evolution. Constructing evolutionary trees at molecular level; formal testing of evolutionary hypotheses using sequencing data. Original research proposal required. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Lake

C222B. Molecular Biology of Cell Nucleus. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Animal cell nucleus regulation of cell metabolism. Structure/function relationships, nuclear-cytoplasmic exchange, DNA replication and gene expression. Original research proposal required. Ms. Kasamatsu

C222C. Eukaryotic DNA Replication and Cell Cycle Control. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Enzymatic mechanisms of DNA replication, protein kinases and cell cycle control, regulation of genes encoding DNA replication proteins. Original research proposal required. Mr. Ray

C222D. Molecular Biology of Extracellular Matrix. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Recommended: course 138. Synthesis of key extracellular matrix proteins and their assembly into supramolecular structures. Interactions of matrix proteins with cells and their influence on tissue formation. Original research proposal required. Mr. Fessler

C222E. Chromosome Structure and Gene Expression. Prerequisites: courses 100B, 108, Chemistry 153B. Genetic and biochemical approaches to analysis of relation between chromosome structure, genetic regulatory factors, and gene expression. Original research proposal required. Mr. Grunstein

C222F. Molecular Parasitology. Examination of recent advances in molecular biology of parasites and host/parasite relationship. Specific topics include parasite development, antigenic variation in trypanosomes, RNA editing, prospects for parasitic vaccines. Original research proposal required. Mr. Simpson

CM223. Macromolecular Metabolism and Subcellular Organization (6 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry CM267 and Chemistry M267.) Lecture, five hours. Prerequisites: Chemistry 153A, 153B, 153C, consent of instructor. Recommended: Chemistry CM153G. Cell cycle; DNA replication and repair; structure and properties of cellular organelles; regulation of cell division; cell transformation; normal and aberrant expression of oncogenes; molecular aspects of development. Concurrently scheduled with course CM169. Mr. McEntee and the Staff (W)

224. Marine Molecular Biology (8 units). Lecture, three hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisites: background in marine sciences, basic cell biology and biochemistry, consent of instructor. Ten-week intensive course designed to train marine biologists in advanced techniques of cell and molecular biology. Independent project required. Given off campus at a marine science center.

C225. Tropical Animal Communication (4 or 8 units). Prerequisites: courses 5, 6. Offered either as a four-unit quarter-long course or as an eight-unit Field Biology Quarter course. Four-unit course has lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Animal communication behavior, tropical vertebrate biology, and evolution of information processing systems. Eight-unit course covers same basic lecture material in five or six intensive weeks, followed by extended field trips where students do individual projects in animal communication. Concurrently scheduled with course C125. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Narins

M226A-M226B. Principles of Microbial Pathogenesis. (Same as Microbiology M226A-M226B and Microbiology and Immunology M226A-M226B.) Lecture, one hour; discussion, three hours. Prerequisites: Microbiology and Immunology 202A, 202B, 202C, and 202D, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Lecture/discussion format designed to analyze basic pathogenesis of infections. Emphasis on molecular and cellular approaches to understand host-microbial interaction. M226A. Bacterial and Mycotic Infections; M226B. Parasitic and Viral Infections. Mr. Ahmed

C227. Behavioral Ecology (4 or 8 units). Prerequisites: course 6 and Mathematics 3 or 31 series, or consent of instructor. Offered either as a four-unit quarter-long course or as an eight-unit Field Biology Quarter course. Four-unit course has lecture, three hours; discussion, three hours. Animal communication behavior, island biogeography, and evolution of social behavior. Eight-unit intensive course covers same basic lecture material in five intensive weeks, followed by extended field trip where students do individual projects in behavioral ecology. Concurrently scheduled with course C126. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Narins

228. Prokaryotic and Eukaryotic Gene Systems (2 units). Presentations concerning current experimental approaches in study of DNA replication, organization, transcription, and translation.

Mr. Grunstein, Mr. Ray

M230B. Structural Molecular Biology. (Same as Chemistry M230B.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: Physics 6C, Mathematics 3C, consent of instructor. Selected topics from principles of biological structure; structures of globular proteins and RNAs; structures of fibrous proteins, nucleic acids, and polysaccharides; harmonic analysis and Fourier transforms; principles of electron, neutron, and X-ray diffraction; optical and computer filtering; three-dimensional reconstruction. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Eisenberg

M230D. Structural Molecular Biology Laboratory (2 units). (Same as Chemistry M230D.) Laboratory, 10 hours. Corequisite: course M230B. Methods in structural molecular biology, including experiments utilizing single crystal X-ray diffraction, low angle X-ray diffraction, electron diffraction, optical diffraction, optical filtering, three-dimensional reconstruction from electron micrographs, and model building.

Mr. Eiserling, Mr. Lake

M231A-M231B-M231C. Advanced Evolutionary Biology. (Formerly numbered 231A-231B-231C.) (Same as Earth and Space Sciences M243A-M243B-M243C.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Series of advanced studies of concepts and methods in evolutionary biology. Topics may include speciation, extinction, coevolution, fossil record, rates of evolution, contributions of molecular biology in evolutionary studies, and development of evolutionary thought. Students encouraged to take each course in sequence. Themes vary from year to year. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading. M231A. Mechanisms of Evolution. Prerequisites: courses 120 and/or 135 or equivalent; M231B. Patterns of Evolution; M231C. Molecular Evolution.

232. Advanced Ecology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour; field trip, three hours. Prerequisite: course 122 or equivalent. Concepts and topics in ecology, evolutionary or behavioral ecology, or theoretical ecology. Topics vary from year to year and may include island biogeography, tropical biology, biodiversity, modeling in ecology, habitat selection, community structure and organization, and ecology and evolution of reproductive rates. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Cody

M233. Principles, Practices, and Policies in Biotechnology (2 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry M233, Chemical Engineering M233, Chemistry M233, Microbiology M233, Microbiology and Immunology M233, and Radiological Sciences M233.) Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. Presentation of technologies, regulatory practices, and policies required for product development and review of current opportunities for new technology development. Topics include fermentation processes, pilot and large-scale bioprocess technologies, scaleup strategies, industrial recombinant DNA processes, hybridomas, protein engineering, peptide mimetics and rational drug design, medical and microscopic imaging, and intellectual property issues. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Fox, Ms. Morrison

234. Genetic Control of Development. (Formerly numbered 234A.) Topics at forefront of molecular developmental biology, including problems in oogenesis and early embryogenesis, pattern formation, axis determination, nervous system development, cellular morphogenesis, and cell-cell and cell-matrix interactions. S/U or letter grading.

235. Current Topics in Escherichia coli Genetics (2 units). Prerequisite: course 596. Seminar on topics from current literature in Escherichia coli molecular genetics, with emphasis on using nonsense suppression to effect protein engineering and to study mechanisms of mutagenesis.

236. Seminar: Marine Molecular Biology. Discussion, 10 hours. Prerequisites: course 224, consent of instructor. Seminar on current issues and work in marine molecular biology. Given off campus at a marine science center.

M237. Introduction to Cellular Physiology and Biophysics (6 units). (Same as Physiological Science M212 and Physiology M212.) Lecture, five hours. Prerequisites: Physiological Science 111A or Physiology M209A or equivalent, graduate standing, consent of department and instructor; for upper division undergraduates: consent of instructor. Development of fundamental physiological and biophysical concepts associated with all membranes, membrane channels and transporters, membrane potential, membrane excitability, electrical signal transmission and transduction, and muscle contraction and their application to study of basic cellular processes. Emphasis in laboratory on development of skills using computer programming languages, spreadsheets, and graphics for modeling and analysis of cellular processes.

238. Structure, Function, and Biogenesis of the Mitochondrion. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 158, consent of instructor. Origin, maintenance, and function of the mitochondrion as example of a highly organized subcellular organelle in the eukaryotic cell. Mr. Simpson

C239. Molecular Basis of Plant Differentiation and Development. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 5, 9 and 108 or equivalent, 100A. In-depth study of basic processes of growth differentiation and development in plants and molecular mechanisms underlying these processes. Discussion of a variety of plant systems, with focus on developing critical understanding of current experimental basis of research in this field. Concurrently scheduled with course C141. Preparation and presentation of term paper, in addition to other coursework, required of graduate students.

Ms. Erickson, Ms. Tobin

240. Physiology of Marine Animals. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. Lecture and laboratory studies on cellular, tissue, organ, and animal physiology; regulatory biology; metabolic characteristics of cells, energy transformations. Given off campus at a marine science center.

242. Topics in Neurobiology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 171 or equivalent. Selected current problems in neurobiology discussed in depth, with emphasis on analysis of original papers. May be repeated for credit. Mr. O'Lague

243. Animal Communication. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: Mathematics 3C, Physics 6C, consent of instructor. Open to qualified undergraduates with consent of instructor. Physical properties of animal signals and physiological mechanisms underlying their generation and reception. Lectures treat signal analysis, signal transmission, and receptor design in light of constraints placed on each of the sensory modalities. Examples of communication systems using visual, auditory, chemical, electrical, and magnetic cues, with emphasis on biological adaptations for efficiently signaling species-specific information. Mr. Narins

244. Advanced Insect Physiology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, five hours. Prerequisite: course 168 or consent of instructor. Detailed discussion of current problems in insect physiology, with advanced laboratory. Mr. Engelmann

245. Advanced Topics in Cell Biology (2 units). Seminar, one hour; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 138 or 158 or equivalent. Includes seminar section on a current topic in cell biology and discussion section on seminar topic. Students prepare one such seminar each term, using reading list provided as background, and select a topic with aid of current literature and consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

M246. Computer Analysis of Genetic Organization. (Same as Microbiology M246.) Lecture, two hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisite: course 108 or Microbiology C119 or equivalent. Lectures and laboratory instruction in contemporary procedures for analysis of nucleic acid and protein sequence data with the computer. No prior computer experience necessary; students gain both general and specialized facility with IBM PC and Digital VAX computers.

Mr. Nierlich, Mr. Simpson (F, alternate years)

247. Advanced Plant Biology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course C141 or 162 or equivalent. Open to undergraduates with consent of instructor. Designed to expose first-year graduate students to topics of current interest in plant biology. Subjects include plant genetics, growth and development, organelle structure, development and function, and plant-specific metabolic processes (photosynthesis, nitrogen fixation, metabolism of small molecules). S/U or letter grading.

M248. Molecular Genetics. (Same as Biological Chemistry M248 and Microbiology M248.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Basic concepts in modern genetics, with examples from both eukaryotic and prokaryotic systems. Emphasis on use of genetic techniques for addressing fundamental questions in biochemistry and molecular biology. Topics include mutagenesis, mutant selection, recombination, genetic mapping, complementation, transposable elements, gene organization, genetic regulation, and molecular evolution.

251. Seminar: Systematics (2 units). Discussion, two to four hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Current topics in systematic biology, including methods development and specific applications in study of phylogeny. Theme varies from year to year. May be repeated for credit. Mr. Buth

CM252. Biological Catalysis. (Same as Biological Chemistry M255, Chemistry CM255, and Pharmacology M255.) Prerequisites: courses 100A, 100B, Chemistry 110A, 153A, 153B, or equivalent, consent of instructor. Reaction mechanisms in molecular biology; experimental approaches for study of enzymes, including kinetics, isotopic labeling, stereochemistry, chemical modification, and spectroscopy; design of pharmacologically active agents and artificial enzymes. Drug metabolism and interactions addressed on a mechanistic level. Concurrently scheduled with course CM160. Graduate students required to write research paper and present oral report on it. Mr. Cho, Mr. Fukuto, Mr. Sigman (W)

253. Seminar: Plant Structure (2 units).

Mr. A. Gibson

254. Seminar: Plant Morphogenesis (2 units).

Ms. Hirsch

255. Seminar: Invertebrate Zoology (2 units).

Mr. Morin, Mr. Muscatine

CM256. Human Genetics. (Same as Microbiology CM256.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 100A, 108 or equivalent. Strongly recommended: course 100B. Application of genetic principles in human populations, with emphasis on cytogenetics, biochemical genetics, population genetics, and family studies. Lectures and readings in the literature, with focus on current questions in the fields of medical and human genetics and methodologies appropriate to answer such questions. Concurrently scheduled with course CM156. Independent research project required of graduate students. Mr. Lusic, Mr. Merriam

257A. Gene Manipulation: Genetic Engineering. (Formerly numbered 257.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course 138. Survey of methods and applications of recombinant DNA research as applied to both basic scientific research and the biotechnology industry. Mr. Salsler

257B. Gene Manipulation: Advanced Course (2 units). Lecture, 90 minutes; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 157 or 257A. Additional topics in methods and applications of recombinant DNA research as applied to both basic scientific research and the biotechnology industry. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Salsler

M258A. Molecular Genetic Mechanisms of Immune Response (2 units). (Same as Microbiology M258A and Microbiology and Immunology M258A.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course CM185B or CM285 or Microbiology and Immunology 202A or consent of instructor. Reading and discussion of current research articles on immunoglobulin I and II, oncogenes of immune system, T cell antigen receptor, and loci affecting differentiation. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Kronenberg, Mr. Wall (W, five weeks)

M258B. Biology of B Cells: Development, Repertoire, and Activation (2 units). (Same as Microbiology M258B and Microbiology and Immunology M258B.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course CM185B or CM285 or Microbiology and Immunology 202A or consent of instructor. Reading and discussion of current research articles on B cell development, repertoire, and growth and differentiative regulation. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Braun, Mr. Stevens (W, five weeks)

M258C. T Cells (2 units). (Same as Microbiology M258C and Microbiology and Immunology M258C.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisites: course CM185B, Microbiology and Immunology 202A. Reading and discussion of current research articles on molecular and cellular aspects of T cell function, including receptors and activation pathways, memory, tolerance, and specialized subjects and their functions. Mr. Clark (Sp, five weeks)

M258D. Molecular Interactions in Immune Responses (2 units). (Same as Microbiology M258D and Microbiology and Immunology M258D.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course CM185B or CM285 or Microbiology and Immunology 202A or consent of instructor. Reading and discussion of current research articles on immunology of antibodies, antigens, and complement, antigenic recognition, antibody restriction. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Morrison (F, five weeks)

M258E. Immunopathology: Immunology of Disease (2 units). (Same as Microbiology M258E and Microbiology and Immunology M258E.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course CM185B or CM285 or Microbiology and Immunology 202A or consent of instructor. Reading and discussion of current research articles on tolerance and autoimmunity, autoimmune disease models, immune complex disease, immediate hypersensitivity and its cellular basis, and natural and acquired immune deficiency disease. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Porter (Sp, five weeks, alternate years)

M258F. Immune Regulation (2 units). (Same as Microbiology M258F and Microbiology and Immunology M258F.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course CM185B or CM285 or Microbiology and Immunology 202A or consent of instructor. Reading and discussion of current research articles on idiotype networks, suppressor T cells, tolerance at T and B cell levels, and Ir gene control. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Sercarz (F, five weeks)

259. Seminar: Herpetology (2 units). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Seminar on current approaches to herpetology. Main theme varies from year to year in areas such as biogeography, ecology, behavior, environmental physiology.

260. Seminar: Biology of Terrestrial Vertebrates (2 units).

Mr. R. Gibson

M261. Molecular and Cellular Immunology. (Same as Microbiology M261 and Microbiology and Immunology M261.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: Biological Chemistry CM253 or consent of instructors. Comprehensive graduate course covering fundamentals and recent advances in molecular and cellular immunology. Lectures supplemented with discussion section focusing on reading and analysis of primary research articles. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Kronenberg, Ms. Miceli, Mr. Smale

262. Seminar: Vertebrate Paleontology (2 units).

Ms. Van Valkenburgh

263. Seminar: Population Genetics (2 or 4 units). Discussion, three to six hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Seminar on topics of current interest in population genetics, such as kin selection, sociobiology, cultural evolution, conservation genetics, etc. Mr. Taylor

264. Seminar: Stomatal Function. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Open to undergraduates with consent of instructor. Structure and function of guard cells; gas exchange; environmental and hormonal regulation of stomatal responses; sensory transduction; stomatal adaptations. Mr. Zeiger

265. Seminar: Biophysical Plant Ecology (2 units).

Mr. Nobel

M266A-M266B-M266C. Seminars: Molecular Embryology (2 units each). (Same as Biological Chemistry M266A-M266B-M266C.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced course in developmental genetics and biochemistry, with emphasis on early development. Intended mostly for students actively working or highly interested in embryology. S/U grading. Ms. Lengyel, Mr. Merriam 267. Seminar: Current Topics in Evolutionary Ecology (2 units).

268. Seminar: Population Biology (2 units).

Mr. Cody, Mr. Hespenheide, Mr. Vance

269. Seminar: Animal Ecology (2 units). Discussion, three hours. Advanced study of specific topics in animal ecology and related fields.

Mr. Cody, Mr. Hespenheide

270. Seminar: Environmental Physiology (2 units). S/U grading.

Mr. Nagy

271. Seminar: Phycology and Mycology (2 units). Prerequisite: course 101A or equivalent or consent of instructor. Advanced study in biology of algae and fungi. Topics in physiological ecology, physiology, and biochemistry of algae and fungi, and their industrial uses. Algae and fungi as experimental organisms. Phylogeny and origin of eukaryote organisms. Evolutionary origin of chloroplasts. Mr. Chapman

272. Seminar: Marine Biology (2 units).

Mr. Gordon, Mr. Morin, Mr. Muscatine

273. Seminar: Entomology (2 units). Discussion of specific topics in entomology and related fields. Main theme varies from year to year, but usually emphasizes areas such as behavior, ecology, and evolution. S/U grading.

274. Seminar: Behavioral Ecology (2 units). Discussion of theoretical and empirical aspects of topics in behavioral ecology. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. R. Gibson (W)

276. Seminar: Molecular Genetics (2 units). Topics vary each term.

Mr. Salsler

277. Seminar: Genetics (2 units).

Mr. Merriam

278. Seminar: Molecular Genetics of Development (2 units). Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Topics vary from year to year, with focus on establishment of position and pattern during embryogenesis by interaction of signal transduction systems and transcription factors. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Lengyel

279. Seminar: Molecular Neurobiology (2 units). Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing. Current topics in molecular and developmental neurobiology. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Tobin

M280. Cellular and Molecular Developmental Neurobiology. (Same as Anatomy M204, Neuroscience M204, Physiology M204, and Psychiatry M204.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: Neuroscience M201, M202, and M203, or Biological Chemistry 201A-201B, or consent of instructor. Cellular and molecular processes that regulate development of nervous systems of vertebrates and invertebrates. Topics include regional specification in early neurogenesis, generation of neuronal diversity, cell surface interactions and growth factors, neuronal and glial proliferation and migration, axonal outgrowth and guidance, synaptogenesis, trophic interaction, plasticity, regeneration, and aging. Mr. de Vellis (W)

281. Seminar: Molecular Biology (2 units).

Ms. Kasamatsu

282. Seminar: Ichthyology (2 units). Prerequisite: course 111 or 112. Student presentations and discussion of specific topics in ichthyology. Theme varies from year to year. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Buth

283. Seminar: Topics in Cell Biology (2 units). Discussion of various topics on biology of eukaryotic cells. Topics vary from year to year and include bioenergetics, motility, organelle DNA, membrane structure and function, oncogenic transformation, nuclear organization and function. Mr. Simpson

284. Seminar: Structural Macromolecules (2 units). Lecture, one hour; discussion, three hours. Presentation and discussion of current topics in extracellular active structural macromolecules — their synthesis, structure, and roles in cell and developmental biology. Mr. Fessler

CM285. Intermediate Immunology. (Formerly numbered CM285B.) (Same as Microbiology CM285 and Microbiology and Immunology M285.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course M185A or equivalent. Recommended corequisite: Chemistry 153B. In-depth exploration of topics introduced in course M185A. Concurrently scheduled with course CM185B.

Mr. Aguilera, Mr. Kronenberg, Mr. Sercarz (W)

286. Seminar: Plant Development (2 units). Lecture, one hour; discussion, two hours. Prerequisites: one plant physiology course and at least one advanced undergraduate or graduate plant development or biochemistry course. Seminar on specific topics in plant development. Content varies each term. S/U grading. Mr. Phinney, Ms. Tobin

288. Seminar: Plant Cell Biology (2 units). Recommended (but not prerequisite): course 162.

Ms. González

289. Current Topics in Plant Molecular Biology (2 units). (Formerly numbered 296.) Discussion, one hour. Recent research developments in the field of plant molecular biology. Opportunities for graduate students to discuss individual research work. S/U grading. Ms. Hirsch

290. Seminar: Comparative Physiology (2 units).

Mr. Gordon, Mr. Narins

291. Seminar: Physiology and Biochemistry of Arthropods (2 units).

Mr. Engelmann

292. Seminar: Molecular Evolution (2 units). Discussion, three hours. Detailed analysis of current understanding of evolution of molecular sequences and structures. Mr. Lake

M293A. Seminar: Current Topics in Immunobiology of Cancer (2 units). (Same as Microbiology M262A and Microbiology and Immunology M262A.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Review of recent literature in immunology, biology, and biochemistry of cancer, with emphasis on fundamental studies involving cell-mediated immunity, humoral response, tumor specific antigens, and new techniques. Discussion of reports on scientific meetings. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading. Mr. Bonavida (F,W,Sp)

M293B. Immunology of AIDS (2 units). (Same as Epidemiology M214, Microbiology M262B, and Microbiology and Immunology M262B.) Lecture, one hour; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses M258B, M258C, Microbiology and Immunology 202A, 202B, 202C, 202D, or equivalent, consent of instructor. Lecture and student discussion of assigned publications. Topics include specific anti-HIV immune responses, activation of immune system by HIV, and basic mechanisms that underlie HIV-induced immunodeficiency. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Giorgi (W)

M293C. Biological Individuality and Immunity (2 units). (Same as Microbiology M262C and Microbiology and Immunology M262C.) Prerequisite: course M258C. Review of current literature in the field of immunogenetics, with emphasis on fundamental studies involving genetic and immunologic principles and techniques. Selected topics discussed and results interpreted; conclusions and experimental methods evaluated. (Sp, alternate years)

M293D. Selected Topics in Immunology (2 units). (Same as Microbiology M262D and Microbiology and Immunology M262D.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Student participation in discussions related to various topics in immunology. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading. (F,W,Sp)

294. Seminar: Current Aspects of Photosynthesis (2 units).

Mr. Thorber

295. Seminar: Neurophysiology (2 units).

Mr. O'Lague

296AA-296AZ. Advanced Topics in Molecular, Cellular, and Developmental Biology (2 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced study and analysis of current topics in cell, molecular, and developmental biology. Discussion of current research and literature in research specialty of faculty member teaching course. S/U grading.

296BA-296BZ. Seminars: Integrative Biology — Cellular, Organismic, and Population (1 to 4 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced study and analysis of current topics in cellular, organismic, and population biology. Discussion of current research and literature in research specialty of faculty member teaching course. S/U grading.

297. Advances in Molecular Analysis of Plant Development and Plant/Microbe Interactions (2 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Recent advances in plant molecular biology, with emphasis on control of gene expression both during plant development and in plant/microbe interactions. S/U grading.

Ms. Hirsch, Mr. Singh

M298. Seminar: Current Topics in Molecular Biology (2 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry M298, Chemistry M298, Microbiology M298, Microbiology and Immunology M298, and Molecular Biology M298.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor and graduate adviser of interdepartmental Molecular Biology Ph.D. Program. Each student conducts or participates in discussions on assigned topics. May be repeated for credit. (F,W,Sp)

299. Seminar: Parasitology (2 units).

375. Teaching Apprentice Practicum (1 to 4 units). Prerequisite: apprentice personnel employment as a teaching assistant, associate, or fellow. Teaching apprenticeship under active guidance and supervision of a regular faculty member responsible for curriculum and instruction at the University. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

495. Preparation for Teaching Biology in Higher Education (2 units). Prerequisite: graduate standing. Study of problems and methodologies in teaching biology, which includes workshops, seminars, apprentice teaching, and peer observation. S/U grading.

496. Preparation for Teaching Biology in Higher Education (2 units). Prerequisite: graduate standing. Strongly recommended as sequel to course 495 discussions on teaching, theory, and development of advanced skills. Study of methods and approaches to teaching of specific areas in biology, with emphasis on laboratory teaching, instructor/student interaction, and undergraduate motivation. S/U grading.

501. Cooperative Program (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of UCLA graduate adviser and graduate dean, and host campus instructor, department chair, and graduate dean. Used to record enrollment of UCLA students in courses taken under cooperative arrangements with USC. S/U grading.

596. Directed Individual (or Tutorial) Studies (2 to 12 units).

596F. Directed Individual (or Tutorial) Studies (2 to 8 units). Given off campus at a marine science center.

597. Preparation for M.A. Comprehensive Examination or Ph.D. Qualifying Examination (2 to 12 units). May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. course requirements. S/U grading.

598. M.A. Thesis Research and Writing (2 to 12 units).

599. Ph.D. Dissertation Research and Writing (2 to 12 units).

for the complexities of a career in business and administration. Students complete one of the many majors in the College of Letters and Science, as well as a sequence of courses.

For example, if you are interested in international business, you might major in a foreign language to become familiar with the literature and culture of other countries, and then add this program to gain basic understanding of economics, accounting, and statistics. Other students interested in working for a governmental agency or nonprofit corporation might add this program to a social sciences major. Students with an interest in a liberal arts area, who are not planning to go to graduate school, may want to complete this program to prepare for a job in business while pursuing a major of their choice. (Note: This program may not be taken with any economics major.)

Completion of this program in addition to a Letters and Science major will give you the basic skills and knowledge most employers seek. Courses used to satisfy either the major or general education requirements may also be applied toward the requirements of this program.

A minimum grade of C – is necessary to apply courses to this program, with an overall C average in the specialization. All courses must be taken for a letter grade; the P/NP option is not acceptable. You may satisfy one of the field studies course requirements by completing an independent studies course (199), taken in an appropriate department with prior consent of the program faculty adviser. You also are required to seek guidance from a field studies coordinator in choosing and researching your topic.

To enter the specialization, you must file a petition with the College Counseling Service in the College of Letters and Science. If you do not complete the program prior to graduation, you must petition out of the program to be eligible to graduate. (Such petitions are automatically granted; there is no penalty for not completing the program.) All degree requirements, including the specific requirements for this specialization, must be fulfilled within 228 units. A statement of completion is noted on your transcript and diploma when you have successfully completed the requirements for this specialization and for graduation.

For further information and help in assessing the appropriateness of this program and how it relates to your career/education goals, contact the College Counseling Service in the College of Letters and Science.

Core Courses

Required: Economics 1 and 2; Management 1A-1B; one statistics course; one mathematics course (except Mathematics A, 1, 38A, 38B, 104); two courses from English 4, 100W, 129, 131A through 131J, 136A, 136B, 136C (136A and 136B are In Progress courses; credit is given only on completion of both courses).

Business and Administration (Interdepartmental)

A316 Murphy Hall, (310) 825-1965

Additional Coursework for Students Interested in Business and Administration

The specialization in business and administration is not a major, but a sequence of supplemental courses designed to prepare students

Analytical Skills

Required: Three courses from one of the following areas: (1) quantitative methods and formal reasoning: Anthropology 180, 186, Computer Science 141, Economics 141, 147A, 147B, Geography 171, Philosophy 9, 31, 32, Political Science 102, Program in Computing 10A, 10B, 10C, Psychology M142, 144, 150, 151, Sociology 104, 112, 113; (2) administration: Political Science M105, 142C, 143A, 143B, 145D, 146B, 146C, 146D, 151, 167B.

Field Studies

Required: Any three courses listed below, preferably from within one of the 10 fields:

- (1) Communications — Communication Studies 100, 101, Sociology CM124A, CM124B, 135
- (2) Urban and Regional Development Studies — Geography 148, M149, 150, 155, 157
- (3) Applied Psychology — Linguistics 1 or 20, 10, Psychology 110, 111, 120, 121, 187
- (4) Economy and Society — Anthropology 60, 60P, 150, 167, History 149A, 149B, Political Science M141D, 142B, Psychology 175, Sociology 158, 168, 173
- (5) Economic Systems — Economics 110, 180, 190, Political Science 124, 129, 130, Sociology 173
- (6) Professional Writing — English 129*, 131A* through 131J*, 136A*, 136B*
- (7) Accounting — Management 120A, 120B, 122, 123, 124, 127, 128
- (8) Artificial Intelligence — Economics 141, 142, 148, Mathematics 142, 149, 172A, 172B
- (9) Operations Research — Mathematics 115A, 115B, 141A, 141B
- (10) Labor Studies — History 155A, 155B, Political Science 142C, Psychology M137E, Sociology 171

Max Kopelevich, Ph.D. (Chemistry)
 Betty A. Luceigh, Ph.D. (Chemistry; Distinguished Teaching Award)
 Arlene A. Russell, Ph.D. (Chemistry)

Scope and Objectives

Chemistry is concerned with the composition, structure, and properties of substances, the transformations of these substances into others by reactions, and the kinds of energy changes that accompany these reactions. The department is organized in four interrelated and overlapping subdisciplines that deal primarily with the chemistry of inorganic substances (inorganic chemistry), the chemistry of carbon compounds (organic chemistry), the chemistry of living systems (biochemistry), and the physical behavior of substances in relation to their structures and chemical properties (physical chemistry).

Undergraduate Study

Admission

Regular and transfer students who have the prerequisites for the various courses are not thereby assured of admission to those courses. The department may deny admission to any course if a grade of D or below was received in a prerequisite, or if in the opinion of the department the student shows other evidence of inadequate preparation.

Transfer students with more than 84 quarter units are accepted into the departmental majors only if they have completed the following courses or their equivalents: the entire Chemistry and Biochemistry 11 series, Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, Physics 8A, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL, or 6A, 6B, and 6C (or a year of calculus-based physics). For biochemistry majors, a year of biology may replace the physics. For chemistry majors, Mathematics 32B is recommended.

Transfer students with more than 105 quarter units are accepted into the departmental majors only if they have completed the following courses or their equivalents: the entire Chemistry and Biochemistry 11 series and one term of organic chemistry, Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, Physics 8A, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL, or 6A, 6B, and 6C (or a year of calculus-based physics). Biochemistry majors also should have completed a course in the biology of organisms; chemistry majors should have completed Mathematics 32B.

Entering transfer students who have successfully completed a year course (including laboratory) in general college chemistry intended for science and engineering students should enter course 132A. Transfer students should consult the department's Undergraduate Advising Office for assistance in planning their programs.

Preliminary Examination for Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A

If you wish to enroll in Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A or 11AH, you must take the Chemistry Diagnostic Test during the enrollment period for the term in which you intend to take these courses. Enrollment is limited to students who have passed the examination. It will be given in CS50 Young Hall on Monday, September 26, 1994; Thursday, November 17, 1994; and Thursday, March 2, 1995.

If your performance on the examination does not qualify you for immediate admission to Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, but you wish to enroll in a subsequent term, you may be eligible for enrollment in Los Angeles Valley College (LAVC) Chemistry 17. This course is given at UCLA during Fall Quarter specifically for UCLA students preparing for Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A. If you successfully complete LAVC course 17, you are entitled to admission to course 11A for the next three terms. Offered on a Passed/Not Passed basis, LAVC course 17 carries no UCLA graduation credit but does displace four units on your Study List. It is not an acceptable substitute for course 11A.

Advanced Placement in Chemistry

Students who have taken the Advanced Placement (AP) Chemistry Test and obtained a score of 4 or 5 receive eight units of chemistry credit and may petition for Chemistry 11A equivalency, or may take course 11A or 11AH at UCLA. Everyone planning to take Chemistry 11A or 11AH must take the Chemistry Diagnostic Test. If you received a score of 3 on the AP Chemistry Test, you receive eight units of chemistry credit but no course equivalency.

Credit Limitations

You may not take or repeat a chemistry or biochemistry course for credit if it is a prerequisite for a more advanced course for which you already have credit. This applies in particular to the repetition of courses (e.g., if you wish to repeat Chemistry 11A, you must do so before completing course 11B).

Undergraduate Majors

The department offers three majors: chemistry, biochemistry, and general chemistry. The chemistry and biochemistry majors are designed to prepare students for graduate studies in each field, for entry into professional schools in the health sciences, and for careers in industries and businesses that depend on chemically and biochemically based technology. The general chemistry major is intended for students who wish to acquire considerable chemical background in preparation for careers outside chemistry.

Courses used to fulfill any of the requirements for any of the departmental majors must be taken for a letter grade. Seminar courses, individual study courses, and research courses (e.g., 190, 199) may not be applied toward the requirements for the majors.

Requirements for the majors are outlined below. For additional information, contact the Undergraduate Advising Office in 4016 Young Hall.

Bachelor of Science in Chemistry

This program is for students who intend to pursue a career in chemistry.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A; Physics 8A, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL (8B/8BL strongly recommended), or 6A, 6B, and 6C*. Physics 8 series is strongly recommended for students with interest in physical chemistry, biophysical chemistry, or physical organic chemistry. No specific foreign language is required; however, reading knowledge of German (at least at the level of German 3) is strongly recommended if you are planning to pursue graduate work in chemistry.

The Major

Required: Chemistry and Biochemistry 110A, 110B, 113A, 114 (or 114H), 132A, 132B/132BL, 132C/132CL, either 136 or 144, 153A, 153L, 173, and two other upper division or graduate courses in the department, including at least one additional laboratory course from 136, 144, 154, 174, 184.

Bachelor of Science in Biochemistry

This program is for students preparing for careers in biochemistry or other fields requiring extensive preparation in both chemistry and biology.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A (33A strongly recommended); Physics 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL* (8B/8BL strongly recommended); Biology 5, 5L, 9. Physics 8 series is recommended for students with interest in biophysical chemistry.

The Major

Required: Chemistry and Biochemistry 110A, 132A, 132B/132BL, 132C/132CL, 153A, 153B, 153C, 153L, 154, 156, Biology 108, Microbiology and Molecular Genetics 101; one additional upper division or graduate course in chemistry and biochemistry; two elective upper division or graduate courses (eight units) in biology, chemistry and biochemistry, mathematics, microbiology, or physics, which must be approved by the undergraduate adviser.

Bachelor of Science in General Chemistry

This program is for students who wish to acquire considerable chemical background in preparation for careers outside chemistry. The requirements are accordingly quite flexible. The major may be appropriate for some students who plan to enter professional schools, such as those of medicine, dentistry, or public health.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 33A; Physics 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A, 8C/8CL, and 8D/8DL*.

To enter the major, you must complete the preparation courses with at least a 2.0 average.

The Major

Required: Chemistry and Biochemistry 110A, 132A, 132B/132BL, 132C/132CL, 153A, 153L; three additional upper division courses in the department (at least one must be a laboratory course); six additional upper division courses. A 2.0 average is required in all upper division courses in the department. The program should be coherent in terms of your interests and objectives and must be based on a written proposal and approved by the undergraduate adviser.

Graduate Study

The department offers programs of study and research leading to the M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in both Chemistry and Biochemistry. Candidates for advanced degrees may specialize in the following fields: biochemistry, inorganic, organic, or physical chemistry.

If you are planning to work toward the Ph.D., you should not seek an M.S. degree first but should apply directly to the Ph.D. program. Application materials may be obtained by writing to Phyllis Jergenson, Student Services Director, Department of Chemistry and Biochemistry, 4006 Young Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1569.

You may also be admitted to the biochemistry Ph.D. program through UCLA ACCESS to Programs in Molecular and Cellular Life Sciences, 168 MBI, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1570, (310) 206-5280.

Admission

An excellent undergraduate record is required in addition to the University minimum requirements. Graduate Record Examination (GRE) General and Subject Tests are recommended. GRE examinations are required for international students.

Each student admitted to graduate standing in chemistry is given orientation examinations at the beginning of the first term. The main purpose of the orientation requirement is to help you and your adviser plan your course program. The examinations include material covered in upper division courses in physical, organic, and inorganic chemistry. All courses suggested because of deficiencies in undergraduate preparation are normally to be completed by the end of the first year.

*If physics courses from both the 6 and 8 series are taken, undue duplication must be avoided.

There are no orientation examinations in biochemistry. You plan a course program in consultation with the biochemistry graduate adviser.

Chemistry students are encouraged to become familiar with research activities of all faculty members in their area of interest and to join a research group as soon as possible. Biochemistry students rotate through three research groups during Fall, Winter, and Spring Quarters, with a final selection made at the end of Spring Quarter.

Master of Science Degrees

Course Requirements

Chemistry M.S. — At least nine courses (36 units) are required, of which at least five (20 units) must be graduate courses and the remainder upper division courses. You must take a minimum of two courses in your major area and one course in an outside area. Choices may be made from the following:

Inorganic — Chemistry and Biochemistry 174, 207, 271A through 271Z, C275, C276A, 276B, 277, 279, C281

Organic — Chemistry and Biochemistry 207, 232, 236, 241A through 241Z, 242, C243A, C243B, 244A, 244B, 245, C281

Physical — Chemistry and Biochemistry C215A, C215B, 215C, 215D, C223A, C223B, 223C, 225

Substitutions may be made with consent of the area adviser. Courses submitted as part of the M.S. program must be taken on a letter grade basis (exceptions noted below).

Up to 24 units of course 596 (S/U grading) or 598 may be applied toward the total course requirement; up to 20 units may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement.

Plan I (thesis plan) is the preferred method of attaining the M.S. in Chemistry.

Plan II (comprehensive examination plan) requires the satisfactory completion of three cumulative examinations in lieu of a thesis. In exceptional cases where Plan II is used, an additional six units of course 597 and six units from course 228, 248, or 278 may be applied toward the graduate course requirement and the total course requirement.

Biochemistry M.S. — The M.S. in Biochemistry may be obtained by the thesis plan or the comprehensive examination plan. Up to 24 units of course 596 or 598 may be applied toward the total course requirement; up to eight units may be applied toward the graduate course requirement. Specific course requirements vary for each plan, as follows.

Plan I (thesis plan) requires a total of 36 units. Of these, 20 must be at the graduate level and include Chemistry and Biochemistry CM253 and M267.

Plan II (comprehensive examination plan) requires a total of 36 upper division and graduate units. Of these, 20 must be at the graduate level and include Chemistry and Biochemistry CM253 and M267. You may apply six units of course 258 and six units of course 268 to the graduate course requirement and the total course requirement. Courses must be approved by the biochemistry graduate adviser. With the exception of Chemistry and Biochemistry 258 and 596, all courses must be taken for a letter grade. The written requirements associated with the Winter and Spring Quarter student seminars must be satisfactorily completed.

Ph.D. Degrees

Course Requirements

Chemistry Ph.D. — Candidates in each area of specialization should normally complete as a minimum the coursework indicated below. Some of these requirements can be met on the basis of orientation examinations and courses taken prior to entry into the graduate program. If your projected research falls in an area which differs appreciably from that anticipated by the field requirements listed below, you may be permitted appropriate modifications. Required coursework must be completed prior to advancement to candidacy.

Inorganic Chemistry — (1) Required background material: Chemistry and Biochemistry 173; (2) courses 174, C275, C276A, 276B; (3) two courses from 153C, 207, C213B, C215A, C215B, 215D, C223A, 232, 236, 241A through 241Z, 242, C243A, C243B, 244A, 244B, 245, 271A through 271Z, 279, 280, C281, or other graduate courses with the approval of the area adviser; (4) Chemistry and Biochemistry 278.

Organic Chemistry — (1) Required background material: Chemistry and Biochemistry 132A, 132B, 132C, 136; (2) courses C243A, 244A; (3) course C243B or 244B; (4) one additional course from physical chemistry (C213B, 245) or inorganic chemistry (173, 174, C275, C276A) or biochemistry (153C); (5) two courses from 207, 232, 236, 241A through 241Z, 242, 245, C281; (6) Chemistry and Biochemistry 248.

Physical Chemistry — (1) Required background material: Chemistry and Biochemistry 110A, 110B, 113A; (2) courses C215A, C215B, C223A, C223B, or equivalent; (3) course 228 each term; (4) one term of course 218 (for presentation of research); (5) two courses (for letter grade credit) from 215C, 215D, 223C, 225; (6) two courses (with S/U grading option) from 215C, 215D, 221A through 221F, 223C, 225, C243A, C276A, 277, Physics 105A, 110A, 110B, 131, 132, 140, or upper division mathematics courses (subject to approval). Substitutions may be made with consent of the physical chemistry area adviser.

Biochemistry Ph.D. — Candidates should normally complete as a minimum the coursework indicated below. Some of these requirements can be met on the basis of courses taken prior to entry into the graduate program with consent of the graduate adviser. Required coursework must be completed prior to advancement to candidacy.

(1) Required background material: one year of organic chemistry, one physical chemistry or biophysical chemistry course, one year of biochemistry, some coursework in the life sciences, and some biochemistry laboratory experience. Deficiencies in background may be made up after admission.

(2) Two courses (10 to 12 units) from Chemistry and Biochemistry CM253, M263, M267 (Anatomy and Cell Biology M209A may be substituted for course M267 with consent of the graduate adviser).

(3) An additional 24 units of upper division or graduate courses, including units from item 2 but not from items 4, 5, or 6, of which 18 units must be completed in your first year. You should select the courses in consultation with the biochemistry graduate adviser.

(4) Chemistry and Biochemistry 258 in your first four terms; seminars in other departments may be substituted with consent of the graduate adviser.

(5) Chemistry and Biochemistry 268 in your first three terms.

(6) Three laboratory rotations (Chemistry and Biochemistry 596) during your first year.

Teaching Experience

One year of teaching experience is required (one term may be waived with consent of the graduate adviser).

Qualifying Examinations

Chemistry Ph.D. — Rather than a single comprehensive examination, the department gives all chemistry Ph.D. candidates a series of written tests called cumulative examinations. These are designed to encourage and test the continued growth of professional competency through coursework, study of the literature, departmental seminars, and informal discussions with colleagues.

Three examinations are given per term at approximately monthly intervals. If you enter directly into the Ph.D. program and perform satisfactorily on the orientation examination in your special area, you may begin writing the examinations immediately. You must begin by the start of your second term in residence and must continue until you have passed five. To remain in good standing, you should pass at least one of the first six examinations attempted. Students with a master's degree from an American university are required to pass three examinations out of nine attempts. Fifteen attempts are normally the maximum.

Biochemistry Ph.D. — The written examination requirement for all biochemistry Ph.D. candidates is coupled to graduate seminars taken in your first four terms (Chemistry and Biochemistry 258 or others). Beginning with Winter Quarter of your first year, you are required to submit the following written reports based on the seminar course to the instructor and other designated faculty members:

(1) Winter Quarter — A presentation and written report based on the Fall Quarter rotation research experience or other designated topic, to be submitted to the instructor and rotation supervisor for grading.

(2) Spring Quarter — A written report which summarizes the current state of knowledge in a small, well-defined area and which identifies the general types of experiments needed for progress in that field, to be prepared for grading by the course instructors.

(3) Fall Quarter, Second Year — At the end of the preceding Spring Quarter, you select a research topic from a list prepared by the division. An in-depth seminar on this topic which summarizes the current state of knowledge in a field and which indicates likely future directions must be presented. The written report should go beyond the information presented in the seminar and should propose specific experiments. This examination is graded by two faculty members other than the research supervisor.

A failed report may be revised once. The written examination requirement for the biochemistry Ph.D. program is fulfilled after you satisfactorily complete all three different types of reports.

At the end of the first and second years in either Ph.D. program, your overall progress is evaluated by the graduate study committee or biochemistry faculty committee, taking into account performance in courses, written examinations, and research. The committee may recommend that you (1) proceed to the oral examination, (2) be redirected to the M.S. program, or (3) be terminated from the graduate program.

Oral Qualifying Examination — Your doctoral committee, appointed with approval of the Graduate Division, conducts the University Oral Qualifying Examination which is based on your research proposal. The proposal should represent independent work and should offer the doctoral committee an opportunity to judge your ability to think creatively and to formulate significant ideas for research. The examination is to be attempted during the sixth term in residence by all biochemistry students and by chemistry students completing the written qualifying examinations by the end of the first year. All others must take the oral examination by the end of the seventh term. Failure to comply with this time schedule may result in disqualification from the Ph.D. program unless permission has been given by the area adviser. The committee's decision to advance you to candidacy, to allow you to repeat the oral, or to disqualify you is based on the quality of the written proposal, the adequacy of the oral presentation, your overall record at UCLA as reflected in coursework and examinations, and your research ability and productivity.

When a satisfactory report on the completion of the written and oral qualifying examinations is submitted, you are eligible for formal advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Dissertation/Final Oral Examination

You are required to prepare a dissertation thesis based on independent, original research conducted under the supervision of your research adviser and doctoral committee.

The final oral examination is optional with the doctoral committee. The determination is made at the time of the oral qualifying examination.

Lower Division Courses

2. Introductory Chemistry. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Not open to students with credit for course 11A. Concept of submicroscopic world of chemistry, ranging from protons to proteins in subject matter. Mr. Kaesz (F,Sp)

9. Beginning a Career in Molecular Sciences (1 unit). Limited to 50 freshmen/sophomores. Recommended for students considering a career in chemical sciences. Introduction to and discussion of research and career opportunities in molecular sciences; establishment of a faculty/student mentorship for each student to help in preparing a paper on a student-selected research topic. May be repeated twice. (F,W,Sp)

11A. General Chemistry. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Preparation: high school chemistry or equivalent background and three and one-half years of high school mathematics, successful completion of Chemistry Diagnostic Test. Recommended: high school physics. Required of all majors in chemistry and biochemistry. (Students lacking prerequisites may qualify for admission by exceptional performance on Chemistry Diagnostic Test.) Atomic picture of matter; periodicity of chemical properties; types of chemical reactions; reaction stoichiometry; chemical reaction calculations; quantum theory; atomic and molecular structure and bonding. Mr. Baur, Mr. Gelbart, Mr. Williams (F,W,Sp)

11AH. General Chemistry (Honors). Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Preparation: high school chemistry and physics or equivalent background and three and one-half years of high school mathematics. (Students lacking preparation may qualify for admission by exceptional performance on Chemistry Diagnostic Test.) All students who intend to take this course must take the Chemistry Diagnostic Test (enrollment is usually limited to students who have passed the examination). Honors course parallel to course 11A. Ms. Carter, Mr. Kivelson (F)

11B. General Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enforced requisite: course 11A (or 11AH, C – or better). Kinetic theory and thermodynamics of gas phase; thermochemistry; molecular interactions in liquids and solids; acid-base and solubility equilibria; free energy and reactivity. Mr. Baugh, Mr. Nicol (F,W,Sp)

11BH. General Chemistry (Honors). Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enforced requisite: course 11AH (B – or better). Honors course parallel to course 11B. Mr. Kivelson (W)

11BL. General Chemistry Laboratory (2 units). Laboratory, four hours; video laboratory, one hour. Enforced requisites: courses 11A and 11B (corequisite), (C – or better). Use of the balance; volumetric techniques; equilibria; thermochemistry; quantitative analysis using volumetric and potentiometric procedures; Beer's law. Ms. Russell (F,W,Sp)

11C. General Chemistry (3 units). Lecture, two hours. Enforced requisite: course 11B (or 11BH, C – or better). Chemical kinetics; electrochemistry; main group and transition metal reactivity; coordination chemistry; special topics such as carbon chemistry, polymers, ceramics, biological molecules. Ms. Garrell, Mr. Zink (F,W,Sp)

11CH. General Chemistry (Honors). Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enforced requisite: course 11BH (B – or better). Honors course parallel to course 11C, but at a more advanced level. Mr. Kaner (Sp)

11CL. General Chemistry Laboratory (3 units). Lecture, one hour; laboratory, six hours. Enforced requisite: course 11BL (C – or better). Rates of reactions; quantitative volumetric analysis; qualitative inorganic analysis; inorganic synthesis; column chromatography; colorimetric analysis. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Kaesz, Ms. Russell (F,W,Sp)

15. Survey of Organic Chemistry and Biochemistry. Enforced requisite: course 11A (C – or better). Not open to students with credit for course 132A. Recommended for students in prenursing, prephysical therapy, and pre dental hygiene. Does not meet requirements for admission to medical and dental schools. Introduction to structures and reactions of organic compounds, particularly with respect to their roles and transformations in living systems. (F)

15L. Laboratory in Elementary Organic Chemistry and Biochemistry (1 unit). Laboratory, four hours. Enforced corequisite: course 15 (C – or better). Does not meet requirements for admission to medical and dental schools. Introduction to quantitative work with aqueous solutions and to preparation, isolation, and characterization of organic compounds, particularly some of those important in living systems. (F)

88A-88Z. Lower Division Seminars (2 units each). (Formerly numbered 88.) Seminar, two hours; outside study, four hours. Limited to freshmen/sophomores. General introduction to frontiers of molecular sciences or intensive exploration of a particular theme or topic. Consult Schedule of Classes for topics and instructors. P/NP or letter grading:

88A. Serendipity in Science. Limited to 20 freshmen. Inquiry into unexpected discoveries in science that have had significant impact on society and analysis of circumstances which brought these about, beginning with discovery of helium in the sun by Janssen in 1868 (using the newly developed field of spectroscopy). Discovery of X rays by Röntgen in 1895 and of radioactivity by Becquerel in 1896. Other topics include discoveries important to medicine, such as penicillin by Fleming in 1928 and cis-platin by Rosenberg in 1969. Mr. Kaesz (F)

96. Special Courses in Chemistry (1 to 4 units). To be arranged. May be repeated for a maximum of eight units. (F,W,Sp)

Upper Division Courses

103. Environmental Chemistry. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 110A, 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A, and 153L, or consent of instructor. Chemical aspects of air and water pollution, solid waste disposal, energy resources, and pesticide effects. Chemical reactions in the environment and effect of chemical processes on the environment. Mr. Baur (Sp)

110A. Physical Chemistry: Chemical Thermodynamics. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course 11C, Physics 8A, 8C, and 8D, or 6A, 6B, and 6C, Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A or 3C (for life sciences majors). Fundamentals of thermodynamics, chemical and phase equilibria, thermodynamics of solutions, electrochemistry. Mr. Baur, Mr. Neuhauser, Mr. Nicol (F,W,Sp)

110B. Physical Chemistry: Introduction to Statistical Mechanics and Kinetics. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course 110A and Mathematics 32B, or consent of instructor. Strongly recommended: course 113A (for biochemistry majors course 156 may be substituted). Kinetic theory of gases, principles of statistical mechanics, statistical thermodynamics, equilibrium structure and free energy, relaxation and transport phenomena, macroscopic chemical kinetics, molecular-level reaction dynamics.
Mr. Felker, Mr. Neuhauser (W,Sp)

113A. Physical Chemistry: Introduction to Quantum Mechanics. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course 11C, Physics 8A, 8C, and 8D, or 6A, 6B, and 6C, Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 33A (may be taken concurrently). Departure from classical mechanics: Schrödinger vs. Newton equations; model systems: particle-in-a-box, harmonic oscillator, rigid rotor, and hydrogen atom; approximation methods: perturbation and variational methods; many-electron atoms, spin, and Pauli principle, chemical bonding.
Mr. Baugh, Mr. Kivelson (F,Sp)

C113B. Physical Chemistry: Introduction to Molecular Spectroscopy. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 113A. Interaction of radiation with matter, microwave spectroscopy, infrared and Raman spectroscopy, vibrations in polyatomic molecules, electronic spectroscopy, magnetic resonance spectroscopy. Concurrently scheduled with course C213B.
Ms. Garrell (W)

114. Physical Chemistry Laboratory. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisites: courses 11CL, 110A, 110B, and 113A, or consent of instructor. Lectures include techniques of physical measurement, error analysis and statistics, special topics. Laboratory includes spectroscopy, thermodynamic measurements, and chemical dynamics.
Mr. Baugh, Mr. Williams (W,Sp)

114H. Physical Chemistry Laboratory (Honors). Lecture, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisites: courses 11CL, 110A, 110B, and 113A, with grades of B or better, or consent of instructor. Lectures include techniques of physical measurement, error analysis and statistics, special topics. Laboratory includes topics in physical chemistry to be selected in consultation with instructor.
Mr. Baugh, Mr. Williams (W,Sp)

C115A-C115B. Quantum Chemistry. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course 113A, Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A. Recommended: knowledge of differential equations equivalent to Mathematics 135A or Physics 131 and of analytic mechanics equivalent to Physics 105A. Course C115A or Physics 115B is prerequisite to C115B. Students entering course C115A are normally expected to take course C115B the following term. Designed for chemistry students with serious interest in quantum chemistry. Postulates and systematic development of nonrelativistic quantum mechanics; expansion theorems; wells; oscillators; angular momentum; hydrogen atom; matrix techniques; approximation methods; time dependent problems; atoms; spectroscopy; magnetic resonance; chemical bonding. May be concurrently scheduled with courses C215A-C215B.
Mr. Heath (F, C115A; W, C115B)

121. Special Topics in Physical Chemistry. Prerequisite: course 110B. Recommended: course 113A, Physics 8D. Topics of considerable research interest presented at level suitable for students who have completed junior-year courses in physical chemistry.

C123A-C123B. Classical and Statistical Thermodynamics. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 110B or 156. Recommended: course 113A. Rigorous presentation of fundamentals of classical thermodynamics. Principles of statistical thermodynamics: probability, ensembles, partition functions, independent molecules, and the perfect gas. Applications of classical and statistical thermodynamics selected from diatomic and polyatomic gases, solid and fluid states, phase equilibria, electric and magnetic effects, ortho-para hydrogen, chemical equilibria, reaction rates, the imperfect gas, nonelectrolyte and electrolyte solutions, surface phenomena, high polymers, gravitation. May be concurrently scheduled with courses C223A-C223B.
Ms. Liu (F, C123A; W, C123B)

125. Computers in Chemistry. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 110A, 110B, 113A, working knowledge of FORTRAN IV or PL/1. Discussion of computer techniques, including matrix manipulation, solution of differential equations, data acquisition, and instrumental control, and their applications to chemical problems in quantum mechanics, thermodynamics, and kinetics.
Mr. Kopelevich (F)

132A. Organic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 11B or 11BH, and 11CL (may be taken concurrently), with grades of C- or better, or consent of instructor. Structures and properties of organic molecules; chemical bond and its relation to organic molecular structure, stereochemistry, and reactivity; mechanisms and stereochemistry of organic reactions; physical/organic study of a chemical reaction; synthesis, properties, and reactions of alkanes, alkenes, alkynes, alkyl halides, ethers, and alcohols.
Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Foote, Ms. Luceigh (F,W,Sp)

132AH. Organic Chemistry (Honors). Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 11B or 11BH, and 11CL (may be taken concurrently), with grades of B- or better, or consent of instructor. Honors course parallel to course 132A.
Mr. Garcia-Garibay (F)

132B. Organic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 132A or 132AH with a grade of C- or better or consent of instructor. Corequisite: course 132BL. Introduction to infrared, <sup>1</sup>H, and <sup>13</sup>C NMR spectroscopy; structure, reactivity, and spectroscopic properties of carbonyl and carboxyl derivatives, aromatic compounds, and amines; concepts of aromaticity; amino acids and the peptide bond.
Mr. Chapman, Ms. Luceigh (F,W,Sp)

132BH. Organic Chemistry (Honors). Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 132A or 132AH with a grade of B- or better or consent of instructor. Honors course parallel to course 132B.
Mr. Jung (W)

132BL. Organic Chemistry Laboratory (2 units). Lecture, one hour; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11CL, and 132A or 132AH, with grades of C- or better or consent of instructor. Corequisite: course 132B. Basic experimental techniques in organic synthesis (distillation, extraction, crystallization reaction setup and workup) and organic analytical chemistry (melting and boiling point, refractive index, chromatography, IR, NMR, GC). One-step synthesis of known organic compounds on microscale level.
Mr. Chapman, Ms. Russell (F,W,Sp)

132C. Organic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 132B or 132BH, and 132BL, with grades of C- or better, or consent of instructor. Introduction to electron absorption and mass spectroscopy; modern NMR spectroscopy; pericyclic reactions; molecular orbital theory; polymers and organic materials; organic chemistry of silicon, phosphorus, and sulfur; organic synthesis; concepts and design; building blocks of biological systems: amino acids and the peptide bond, lipids, carbohydrates, and heterocycles; bioorganic chemistry; molecular modeling.
Ms. Luceigh, Mr. Merlic (F,Sp)

132CH. Organic Chemistry (Honors). Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 132B or 132BH with a grade of B- or better or consent of instructor. Honors course parallel to course 132C.
Mr. Rubin (Sp)

132CL. Organic Chemistry Laboratory (2 units). Lecture, one hour; laboratory, four hours. Prerequisites: courses 132B or 132BH, and 132BL, with grades of C- or better, or consent of instructor. Corequisite: course 132C. Modern techniques in organic synthetic and analytical chemistry. Micro-preparative and semi-preparative scale single and multistep synthesis of known organic molecules. One- and two-dimensional multinuclear NMR techniques. CAS on-line literature search and written synthesis proposal.
Ms. Luceigh, Mr. Merlic (F,Sp)

136. Organic Structural Methods. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisites: courses 132A, 132B/132BL, and 132C/132CL, or equivalent, with grades of C- or better, or consent of instructor. Laboratory course in organic structure determination by chemical and spectroscopic methods; microtechniques.
Mr. Myles (Sp)

C143A. Structure and Mechanism in Organic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 110B, 113A, and 132C/132CL (may be taken concurrently), or equivalent, with grades of C- or better, or consent of instructor. Mechanisms of organic reactions. Acidity and acid catalysis; linear free energy relationships; isotope effects. Molecular orbital theory; photochemistry; pericyclic reactions. May be concurrently scheduled with course C243A.
Mr. Rubin (F)

C143B. Mechanism and Structure in Organic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course C143A with a grade of C- or better or consent of instructor. Mechanisms of organic reactions; structure and detection of reactive intermediates. May be concurrently scheduled with course C243B.
Mr. Garcia-Garibay (W)

144. Practical and Theoretical Introductory Organic Synthesis. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisites: courses 132C/132CL or equivalent. Lectures on modern synthetic reactions and processes, with emphasis on stereospecific methods for carbon-carbon bond formation. Laboratory methods of synthetic organic chemistry, including reaction techniques, synthesis of natural products, and molecules of theoretical interest.
Mr. Merlic (F)

153A. Biochemistry: Introduction to Structure, Enzymes, and Metabolism. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour; tutorial, one hour. Prerequisite: course 132B or 132BH with a grade of C- or better. Structure of proteins, carbohydrates, and lipids; enzyme catalysis and principles of metabolism, including glycolysis, citric acid cycle, and oxidative phosphorylation.
Mr. Gober, Ms. Merchant, Mr. Weiss (F,W,Sp)

153B. Biochemistry: DNA, RNA, and Protein Synthesis. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour; tutorial, one hour. Prerequisite: course 153A. Nucleotide metabolism; DNA replication; DNA repair; transcription machinery; regulation of transcription; RNA structure and processing; protein synthesis and processing.
Mr. Courey, Ms. Feigon, Mr. Gralla (F,W)

153BH. Biochemistry: DNA, RNA, and Protein Synthesis (Honors). Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course 153A. Honors course parallel to course 153B.
Mr. Courey (W)

153C. Biochemistry: Biosynthetic and Energy Metabolism and Its Regulation. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 153A or consent of instructor. Metabolism of carbohydrates, fatty acids, amino acids, and lipids; photosynthetic metabolism and assimilation of inorganic nutrients; regulation of these processes.
Mr. Clarke, Mr. West (F,W,Sp)

CM153G. Macromolecular Structure (6 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry CM153G.) Lecture, five hours. Prerequisites: courses 110A, 153A, 153B, 153C, 156, or equivalent. Chemical and physical properties of proteins and nucleic acids. Structure, cloning, and analysis of DNA; biosynthesis and processing of RNA; biosynthesis, purification, structure, and analysis of proteins; correlation of structure and biological properties. Concurrently scheduled with course CM253.
Mr. Eisenberg, Mr. Glitz (F)

153L. Biochemical Methods I (2 units). (Formerly numbered 153AL.) Lecture, one hour; laboratory, four hours. Prerequisites: courses 132B or 132BH, 132BL, 153A (may be taken concurrently). Integrated term-long project involving purification of an enzyme from meat obtained at local butcher, followed by characterization of purified enzyme, with emphasis on enzyme kinetics. Mr. Martinson (F,W,Sp)

154. Biochemical Methods II. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisites: courses 153A, 153B, and 153L, or consent of instructor. Recommended: course 156. Two to three major laboratory projects using biochemical laboratory techniques to investigate contemporary problems in biochemistry. Topics include transcription activation, molecular basis of DNA-protein interactions, biochemical basis of platelet activation, and initiation of blood clotting cascade. Experiments entail characterizing function of proteins, nucleic acids, and lipids involved in these processes.

Mr. Bowie, Ms. Clarke, Mr. Martinson (F,W,Sp)
CM155. Biological Catalysis. (Formerly numbered C155.) (Same as Biology CM160.) Prerequisites: courses 110A, 153A, 153B, Biology 100A, 100B, or equivalent, consent of instructor. Reaction mechanisms in molecular biology; experimental approaches for study of enzymes, including kinetics, isotopic labeling, stereochemistry, chemical modification, and spectroscopy; design of pharmacologically active agents and artificial enzymes. Drug metabolism and interactions addressed on a mechanistic level. Concurrently scheduled with course CM255.

Mr. Cho, Mr. Fukuto, Mr. Sigman (W)

156. Physical Biochemistry. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 110A, 153A. Biochemical kinetics; solution thermodynamics of biochemical systems; multiple equilibria; hydrodynamics; energy levels, spectroscopy, and bonding; topics from structural, statistical, and electrochemical methods of biochemistry.

Mr. Reister, Mr. Schumaker, Mr. Yeates (F,W,Sp)

CM159A. Mechanisms in Regulation of Transcription I (2 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry CM159A.) Lecture, four hours; outside study, two hours. Prerequisites: courses 153B and 154, or consent of instructor. Not open to graduate students. Mechanisms that control transcription in bacteria. Repression and activation at promoters. Sigma factors and polymerase binding proteins. Signal transduction pathways in transcription. Control of termination. Concurrently scheduled with course CM259A. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Gralla (Sp, first five weeks)

CM159B. Mechanisms in Regulation of Transcription II (2 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry CM159B.) Lecture, four hours; outside study, two hours. Prerequisite: course CM159A. Not open to graduate students. Eukaryotic general transcriptional apparatus; sequence-specific promoter recognition; mechanisms of transcriptional activation and repression, including role of chromatin structure; transcription factors as targets of signal transduction pathways; transcription factors in embryogenesis. Concurrently scheduled with course CM259B. P/NP or letter grading.

Mr. Courey (Sp, second five weeks)

C161A. Plant Biochemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 153C or equivalent or consent of instructor. Introduction to distinctive features of plant biochemistry. Topics include photosynthesis, nitrogen metabolism, plant cell wall metabolism, and secondary metabolism in relation to stress. Concurrently scheduled with course C261A.

Ms. Merchant, Mr. West (F, alternate years)

173. Structural Inorganic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 110A. Recommended: courses 113A or 156, and 132B/132BL. Introductory survey of structure and bonding in inorganic compounds; molecular stereochemistry; donor/acceptor interactions; coordination compounds of transition metals; elements of crystal-field and ligand-field theory.

Mr. Kaesz, Mr. Kaner, Mr. Zink (F,Sp)

174. Inorganic and Metalorganic Laboratory Methods. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisites: courses 132A, 132B/132BL, and 173, or consent of instructor. Synthesis of inorganic compounds, including air-sensitive materials; dry-box, vacuum line, and high-pressure techniques; Schlenk methods; chromatographic and ion exchange separations. Mr. Hawthorne (W)

C175. Inorganic Reaction Mechanisms. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 110A, 110B, 113A, 173, or equivalent. Survey of inorganic reactions; mechanistic principles; electronic structure of metal ions; transition-metal coordination chemistry; inner- and outer-sphere and chelate complexes; substitution, isomerization, and racemization reactions; stereochemistry; oxidation/reduction, free radical, polymerization, and photochemical reactions of inorganic species. May be concurrently scheduled with course C275.

Mr. Hawthorne (F)
C176. Group Theory and Applications to Inorganic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 113A, 173, or equivalent. Group theoretical methods; molecular orbital theory; ligand-field theory; electronic spectroscopy; vibrational spectroscopy. May be concurrently scheduled with course C276A.

Mr. Zink (F)
C181. Polymer Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 110A, 132A, 132B. Synthesis of organic and inorganic macromolecules, thermodynamic and statistical mechanical descriptions of unique properties of polymers, polymer characterization methods, and special topics such as conductive and biomedical polymers and polymeric reagents in synthesis. Concurrently scheduled with course C281.

Ms. Garrell, Mr. Kaner (W, alternate years)

184. Chemical Instrumentation. Lecture/quiz, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisite: course 110A. Theory and practice of instrumental techniques of chemical and structural analysis, including atomic absorption spectroscopy, gas chromatography, mass spectrometry, nuclear magnetic resonance, polarography, X-ray fluorescence, and other modern methods.

Mr. Wasson (Sp)

190. Undergraduate Thesis Research. Prerequisites: two terms of course 199 on related material, consent of undergraduate adviser and research director. Final term of integrated one-year research project. May consist of experimental and/or theoretical research or, in some cases, comprehensive review of a given area. Thesis embodying totality of year's work to be submitted and oral presentation made. Course suggested, but not required, for those seeking departmental honors at graduation.

(F,W,Sp)

196A-196F. Special Courses in Chemistry (1 to 4 units each). Hours to be arranged. Prerequisite: consent of undergraduate adviser (chemistry).

(F,W,Sp)

199A. Directed Individual Studies or Research for Undergraduate Students (2 to 8 units). (Formerly numbered 199A-199ZZ.) Prerequisites: junior standing with at least 3.0 GPA in the major or senior standing or consent of instructor, consent of department chair. To be arranged with faculty member who will direct the research. Additional information on requirements, enrollment petitions, and written proposal deadlines may be obtained from undergraduate office. May be taken for a maximum of eight units. P/NP grading.

(F,W,Sp)

199B. Directed Individual Studies or Research for Undergraduate Students (2 to 4 units). (Formerly numbered 199A-199ZZ.) Prerequisites: eight units of course 199A, junior standing with at least 3.0 GPA in the major or senior standing or consent of instructor, consent of department chair. To be arranged with faculty member who will direct the research. Additional information on requirements, enrollment petitions, and written proposal deadlines may be obtained from undergraduate office. May be taken for a maximum of four units. P/NP or letter grading.

(F,W,Sp)

Graduate Courses

205. Introduction to Chemistry of Biology. Lecture, three hours. Overview of biochemistry, pharmacology, and physiology, with emphasis on chemical interactions at molecular level. Ms. Valentine (Sp)

207. Organometallic Chemistry. Lecture/discussion, three hours. Prerequisite or corequisite: course C243A or consent of instructor. Survey of synthesis, structure, and reactivity (emphasizing a mechanistic approach) of compounds containing carbon bonded to elements selected from main group metals, metalloids, and transition metals, including olefin complexes and metal carbonyls; applications in catalysis and organic synthesis. Mr. Merlic (Sp)

C213B. Physical Chemistry: Molecular Spectroscopy. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 113A. Interaction of radiation with matter, microwave spectroscopy, infrared and Raman spectroscopy, vibrations in polyatomic molecules, electronic spectroscopy, magnetic resonance spectroscopy. Concurrently scheduled with course C113B. Independent study project required of graduate students. Ms. Garrell (W)

C215A-C215B. Quantum Chemistry: Methods. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course 113A, Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A. Recommended: knowledge of differential equations equivalent to Mathematics 135A or Physics 131 and of analytic mechanics equivalent to Physics 105A. Course C215A or Physics 115B is prerequisite to C215B. Students entering course C215A are normally expected to take course C215B the following term. Designed for chemistry students with serious interest in quantum chemistry. Postulates and systematic development of nonrelativistic quantum mechanics; expansion theorems; wells; oscillators; angular momentum; hydrogen atom; matrix techniques; approximation methods; time dependent problems; atoms; spectroscopy; magnetic resonance; chemical bonding. May be concurrently scheduled with courses C115A-C115B. Mr. Heath (F, C215A; W, C215B)

215C. Advanced Quantum Chemistry: Applications. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course C215B, Physics 131, or equivalent. Topics in quantum chemistry selected from molecular structure, collision processes, theory of solids, symmetry and its applications, and theory of electromagnetic radiation. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Felker (Sp)

215D. Molecular Spectra, Diffraction, and Structure. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: course C215B, Physics 131, or equivalent. Selected topics from electronic spectra of atoms and molecules; vibrational, rotational, and Raman spectra; magnetic resonance spectra; X-ray, neutron, and electron diffraction; coherence effects. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Felker (F)

218. Physical Chemistry Student Seminar (2 units). Seminars presented by staff, outside speakers, postdoctoral fellows, and graduate students. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

219A-219Z. Seminars: Research in Physical Chemistry (2 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced study and analysis of current topics in physical chemistry. Discussion of current research and literature in research specialty of faculty member teaching course. S/U grading:

219B. Chemistry and Physics of Surfaces. Mr. Williams

219C. Physical Chemistry of Complex Fluids. Mr. Kivelson, Mr. Knobler

219D. Computer Simulation in Chemistry. (Formerly numbered 220A.) Ms. Carter

219E. Dynamics of Molecule-Molecule and Molecule-Surface Reactions. Mr. Baugh

219F. Environmental Chemistry and Global Cycling. Mr. Baur

219G. Gas Phase Kinetics and Photochemistry. Mr. Bayes

219H. Spectroscopy and Dynamics of Molecules, Clusters, and Biological Systems. Mr. El-Sayed

219I. Spectroscopy of Isolated Molecules, Complexes, and Clusters. Mr. Felker

219J. Chemistry and Biophysics of Interfaces. Ms. Garrell

219K. Statistical Mechanics of Disordered Systems. Mr. Neubauer

219L. Modern Methods for Molecular Reactions and Structure. Mr. Neuhauser

219M. Chemistry of Materials at High Pressures. Mr. Nicol

219N. Cosmochemistry. Mr. Wasson

219O. Chemistry and Physics of Nanostructures. Mr. Heath

219P. Statistical Mechanics of Complex Fluids. Ms. Liu

221A-221Z. Advanced Topics in Physical Chemistry (2 to 4 units each). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Each course encompasses a recognized specialty in physical chemistry, generally taught by a staff member whose research interests embrace that specialty. S/U or letter grading.

C223A-C223B. Classical and Statistical Thermodynamics. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 110B or 156. Recommended: course 113A. Presentation of fundamentals of classical thermodynamics. Principles of statistical thermodynamics: probability, ensembles, partition functions, independent molecules, and the perfect gas. Applications of classical and statistical thermodynamics selected from diatomic and polyatomic gases, solid and fluid states, phase equilibria, electric and magnetic effects, ortho-para hydrogen, chemical equilibria, reaction rates, the imperfect gas, nonelectrolyte and electrolyte solutions, surface phenomena, high polymers, gravitation. May be concurrently scheduled with courses C123A-C123B. Ms. Liu (F, C223A; W, C223B)

223C. Statistical Mechanics. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses C215B, C223B, Physics 131, or equivalent. Fundamentals of statistical mechanics; classical equations of state; Coulomb systems; phase transitions; quantum statistical mechanics; quantum corrections to the equation of state; density matrix; second quantization. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Gelbart (Sp)

225. Chemical Kinetics. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses C215B, C223B. Classical experimental and theoretical approaches to study of rates and mechanisms of chemical reactions. Modern experimental techniques and molecular-level theory of reaction dynamics. Examples of well-studied elementary reactions. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Levine (F)

228. Chemical Physics Seminar (2 units). Seminars presented by staff, outside speakers, postdoctoral fellows, and graduate students. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

229. Introduction to Physical Chemistry Research (2 units). Lecture, 90 minutes. Intended primarily for entering physical chemistry graduate students. S/U grading.

M230B. Structural Molecular Biology. (Same as Biology M230B.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: Physics 6C, Mathematics 3C, consent of instructor. Selected topics from principles of biological structure; structures of globular proteins and RNAs; structures of fibrous proteins, nucleic acids, and polysaccharides; harmonic analysis and Fourier transforms; principles of electron, neutron, and X-ray diffraction; optical and computer filtering; three-dimensional reconstruction. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Eisenberg, Ms. Feigun, Mr. Yeates (W)

M230D. Structural Molecular Biology Laboratory (2 units). (Same as Biology M230D.) Laboratory, 10 hours. Corequisite: course M230B. Methods in structural molecular biology, including experiments utilizing single crystal X-ray diffraction, low angle X-ray diffraction, electron diffraction, optical diffraction, optical filtering, three-dimensional reconstruction from electron micrographs, and model building.

Mr. Eiserling, Mr. Lake (W)

232. Stereochemistry and Conformational Analysis. Lecture/discussion, three hours. Prerequisite or corequisite: course C143A or consent of instructor. Molecular symmetry, chirality, prochirality, stereochemistry in vinyl polymers, atropisomerism, diastereomeric interactions in solution, conformations of acyclic and cyclic molecules. Mr. Jung

M233. Principles, Practices, and Policies in Biotechnology (2 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry M233, Biology M233, Chemical Engineering M233, Microbiology M233, Microbiology and Immunology M233, and Radiological Sciences M233.) Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. Presentation of technologies, regulatory practices, and policies required for product development and review of current opportunities for new technology development. Topics include fermentation processes, pilot and large-scale bioprocess technologies, scaleup strategies, industrial recombinant DNA processes, hybridomas, protein engineering, peptide mimetics and rational drug design, medical and microscopic imaging, and intellectual property issues. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Fox, Ms. Morrison

235A-235Z. Seminars: Research in Organic Chemistry (2 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced study and analysis of current topics in organic chemistry. Discussion of current research and literature in research specialty of faculty member teaching course. S/U grading:

235A. Synthesis of Natural Products and Biopolymers. Mr. Armstrong

235B. Design, Preparation, and Characterization of New Organic Materials. Mr. Chapman

235C. Supramolecular Chemistry. Mr. Diederich

235D. Modern Photochemistry and Biooxidants. Mr. Foote

235E. Theoretical and Physical Organic Chemistry. Mr. Houk

235F. Synthetic Methods and Synthesis of Natural Products. Mr. Jung

235G. Organometallic Chemistry and Organic Synthesis. Mr. Merlic

235H. Reaction Mechanisms in Molecular Biology. Mr. Sigman

235I. Fullerene Chemistry and Materials Science. Mr. Rubin

235J. Organic and Bioorganic Chemistry. Mr. Myles

235K. Organic Chemistry in Organized and Restricted Media. Mr. Garcia-Garibay

236. Spectroscopic Methods of Organic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite or corequisite: course C243A or consent of instructor. Problem solving using proton and carbon 13 nuclear magnetic resonance, infrared spectroscopy, and mass spectrometry; new techniques in NMR, IR, and MS, with emphasis on Fourier transform NMR. Mr. Foote (W)

241A-241Z. Special Topics in Organic Chemistry (2 to 4 units each). Prerequisite or corequisite: course C243A or equivalent or consent of instructor. Each course encompasses a recognized specialty in organic chemistry, generally taught by a staff member whose research interests embrace that specialty.

242. Organic Photochemistry. Lecture/discussion, three hours. Prerequisite or corequisite: course C243A or consent of instructor. Interactions of light with organic molecules; mechanistic and preparative photochemistry.

C243A. Organic Chemistry: Structure and Mechanisms. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 110B, 113A, and 132C/132CL (may be taken concurrently), or equivalent, with grades of C- or better, or consent of instructor. Mechanisms of organic reactions. Acidity and acid catalysis; linear free energy relationships; isotope effects. Molecular orbital theory; photochemistry; pericyclic reactions. May be concurrently scheduled with course C143A. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Rubin (F)

C243B. Organic Chemistry: Mechanism and Structure. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course C243A or consent of instructor. Mechanisms of organic reactions; structure and detection of reactive intermediates. May be concurrently scheduled with course C143B. Mr. Garcia-Garibay (W)

244A. Organic Synthesis: Methodology and Stereochemistry. Modern synthetic reactions and transformations involving organic substrates. Special emphasis on reagents useful in asymmetric induction and stereoselective synthesis of structurally complex target molecules. Mr. Jung (F)

244B. Strategy and Design in Organic Synthesis. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite or corequisite: course C243A or consent of instructor. Theory behind the planning of syntheses of complex molecules from simpler ones. Organic reactions and their use in the synthetic process. Reasoning and art involved in organic synthesis. Mr. Myles (W)

245. Applications of Electronic Theory in Organic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite or corequisite: course C243A or consent of instructor. Review of molecular orbital theory; introduction to alternative theoretical methods; aromaticity and homoaromaticity; Hückel and Möbius conjugation; Woodward/Hoffmann theory of concerted pericyclic reactions; through-bond and through-space interactions; introduction to photoelectron spectroscopy; frontier molecular orbital theory; related special topics. Mr. Houk (Sp)

247. Organic Colloquium (2 units). Seminars in organic chemistry and related areas presented by staff, outside speakers, postdoctoral fellows, and graduate students. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

248. Organic Chemistry Student Seminar (2 units). Seminars presented by staff, outside speakers, postdoctoral fellows, and graduate students. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

249. Problems in Advanced Organic Chemistry (2 units). Problems in organic reaction mechanisms, synthesis, structure determination, stereochemistry, spectroscopy, electronic theory, photochemistry, and organometallic chemistry, with emphasis on current literature. Intended primarily for first- and second-year graduate students as preparation for cumulative examinations. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

250. Topics in Biochemistry and Molecular Biology of Animal Cells. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 132A, 132B/132BL, 132C/132CL, or equivalent, 153A, 153B, 153C, courses in genetics and molecular biology, consent of instructor. Structure and organization of animal cells, cell-cell contact, motility of cell and mobility of cellular components, chromosome structure, interactions between cytoplasm and nucleus, genetic analysis in higher eukaryotic cells, biochemistry of tissue development and organization.

251A-251Z. Advanced Topics in Biochemistry (2 units each). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Each course encompasses a recognized specialty in biochemistry, generally taught by a staff member whose research interests embrace that specialty.

CM253. Macromolecular Structure (6 units). (Formerly numbered M253.) (Same as Biological Chemistry CM253.) Lecture, five hours. Prerequisites: courses 110A, 153A, 153B, 153C, 156, or equivalent. Chemical and physical properties of proteins and nucleic acids. Structure, cloning, and analysis of DNA; biosynthesis and processing of RNA; biosynthesis, purification, structure, and analysis of proteins; correlation of structure and biological properties. Concurrently scheduled with course CM153G. Mr. Dickerson, Mr. Eisenberg, Mr. Reisler (F)

254. Advanced Biochemical Methods. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, eight hours. Prerequisite: course 156 or consent of instructor. Recommended: courses 153B, 153C. Theoretical and practical basis of metabolic, chromatographic, kinetic, electrophoretic, ultracentrifugal, isotopic, and other techniques as applied to biochemical systems.

CM255. Biological Catalysis. (Formerly numbered M255.) (Same as Biological Chemistry M255, Biology CM252, and Pharmacology M255.) Prerequisites: courses 110A, 153A, 153B, Biology 100A, 100B, or equivalent, consent of instructor. Reaction mechanisms in molecular biology; experimental approaches for study of enzymes, including kinetics, isotopic labeling, stereochemistry, chemical modification, and spectroscopy; design of pharmacologically active agents and artificial enzymes. Drug metabolism and interactions addressed on a mechanistic level. Concurrently scheduled with course CM155. Graduate students required to write research paper and present oral report on it.

Mr. Cho, Mr. Fukuto, Mr. Sigman (W)

256A-256Z. Seminars: Research in Biochemistry (2 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced study and analysis of current topics in biochemistry. Discussion of current research and literature in research specialty of faculty member teaching course. S/U grading:

256A. Biochemistry of Plasma Proteins.

Mr. Schumaker

256B. Biochemistry of Protein Function.

Mr. Clarke

256C. Biochemistry and Molecular Genetics of Fungi.

Mr. Weiss

256D. Transcriptional Control Mechanisms in Drosophila Embryogenesis.

Mr. Courey

256E. Secondary Metabolites in Higher Plants: Biosynthesis, Regulation, and Physiological Functions.

Mr. West

256F. Current Topics in Prokaryotic Development.

Mr. Gober

256G. Nucleic Acid Structure Determination by NMR.

Ms. Feigon

256H. Basic Mechanisms of Promoter Activation.

Mr. Gralla

256J. Contractile Proteins in Muscle Contraction and Cell Motility.

Mr. Reisler

256K. Biochemistry and Molecular Biology of Chlamydomonas.

Ms. Merchant

256L. Literature of Structural Biology.

Mr. Dickerson, Mr. Eisenberg, Mr. Yeates

256M. Mechanism and Regulation of Transcription Termination in Eukaryotic Organisms.

Mr. Martinson

256N. Advanced Topics in Structural Biology.

Mr. Dickerson, Mr. Eisenberg, Mr. Yeates

256O. Membrane Biophysics.

Mr. Hubbell

256P. Analysis of Protein Structure.

Mr. Bowie

256Q. Biochemistry and Function of Ubiquitin in Yeast and Higher Eukaryotes.

Ms. Clarke

M257. Physical Chemistry of Biological Macromolecules (2 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry M257.) Prerequisites: courses 110A and 153A, or consent of instructor. Theory of hydrodynamic, thermodynamic, and optical techniques used to study structure and function of biological macromolecules.

258. Biochemistry Student Seminar (2 units). Seminars presented by graduate students on topics of current biochemical interest. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

CM259A. Mechanisms in Regulation of Transcription I (2 units). (Formerly numbered 259.) (Same as Biological Chemistry CM259A.) Lecture, four hours; outside study, two hours. Prerequisite: course CM253 or M267 or consent of instructor. Mechanisms that control transcription in bacteria. Repression and activation at promoters. Sigma factors and polymerase binding proteins. Signal transduction pathways in transcription. Control of termination. Concurrently scheduled with course CM159A. In Progress grading (credit to be given only on completion of course CM259B).

Mr. Gralla (Sp, first five weeks)

CM259B. Mechanisms in Regulation of Transcription II (2 units). (Formerly numbered 259.) (Same as Biological Chemistry CM259B.) Lecture, four hours; outside study, two hours. Prerequisite: course CM259A. Eukaryotic general transcriptional apparatus; sequence-specific promoter recognition; mechanisms of transcriptional activation and repression, including role of chromatin structure; transcription factors as targets of signal transduction pathways; transcription factors in embryogenesis. Concurrently scheduled with course CM159B.

Mr. Courey (Sp, second five weeks)

C261A. Plant Biochemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 153C or equivalent or consent of instructor. Introduction to distinctive features of plant biochemistry. Topics include photosynthesis, nitrogen metabolism, plant cell wall metabolism, and secondary metabolism in relation to stress. Concurrently scheduled with course C161A.

Ms. Merchant, Mr. West (F, alternate years)

262. Biological Energy Transductions. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 153B and 153C, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Molecular basis of energy-transducing processes, including oxidative and photosynthetic phosphorylation, other energy-linked oxidative functions, membrane active transport, muscle contraction, and special sensory functions.

M263. Metabolism and Its Regulation. (Same as Biological Chemistry M263.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 110A, one course from 153B, 153C, 156, or Biological Chemistry 201A-201B, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Thermodynamic and kinetic aspects of metabolism; regulatory properties of enzymes; metabolic regulation; consideration of comparative aspects of metabolism in relation to physiological function.

M264A-M264B-M264C. Molecular Basis of Atherosclerosis: Selected Topics (2 units each). (Same as Biological Chemistry M264A-M264B-M264C.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Biochemistry, morphology, and physiology of atherosclerosis. Emphasis on chemistry of lipoproteins and role of plasma lipoproteins in regulation of tissue lipid metabolism and development of atherosclerosis. Each course may be taken independently for credit.

Mr. Schumaker (F, M264A; W, M264B; Sp, M264C)

266. Seminar: Techniques for Study of Gene Regulation (2 units). Prerequisites: courses CM259A and CM259B, or consent of instructor. Seminar to discuss specific experimental approaches being taken in study of gene regulation. Emphasis on specific biochemical techniques being used to study regulatory protein-DNA interactions in diverse biological model systems.

M267. Macromolecular Metabolism and Subcellular Organization (6 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry CM267 and Biology CM223.) Lecture, five hours. Prerequisites: courses 153A, 153B, 153C, consent of instructor. Recommended: course CM153G. Cell cycle; DNA replication and repair; structure and properties of cellular organelles; regulation of cell division; cell transformation; normal and aberrant expression of oncogenes; molecular aspects of development.

Mr. Martinson, Mr. McEntee (W)

268. Biochemistry Research Seminar (2 units). Seminars presented by staff, outside speakers, postdoctoral fellows, and graduate students on topics of current biochemical research interest. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

271A-271Z. Advanced Topics in Inorganic Chemistry (2 to 4 units each). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Each course encompasses a recognized specialty in inorganic chemistry, generally taught by a staff member whose research interests embrace that specialty.

272A-272Z. Seminars: Research in Inorganic Chemistry (2 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced study and analysis of current topics in inorganic chemistry. Discussion of current research and literature in research specialty of faculty member teaching course. S/U grading:

272A. Chemistry of Materials.

Mr. Kaner

272B. Metalorganic, Inorganic Biometalorganic Chemistry.

Mr. Hawthorne

272C. Inorganic Spectroscopy.

Mr. Zink

272D. Bioinorganic Chemistry and Biology of Transition Metals and Oxygen.

Ms. Valentine

272E. Organometallic Synthesis and Chemical Vapor Deposition.

Mr. Kaesz

272F. Porphyrin-Based Lattice Clathrates.

Mr. Strouse

272G. Issues in Chemical Education.

Ms. Russell

C275. Inorganic Chemistry: Reaction Mechanisms. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 110A, 110B, 113A, 173, or equivalent. Survey of inorganic reactions; mechanistic principles; electronic structure of metal ions; transition-metal coordination chemistry; inner- and outer-sphere and chelate complexes; substitution, isomerization, and racemization reactions; stereochemistry; oxidation/reduction, free radical, polymerization, and photochemical reactions of inorganic species. May be concurrently scheduled with course C175.

Mr. Hawthorne (F)

C276A. Inorganic Chemistry: Group Theory and Spectroscopy. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 113A, 173, or equivalent. Group theoretical methods; molecular orbital theory; ligand-field theory; electronic spectroscopy; vibrational spectroscopy. May be concurrently scheduled with course C176. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Zink (F)

276B. Physical Methods for the Characterization of Inorganic Compounds. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course C276A or consent of instructor. Applications of spectroscopic techniques, including IR, Raman, visible, UV, NMR, ESR, and NQR, to elucidation of structure and bonding in inorganic and organometallic compounds.

(Sp)

277. Crystal Structure Analysis. Lecture, three hours. Theory and practice of modern crystallography, with emphasis on practical experience in structure determination. Topics include crystallographic symmetry, scattering theory, data collection, Fourier analysis, heavy atom techniques, direct methods, isomorphous replacement, crystallographic refinement, error analysis, and common pitfalls. S/U or letter grading.

278. Inorganic Chemistry Student Seminar (2 units). Seminars presented by staff, outside speakers, postdoctoral fellows, and graduate students. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

279. Bioinorganic Chemistry. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 110A and either 156 or 173. Role of metal ions in biology; introduction to metalloenzymes and metalloproteins; metal ion interactions with nucleic acids; metal ion metabolism.

Ms. Valentine (W)

280. Solid-State Chemistry. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 173 or equivalent. Survey of important materials, their synthesis, and characterization as single crystals, powders, or polymers. Chemical, optical, and magnetic properties and their relationship to band theory.

Mr. Kaner

C281. Polymer Chemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 110A, 132A, 132B. Synthesis of organic and inorganic macromolecules, thermodynamic and statistical mechanical descriptions of unique properties of polymers, polymer characterization methods, and special topics such as conductive and biomedical polymers and polymeric reagents in synthesis. Concurrently scheduled with course C181.

Ms. Garrell, Mr. Kaner (W, alternate years)

M298. Seminar: Current Topics in Molecular Biology (2 units). (Same as Biological Chemistry M298, Biology M298, Microbiology M298, Microbiology and Immunology M298, and Molecular Biology M298.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor and graduate adviser of interdepartmental Molecular Biology Ph.D. Program. Each student conducts or participates in discussions on assigned topics. May be repeated for credit.

(F,W,Sp)

375. Teaching Apprentice Practicum (1 to 4 units). Prerequisite: apprentice personnel employment as a teaching assistant, associate, or fellow. Teaching apprenticeship under active guidance and supervision of a regular faculty member responsible for curriculum and instruction at the University. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

400. Safety in Chemical and Biochemical Research (2 units). Survey of safe laboratory practices for experimental research in organic, inorganic, and physical chemistry and biochemistry. Topics include laser safety, cryogenic hazards, high- and low-pressure experimentation, gas and carcinogen handling, chemical spills, fire extinguishing, and chemical disposal. S/U grading. Mr. Merlic (Sp)

495. Teaching College Chemistry (2 units). Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours; 20 hours training during week prior to Fall Quarter. Course for teaching assistants designed to deal with problems and techniques of teaching college chemistry. S/U grading. (F)

596. Directed Individual Study or Research (2 to 16 units). To be arranged with faculty member who will direct the study or research. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

597. Preparation for M.S. Comprehensive Examination or Ph.D. Qualifying Examinations (2 to 4 units). Prerequisite: consent of graduate adviser (chemistry). S/U grading.

598. Research for and Preparation of M.S. Thesis (2 to 16 units). Each faculty member supervises research of M.S. students and holds research group meetings, seminars, and discussions with the students.

599. Research for and Preparation of Ph.D. Dissertation (2 to 16 units). Each faculty member supervises research of Ph.D. students and holds research group meetings, seminars, and discussions with the students.

Scope and Objectives

The undergraduate major is designed for students who are interested in solid-state chemistry, the preparation of engineering materials such as semiconductors, glasses, ceramics, metals, and polymers, the reactivity of such materials in different environments, and how chemical compositions affect properties. It provides appropriate preparation for graduate studies in many fields emphasizing interdisciplinary research involving chemistry, engineering, and applied science.

Bachelor of Science Degree

Preparation for the Major

Required: Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A or 11AH, 11B or 11BH, 11BL, 11C or 11CH, 11CL, English 3, Materials Science and Engineering 14, Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, Physics 8A, 8B or 8BH, 8C or 8CH, 8CL, 8D or 8DH, 8DL, Program in Computing 10A.

The Major

Required: Chemistry and Biochemistry 110A, 110B, 113A, C113B or C115A-C115B, 114, 132A, 173, eight units from C123A, C123B, 132B or 132BH, 132BL, 132C or 132CH, 132CL, 174, C175, C176; Materials Science and Engineering 120, 131L or 161L, 131, 150, 160, eight units from 110, 111, 121, 122, 130, 132, 143A, 147B, 162.

Scope and Objectives

Today there is a demand for individuals with extensive knowledge of the Chicano community. Opportunities exist in both the public and private sector that—all for men and women academically prepared and aware of the history, culture, and current problems facing Chicano/Latino communities. The Chicana and Chicano studies major provides students with the language and cross-cultural studies background that will enhance their qualifications for positions in schools, governmental organizations, and private enterprise.

The program, coordinated by an interdepartmental committee, is interdisciplinary and leads to the Bachelor of Arts degree.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

The B.A. program in Chicana and Chicano Studies is designed to provide systematic instruction for students who wish concentrated study of the Chicana/Chicano experience. Viewed as developmental, the program subjects the Chicana/Chicano reality to critical investigation, including social, economic, educational, historical, and political analysis. The major is recommended for students preparing for graduate study as well as for public service careers.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Chicana and Chicano Studies 10A, 10B, Spanish 5 or equivalent.

The Major

Required: A total of 15 upper division courses, including Chicana and Chicano Studies 101, nine courses from the approved list of Chicana and Chicano studies courses (available in the program office each term), one term of field studies, and three related study courses and one advanced seminar from the approved list of courses or by petition to the program director or undergraduate counselor. Related study includes courses with some Chicana/Chicano content, such as those on Mexico, Latin America, and the experiences of people of color in the U.S.

Recommended: English 100W; Library and Information Science 111C; the introductory course in two of the following: anthropology, economics, history, political science, sociology; one or more courses in Chicana/Chicano history, literature, feminism, social science.

Optional Multidisciplinary Senior Thesis — Prerequisite: senior standing. Chicana and Chicano studies majors have the option during their senior year to enroll in two 199 courses in their major concentration area, with the intention of producing a Chicana and Chicano studies undergraduate thesis related to the major concentration. Enrollment in the two 199 courses is with the advice and consent of a faculty member. The first term includes thesis conceptualization and formulation, along with preliminary data collection for the thesis. The second term entails completion of the data collection, analysis of the data, and termination of the thesis.

Course Limitations — No more than two 199 courses may be applied toward the major concentration; 199 courses applied toward the multidisciplinary senior thesis option may not also be applied toward the major concentration area. Registration in 199 courses must be approved in writing by the program director. No more than two CED courses may be applied toward the major concentration.

Chicana and Chicano Studies Specialization

The specialization complements study in a traditional field. Students participating in this program are required to complete both a departmental major and the Chicana and Chicano studies specialization. You must take Chicana and Chicano Studies 10A, 10B, 101, and four courses from the approved list of Chicana and Chicano studies courses (available in the program office each term).

Lower Division Courses

10A. Introduction to Chicano Life and Culture. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enrollment priority to Chicana and Chicano studies majors. Introduction to central concepts and historical experiences which define Chicano culture, from exploring indigenous roots to examining current trends. Emphasis on diversity of the Chicano experience, gender as a central cultural variable, and particular socioeconomic conditions which have shaped cultural response.

10B. Chicanos in American Society. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Enrollment priority to Chicana and Chicano studies majors. Examination of conditions of Chicanos in the U.S., with particular attention to socioeconomic aspects of their experience. Additional emphasis on examination of role of women in both a family context and the workplace.

Ms. Ortiz (W)

Upper Division Courses

101. Theoretical Concepts in Chicana and Chicano Studies. Lecture, three hours. Enrollment priority to Chicana and Chicano studies majors and students in the specialization. Examination of following theoretical concepts and practical concerns: self-definition, relationship between educational institutions and the Chicana/Chicano community, nature of critical Chicana/Chicano specific research, basic issues in Chicana/Chicano culture, and current problems facing the Chicano/Latino community.

M102. The Mexican American and the Schools. (Same as Education M102.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Review of research and teaching strategies. Analysis of school policies and practices and their effect on development of Mexican American and Chicano youth and communities. Mr. Solorzano

M103C. Origins and Evolution of Chicano Theater. (Same as Theater M103C.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Exploration of development of Chicano theater from its beginning in legends and rituals of ancient Mexico to work of Luis Valdez (late 1960s). Ms. Villareal

M103D. Contemporary Chicano Theater. (Same as Theater M103D.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Study of recent trends in Chicano theater as reflected in works of contemporary Chicano dramatists and theater artists.

Ms. Villarreal

M105. The Chicano Experience in Literature. (Same as English M105.) Prerequisite: satisfaction of Subject A requirement. Study of literature in English by and about Chicanos. Survey of depiction of the Chicano experience in American literature generally, with emphasis on development of Chicano literature itself, its cultural backgrounds, and distinctive uses of language. Mr. Paredes, Ms. Saldívar-Hull

M110. Chicana Feminism. (Same as Women's Studies M132A.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: Women's Studies 10 or consent of instructor. Examination of theories and practices of women who identify as "Chicana feminist." Analysis of writings of Chicanas who do not identify as feminist but whose practices attend to gender inequities faced by Chicanas both within the Chicana/Chicano community and the dominant society. Attention to Anglo-European and Third World women. Ms. Saldívar-Hull

120. Immigration and the Chicano Community. Lecture, three hours. Discussion on relationship between international immigration and development of the Chicana/Chicano community. Examination of U.S. immigration policy and relationship between Mexican-origin population and other Latin American immigrants. Mr. Hinojosa-Ojeda (W)

125. U.S./Mexico Relations. Lecture, three hours. Examination of complex dynamics in relationship between Mexico and the U.S., using a political economy approach to study of asymmetrical integration between advanced industrial economies and developing countries. Mr. Hinojosa-Ojeda (Sp)

M145. Introduction to Chicano Literature. (Same as Spanish M145.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: Spanish 25 or 26. Recommended: Spanish 136B. Introduction to texts representative of the Chicano literary heritage. Sampling of genres, as well as historical and geographical settings and points of view characteristic of work written by Chicanos during the 20th century. Most required reading is in Spanish. Bilingual and English works are included and discussed. Reading and analysis of a number of important scholarly and critical statements pertaining to characteristics and development of the Chicano literary corpus. Mr. Calderón

M147A. Ethnic Politics: Chicano/Latino Politics. (Formerly numbered M147.) (Same as Political Science M144A.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight or nine hours. Prerequisites: Political Science 40, and one 140-level political science course or one upper division course on race or ethnicity from history, psychology, or sociology, or consent of instructor. Introduction to political economy of racial domination in the U.S., concentrating on study of Mexican origin communities. Emphasis on identifying and explaining the historically changing relationship between class, race, and power by studying the interaction between state policies and practices, class and racial stratification systems, and cultural codes and modes of ideological discourse in each historical period. Mr. Rocco

M154. Contemporary Issues among Chicanas. (Same as Women's Studies M132B.) Prerequisite: Women's Studies 10 or consent of instructor. Overview of conditions facing Chicanas in the U.S., including issues on family, immigration, reproduction, employment conditions. Comparative analysis with other Latinas.

M155. Latinos in the U.S. (Same as Sociology M155.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: Sociology 1 and junior standing, or consent of instructor. Exploration of history and social conditions of Latinos in Los Angeles as well as nationally, with particular emphasis on their location in the larger social structure and on comparisons with other minority groups. Topics include migration, family, education, and work issues. P/NP or letter grading.

M159A. History of the Chicano Peoples. (Same as History M159A.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours. Survey lecture course on historical development of the Mexican (Chicano) community and people of Mexican descent (Indio-Mestizo-Mulato) north of the Rio through the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries, with special focus on labor and politics. Provides integrated understanding of change over time in the Mexican community by inquiry into major formative historical forces affecting the community. Social structure, economy, labor, culture, political organization, conflict, and international relations. Emphasis on social forces, class analysis, social, economic, and labor conflict, ideas, domination, and resistance. Developments related to historical events of significance occurring both in the U.S. and Mexico. Lectures, special presentations, reading assignments, written examinations, library and field research, and submission of a paper. Mr. Gómez-Quiriones

M159B. History of the Chicano Peoples. (Same as History M159B.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours. Survey lecture course on historical development of the Mexican (Chicano) community and people of Mexican descent in the U.S. through the 20th century, with special focus on labor and politics. Provides integrated understanding of change over time in the Mexican community by inquiry into major formative historical and policy issues affecting the community. Within a framework of domination and resistance, discussion deals with social structure, economy, labor, culture, political organization, conflict, and ideology. Developments related to historical events of significance occurring both in the U.S. and Mexico. Lectures, special presentations, reading assignments, written examinations, library and/or field research, and submission of a paper. Mr. Gómez-Quiriones

M172T. Ethnohistory of Hispanic Cultures in the U.S. Southwest. (Same as Anthropology M172T.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: Anthropology 9 or consent of instructor. Ethnography of social and cultural adaptations of Hispanic peoples in the U.S. Southwest: their respective social organization, economic and political institutions, sacred and secular belief systems, and expressive cultures. P/NP (undergraduates), S/U (graduates), or letter grading.

197A-197Z. Special Topics in Chicana and Chicano Studies. Lecture, three hours. Some sections may require prior coursework or consent of instructor. Lecture or seminar format on selected topics in Chicana and Chicano studies. May be repeated for credit.

199. Independent Studies (2 to 4 units). Prerequisites: courses 10A, 10B, upper division standing, consent of interdepartmental Chicana and Chicano Studies Program faculty. Intensive directed research program. May be repeated for a maximum of eight units.

Scope and Objectives

The general objective of the Classics Department is to provide a thorough knowledge of the Greek and Roman languages and culture. To this end, it offers elementary and advanced courses in the languages, the reading and analysis of Greek and Roman authors, the history of Greek and Roman literature, classical art, archaeology, mythology, philosophy, and religion. The department is also strong in three fields which are not commonly taught in classics departments, namely classical linguistics, medieval Latin, and Byzantine studies.

Bachelor of Arts degrees are offered in Classical Civilization, in Greek, in Latin, and in Greek and Latin. Other undergraduate degrees include the B.A. in English/Greek and in English/Latin, offered jointly with the English Department. Students considering a major in the department should consult the adviser as soon as possible in their University career, but in no case later than the point at which they are about to take upper division courses. Graduate degrees include the Master of Arts in Classics (Greek and Latin), Greek, and Latin, and the Ph.D. in Classics.

Bachelor of Arts in Classical Civilization

The civilizations of ancient Greece and Rome have made important contributions to the political, social, artistic, and intellectual development of the Western world. The purpose of the classical civilization major is to provide a formal and balanced introduction to the historical and cultural experiences of the ancient Greeks and Romans. The program of study is structured, yet not rigid. Lower division survey courses and requirements in elementary language study, ancient history, and classical art establish an essential background of knowledge, while electives encourage individual and specialized interests. The program offers a broad range of courses in the fields of language, literature, history, mythology, religion, philosophy, art, and archaeology. The major serves as excellent and rewarding preparation for a professional career in medicine, law, business, journalism, communications, or the arts.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Classics 10, 20, and either 40 or 41.

The Major

Required: (1) Greek 3 or Latin 3; (2) two courses in Greek or Roman history (History 115B, 115C, 116A, 116B, 117A, 117B, 118); (3) two courses in classical art or archaeology (Classics M153A through M153K); (4) seven upper division courses in the department (courses in related fields not offered by the department may be substituted by petition and with approval of the undergraduate adviser) — no more than three may be selected from Greek 100 through 133 or Latin 100 through 133, and Classics 195 may be applied as only one course toward the major; (5) one senior seminar (Classics 197); with approval of the undergraduate adviser, a senior paper (Classics 199) may be substituted for the senior seminar.

Bachelor of Arts in Greek

Preparation for the Major

Required: Greek 1, 2, 3 and Latin 1, 2, 3, or equivalent.

The Major

Required: (1) Nine upper division courses in Greek, including course 110; (2) one upper division course in Latin; (3) Classics 143 and either 140 or 141; (4) two courses in Greek or Roman history (History 115B-115C, 116A-116B, 117A-117B); (5) two additional courses in one or two of the related areas: classical archaeology (Classics M153A through M153K), classical linguistics (Classics 180), classical mythology (Classics 161, 162, 168), Greek and Roman religion (Classics 166A, 166B), ancient philosophy (Classics 145A, Philosophy 101A, 101B, 102, Greek 121, 122, 123, 124), Byzantine civilization (Classics M170), medieval Latin literature (Latin 131, 133). Total courses required: 16.

Bachelor of Arts in Greek and Latin

Preparation for the Major

Required: Greek 1, 2, 3 and Latin 1, 2, 3, or equivalent.

The Major

Required: (1) Twelve upper division courses, six in Greek and six in Latin, including Greek 110 and Latin 110A; (2) one course from Classics 140, 141, 142, 143; (3) one course in Greek or Roman history (History 115B, 115C, 116A, 116B, 117A, 117B); (4) one additional course in two of the related areas: classical archaeology (Classics M153A through M153K), classical linguistics (Classics 180), classical mythology (Classics 161, 162, 168), Greek and Roman religion (Classics 166A, 166B), ancient philosophy (Classics 145A, Philosophy 101A, 101B, 102, Greek 121, 122, 123, 124), Byzantine civilization (Classics M170), medieval Latin literature (Latin 131, 133). Total courses required: 16.

Bachelor of Arts in Latin

Preparation for the Major

Required: Greek 1, 2, 3 and Latin 1, 2, 3, or equivalent.

The Major

Required: (1) Nine upper division courses in Latin, including course 110A; (2) one upper division course in Greek; (3) Classics 141 and either 142 or 143; (4) two courses in Greek or Roman history (History 115B-115C, 116A-116B, 117A-117B); (5) two additional courses in one or two of the related areas: classical archaeology (Classics M153A through M153K), classical linguistics (Classics 180), classical mythology (Classics 161, 162, 168), Greek and Roman religion (Classics 166A, 166B), ancient philosophy (Classics 145A, Philosophy 101A, 101B, 102, Greek 121, 122, 123, 124), Byzantine civilization (Classics M170), medieval Latin literature (Latin 131, 133). Total courses required: 16.

Note: Students in the Greek, Latin, and Greek and Latin majors are permitted to take Greek 200A-200B-200C and Latin 200A-200B-200C. Two of these courses may replace one course in requirement 3 of the Greek major and Latin major and requirement 2 of the Greek and Latin major, as well as two courses in requirement 1 of all three majors, thereby reducing the total number of required courses by one.

Bachelor of Arts in English/Greek

Preparation for the Major

Required: English 4, 10A, 10B, 10C, Greek 1, 2, 3.

The Major

Required: (1) Seven courses from English 140A through 190 selected in consultation with an adviser in the Department of English; (2) seven upper division or graduate courses in Greek, including courses 100 and either 101A or 101B, selected in consultation with an adviser in the Department of Classics (of these seven courses, at least two must be in poetry and two in prose). Total courses required: 14.

Bachelor of Arts in English/Latin

Preparation for the Major

Required: English 4, 10A, 10B, 10C, Latin 1, 2, 3.

The Major

Required: (1) Seven courses from English 140A through 190 selected in consultation with an adviser in the Department of English; (2) seven upper division or graduate courses in Latin, including courses 105A and 113, selected in consultation with an adviser in the Department of Classics (of these seven courses, at least two must be in poetry and two in prose). Total courses required: 14.

Honors Program

The honors program is open to students in each of the departmental majors. To qualify for graduation with departmental honors, you must (1) complete all requirements for your major, (2) have a cumulative grade-point average of 3.5 or better in upper division courses in the department and an overall GPA of 3.0 or better, and (3) complete Classics 195 with a grade of A- or better.

To qualify for graduation with departmental highest honors, you must (1) complete all requirements for your major, (2) have a cumulative GPA of 3.85 or better in upper division courses in the department and an overall GPA of 3.65 or better, and (3) complete Classics 195 with a grade of A.

Master of Arts Degrees

Admission

Requirements for admission to the M.A. programs are a UCLA B.A. degree, or the equivalent, with a major in Greek and Latin (for the Classics M.A.), Greek (for the Greek M.A.), or Latin (for the Latin M.A.) and a grade-point average of at least 3.0 in the major; a statement of purpose; three letters of recommendation, normally from previous instructors in the classics; and the Graduate Record Examination (while there is no minimum required score, the GRE is used as a criterion in uncertain cases, as well as to assess applications for teaching assistantships and other financial assistance from the department). In cases of deficient preparation or doubtful equivalency to a UCLA B.A., the department may grant provisional admission, requiring additional coursework or a written examination. Applicants for the Classics M.A. program who are deficient in Greek (or Latin) may be admitted to the Latin (or Greek) program, then permitted to transfer into the classics program when the deficiencies have been removed. The department uses the same application form as UCLA Graduate Application Processing, which may be obtained from the Department of Classics (7349 Bunche Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1475) or the Graduate Admissions Office.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

The department offers M.A. degrees in Classics (Greek and Latin), Greek, and Latin.

Foreign Language Requirement

In addition to taking courses in Greek and/or Latin, you must demonstrate proficiency in German, French, or Italian during your first year of study, either by passing German 5, French 5, or Italian 5 at UCLA (or an equivalent course) with a minimum grade of C, or by examination. For German and French, the examination is the standard Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) reading examination with a score of 500 or better; for Italian, a written translation examination is administered by the department.

Course Requirements

For the Classics M.A., Classics 287, Greek or Latin 210, and five courses from Greek 200A-200B-200C/Latin 200A-200B-200C are required. For the Greek M.A., Classics 287, Greek 200A-200B-200C, and 210 are required. For the Latin M.A., Classics 287, Latin 200A-200B-200C, and 210 are required. (The Greek and Latin 200A-200B-200C courses test the appropriate sections of the departmental reading lists in a one-hour translation examination.) The remaining courses are to be selected in consultation with the graduate adviser.

No more than two half seminars, each counting as two units, and no more than one 500-series course may be applied toward the M.A. course requirements.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

The department follows the comprehensive examination plan for the M.A. degrees. Before the examination, you are expected to complete the departmental reading lists in Greek authors (for the Greek M.A.) or Latin authors (for the Latin M.A.) or in Greek and Latin authors (for the Classics M.A.). The examination consists of a three-hour written test in Greek and Latin literature (Greek for Greek M.A., Latin for Latin M.A., Greek and Latin for Classics M.A.) in two parts: (1) passages for translation at sight and for generic identification and comparison and (2) an essay question combining periods kept separate in the Greek and Latin 200A-200B-200C courses (for Classics M.A., combining Greek and Latin). It must be taken no later than one term after you fulfill the M.A. course requirements. The examination may be repeated once, in the term following your first attempt; in exceptional cases and with consent of the departmental faculty, more than once. A grade of B+ or better is required for admission into the Ph.D. program.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

A UCLA M.A. degree in Classics, Greek, or Latin, with a comprehensive examination grade of B+ or better, or an equivalent degree from another university is required.

In addition to an M.A. degree the department requires a statement of purpose. Students without a UCLA M.A. must also submit three letters of recommendation, normally from previous instructors in the classics, and the Graduate Record Examination (while there is no minimum required score, the GRE is used as a criterion in uncertain cases, as well as to assess applications for teaching assistantships and other financial assistance from the department). The department uses the same application form as UCLA Graduate Application Processing, which may be obtained from the department or the Graduate Admissions Office.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

The department offers the Ph.D. degree in Classics with major fields in (1) classical literature and philology, (2) classical linguistics, (3) Byzantine Greek, and (4) medieval Latin.

Foreign Language Requirement

New students in the doctoral program will normally have demonstrated proficiency in French, German, or Italian as described in the requirements for the M.A. degree. During the first year of study in the Ph.D. program, you must demonstrate proficiency in either French (Italian may be substituted with consent of the regular departmental faculty) or German, whichever was not used to satisfy the M.A. requirement. If Italian or French was used to satisfy the M.A. requirement, German must be taken.

Greek and Latin Graduate Courses

Most Greek and Latin seminars may be taken as follows: (1) full seminars (four units, letter grading), with a required final paper (or an equivalent workload, such as a final examination, as designated by the instructor) to be presented to the instructor and assessed as part of the final grade or (2) half seminars, with full participation in the course but no required paper (or equivalent as described above). Half seminars carry two units and are normally taken on an S/U grading basis only. Arrangements must be made with the instructor beforehand for S/U or letter grading, and the appropriate petition must be filed with the Registrar's Office.

Course Requirements

Classical Literature and Philology — M.A. degree holders in Greek only or Latin only must take two 200A-200B-200C courses in the other language. In addition, five (or more) 200-series courses are required of all Ph.D. students, including Greek 210 and Latin 210 unless taken previously. Required courses (except for Greek 210 and Latin 210) are in addition to those taken for the M.A.

Classical Linguistics — M.A. degree holders in Greek only or Latin only must complete the Classics M.A. course requirements by taking two 200A-200B-200C courses in the other language. A minimum of five full seminars is required: Classics 180 (or an equivalent undergraduate or graduate course taken at UCLA or elsewhere), 240, Greek 242, 243, Latin 242, and either Classics 230A-230B or one term of Vedic (Indic M222A, presupposing three terms of upper division classical Sanskrit).

Byzantine Greek — M.A. degree holders in Greek only or Latin only must complete the Classics M.A. course requirements by taking courses 200A-200B-200C in the other language. A minimum of five full seminars is required: Greek 210, at least two courses from 231A-231B-231C, 240A-240B, 245, History 216A-216B.

Medieval Latin — M.A. degree holders in Greek only or Latin only must complete the Classics M.A. course requirements by taking courses 200A-200B-200C in the other language. A minimum of five full seminars is required: Latin 130 or 120, 131, 133 (or equivalent undergraduate or graduate courses taken at UCLA or elsewhere), 210, at least two courses from 231A-231B, 243 (or History 219A or 219B), Greek 231A or 231B or 231C (or an upper division medieval language course such as French 115A, 115B, 115C, German 122, Italian 113A, 113B, 114A, 114B, 190, Spanish M118A, M118B, 122, 123, or an equivalent undergraduate or graduate course taken at UCLA or elsewhere), History 217.

Qualifying Examinations

Each major field has a separate reading list. All lists include the reading list in Greek and Latin authors required for the M.A. in Classics.

Classical Literature and Philology — (1) Two one and one-half hour translation examinations (one in Greek, one in Latin), which may be taken concurrently or separately, consisting of passages from the Ph.D. reading list and other literature (M.A. degree holders in Greek only or Latin only take an additional two-hour examination in sight translation from the other language), (2) a 15- to 25-page research paper on a field or author of your choice outside your area of specialization (submitted either before or after the comprehensive examination), (3) a written three-hour examination in your area of specialization and prospective dissertation topic.

Classical Linguistics — (1) A written three-hour translation examination in classical Greek or Latin, (2) a written three-hour examination consisting of passages of ancient texts covered in the required course, (3) a two-hour written examination in comparative grammar.

Byzantine Greek — (1) A written three-hour translation examination in classical Greek and (2) a written three-hour examination on Byzantine Greek.

Medieval Latin — (1) A written three-hour translation examination in classical Latin and (2) a written three-hour examination on medieval Latin.

Complete examination details are available in the department. Each qualifying examination may normally be retaken twice. The University Oral Qualifying Examination, administered by the doctoral committee after you complete your last qualifying examination, tests your knowledge of your major field (and possible stipulated areas outside your specialization) and includes discussion of your formal dissertation proposal.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Dissertation/Final Oral Examination

An oral defense of the dissertation, which is written under the supervision of the individual adviser and must contribute significantly to research on the subject, may be required or waived at the discretion of the doctoral committee.

Scope and Objectives

The major in communication studies is an interdisciplinary program leading to a Bachelor of Arts degree. It seeks to provide students with a comprehensive knowledge of the nature of human communication, the symbol systems by which it functions, the environments in which it occurs, its media, and its effects. Employing critical and empirical approaches, the major draws its resources from the social sciences, humanities, and fine arts. Two areas of specialization are offered: the specialization in mass communication centers on formal and institutional communication systems and the macrocosmic social contexts in which they function; the specialization in interpersonal communication centers on face-to-face communicative interaction in the small group environment.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

Students selecting the major in communication studies must complete the required lower division prerequisites and a minimum of 15 upper division courses as set forth below. Enrollment in the major is limited. Admission to the major is by application to the committee in charge. Applications are available during Spring Quarter in the program office.

gy 137A; (2) heterogeneous groups communication — three courses from Anthropology 141, Communication Studies 130, Psychology 137C, M165, 174, 177, 178, either Sociology 156 or 160; (3) electives in mass communication — two courses from Communication Studies 140, 152, 153, 155, 165, 170, 180, 187, either Communication Studies M147 or Sociology M176; (4) general electives — two courses from one of the following groups: (a) media content/criticism/history — Communication Studies 160, 171, Film and Television 106A, 108, 110A, either Communication Studies 175 or Film and Television 116; (b) language theory — Communication Studies M124, 150, Linguistics 170, Philosophy 172, Psychology 122 or 123; (c) social systematics — Communication Studies M144A or M144B or Sociology CM124A or CM124B, Anthropology 133R, 135A, 135B, 142A, 142B, Sociology 134.

Lower Division Courses

10. Introduction to Communication Studies. Introduction to fields of mass communication and interpersonal communication. Study of modes, media, and effects of mass communication, interpersonal processes, and communication theory.

Mr. Cole (F,W,Sp)

88A-88Z. Lower Division Seminars: Special Topics in Communication Studies. (Formerly numbered 97A-97Z.) Seminar, three hours. Variable topics courses; consult Schedule of Classes for topics to be offered in a specific term. P/NP or letter grading. 88A. Mass Communication Theory; 88B. Systems, Institutions, and Policies; 88C. Media Content/Criticism and History; 88D. American Studies; 88E. Language/Interaction Structures; 88F. Social Systematics; 88G. Interpersonal Communication Theory; 88J. Heterogeneous Groups Communication;

88C. Future of Mass Communication. (Formerly numbered 97C.) Limited to freshmen. Current state of mass media in the world and; through analysis of trends, content, and societal forces, speculation on future of the media over next 25 years. Mr. Cole

Upper Division Courses

100. Communication Theory. Prerequisite: course 10 or Linguistics 1 or Sociology 1 or Psychology 10 or consent of instructor. Analysis of fundamental nature of human communication; its physical, linguistic, psychological, and sociological bases. Study of theoretical models explicating the process and constituents of the communicative act.

Mr. Clayman, Ms. French

101. Freedom of Communication. Analysis of legal, political, and philosophical issues entailed in rights of free expression, access to an audience, and access to information. Study of court decisions governing freedom of communication in the U.S.

Mr. Cowan, Mr. Rosenthal (F,Sp)

102. Code of Human Communication. Prerequisite: course 10 or Linguistics 1 or Sociology 1 or Psychology 10 or consent of instructor. Structural analysis and description of human communication codes; development of language; characteristics of the source, channels, and destination in human communication.

Ms. French

115. Dyadic Communication and Interpersonal Relationships. Prerequisite: course 100. Developmental approach to study of communication in dyadic relationships. Analysis of differences in the stages of relationships in terms of communication rules and verbal and nonverbal messages.

Ms. French, Ms. Henley

- M116. Communication and Conflict in Couples and Families. (Same as Psychology M176.) Lecture, 90 minutes; discussion, 90 minutes. Prerequisites: Psychology 10 or 11, 41, and 127, or consent of instructor. Examination of (1) dysfunctional communication and conflict in couples and families and (2) relationship of these processes to individual psychopathology, marital discord, and family disruption (e.g., separation and divorce). Mr. Christensen
- M117. Rhetoric of Rule. (Same as French M143.) Lecture, three hours. Exploration of how and why power is symbolically constructed by comparing Louis XIV's and President Clinton's attempts to manipulate their image in the "media" of their respective cultures. Ms. Melzer
- 120. Principles and Types of Group Communication. Prerequisite: course 100 or consent of instructor. Analysis of purposes, principles, and types of small group communication. Particular emphasis on organization of and participation in problem-solving discussion.
- M124. Psychology of Language and Gender. (Same as Psychology M137J and Women's Studies M137J.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: Psychology 10 or equivalent, junior standing. Examination of current topics at intersection of gender and language. Topics include sex differentiation in language cross-culturally; sex bias in lexicon and usage; sex differences in lexicon, syntax, phonology, and nonverbal behavior; development of sex-differentiated language in children; "women's" and "men's" language in various racial/ethnic/class/sexual preference groups; and conversational interaction. Ms. Henley
- 130. Cultural Factors in Interpersonal Communication. Prerequisite: course 100 or consent of instructor. Study of cultural factors as they affect the quality and processes of interpersonal communication; exercises in participation, analysis, and criticism of interethnic and interracial communications in the small group configuration. Ms. French
- 140. Theory of Persuasive Communication. Prerequisite: course 100 or consent of instructor. Dynamics of communication designed to influence human conduct; analysis of structure of persuasive discourse; integration of theoretical materials from relevant disciplines of humanities and social sciences. Mr. Rosenthal
- 142. Rhetorical Theory. Prerequisite: course 100 or consent of instructor. Survey of major classical and neoclassical treatises on rhetoric. Analysis of theories of Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Quintilian, St. Augustine, Blair, Whately, Campbell, and other leading works in theory of rhetoric.
- M144A-M144B. Conversational Structures I, II. (Same as Sociology CM124A-CM124B.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. P/NP or letter grading. M144A. Introduction to some structures which are employed in organization of conversational interaction, such as turn-taking organization, organization of repair, and some basic sequence structures with limited expansions. M144B. Prerequisite: course M144A. Consideration of some more expanded sequence structures, story structures, topical sequences, and overall structural organization of single conversations. Mr. Schegloff
- M147. Sociology of Mass Communication. (Same as Sociology M176.) Prerequisite: course 100 or consent of instructor. Studies in relationship between mass communication and social organization. Topics include history and organization of major media institutions, social forces that shape production of mass media news and entertainment, selected studies in media content, and effects of media on society. Mr. Clayman
- 150. Analysis of Communication Content. Prerequisite: course 100 or consent of instructor. Study of methodologies for qualitative and quantitative analysis of the content of communications. Ms. French
- 152. Analysis of Communication Effects. Prerequisite: course 100 or consent of instructor. Survey of experimental and field research on effects of communications. Study of source, message, and environmental factors affecting audience response. Ms. Greenfield, Mr. Malamuth
- 153. The Media and Aggression Against Women. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course 152 or consent of instructor. Study of the growing body of literature on relationship between mass media and aggression against women. Consideration of both role of the media as reflecting cultural values and scripts and its potentially powerful role as a socializing agent of the culture. Analysis of research on role of individual differences among members of a culture as mediators of the impact of the media. Mr. Malamuth
- 155. Communication Technology and Public Policy. Prerequisite: course 10. Introduction to modern communication technology and policy, with special attention to current policy issues, institutions which make policy decisions, and social, economic, and technological trends which create policy problems. Modern communication technologies surveyed include cable television, teletext, viewdata, and satellite, microwave cellular, and subcarrier communication. Mr. Cole
- 156. Human/Computer Communication. Prerequisite: completion of the seven preparation for the major courses. Limited to communication studies majors. Survey of behavioral, design, and evaluation issues in human/computer communication. Readings from disciplines of psychology, sociology, computer science, communication, and library and information science. Students perform several on-line assignments in learning to use different technologies. Term paper required. Ms. Borgman
- 160. Political Communication. Prerequisites: courses 100 and 101, or consent of instructor. Study of nature and function of communication in the political sphere; analysis of contemporary and historical communications within established political institutions; state papers; deliberative discourses; electoral campaigns. Mr. Iyengar
- M161. Electoral Politics: Mass Media and Elections. (Same as Political Science M141D.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight or nine hours. Prerequisite: course 160. Assessment of manner in which Americans' political beliefs, choices, and actions are influenced by mass media presentations, particularly during election campaigns. Topics include processes of political attitude formation and change, different types of media "effects," and role of the media in the American political process. Mr. Iyengar
- 165. Agitational Communication. Prerequisites: courses 100 and 101, or consent of instructor. Theory of agitation; agitation as a force for change in existing institutions and policies in a democratic society. Intensive study of selected agitational movements and the technique and content of their communications.
- 170. Legal Communication. Prerequisites: courses 100 and 101, or consent of instructor. Study of trial and appellate processes as systems of communication. Analysis of elements of the juridical process as they affect the quality of communication content. Study of rules of evidence, jury behavior, and structure of legal discourse. Mr. Rosenthal
- 171. Seminar: Theories of Freedom of Speech and Press. Prerequisites: course 101, consent of instructor. Exploration of relationship between freedoms of speech and press and values of liberty, self-realization, self-government, truth, dignity, respect, justice, equality, association, and community. Study of the significance of these values examined in connection with issues such as obscenity, defamation, access to media, and control of commercial, corporate, and government speech.
- 175. Criticism and the Public Arts. Prerequisite: course 10 or consent of instructor. Introduction to methods and problems of criticism in the public arts. Study of several types of critical methods: formalistic, analogue, pragmatic, and aesthetic criticism. Topics include definition of art and criticism, aesthetic media, genre and resources of film, television, theater, and public discourse, varieties of critical method, problems of critical judgment.
- 177. Libel and Freedom of Expression. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course 101 or consent of instructor. Intensive study of law of defamation and its relationship to the free flow of information in a democracy. Examination of rationale, scope, and effects of libel laws. Topics include application of libel laws to public official, public figure, and private plaintiffs and media and nonmedia defendants; group libel, privileged libel, and libelous fiction. Mr. Rosenthal
- 180. Politics of Censorship. Discussion, two hours; simulation teaching, three hours. Prerequisites: course 101, consent of instructor. Examination of the process and substance of debates over government and private censorship by having students become active participants in a term-long simulated battle over a current issue such as book censorship, pornography, or UNESCO's proposed "New World Information Order." Mr. Cowan (W)
- 185. Field Studies in Communication (2 to 8 units). Prerequisites: course 10, junior standing, consent of instructor. Fieldwork in communication. Students participate in two-hour seminar sessions and spend seven hours in approved community settings each week for each two units of credit. May be taken for a maximum of four units per term. P/NP grading. Ms. Gregory
- 187. Ethical and Policy Issues in Institutions of Mass Communication. Prerequisites: courses 10, 101. Intensive examination of ethical and policy issues arising from interaction of media institutions (print, film, broadcasting, and new technologies) and societal institutions (Congress, federal agencies, courts, the Presidency, schools, churches, political action groups, advertisers, and audiences). Mr. Cole
- 189. Multicultural Television and Society. (Formerly numbered 197C.) Study and evaluation of cross-cultural, social, and psychological characteristics of selected national and international television programs and their implications for social learning in children. Designed to systematically study multicultural attributes related to sociocultural images and portrayals of television programs using various evaluation models and techniques. Mr. Berry
- 191H. Research Methods in Communication (Honors). Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 10, junior standing. Provides a working understanding of research methods in communication studies, particularly related to study of mass media effects, to give students the background necessary to design, implement, and report their own research project. Mr. Iyengar, Mr. Malamuth (F)
- 196H. Undergraduate Honors Proseminar. Prerequisites: senior standing, 3.5 GPA in communication studies major, 3.3 GPA overall. Limited enrollment. Variable topics course involving specialized study of selected aspects of the field of human communication. Mr. Iyengar, Mr. Malamuth
- 197A-197Z. Special Topics in Communication Studies. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: completion of preparation for the major courses or consent of instructor. Variable topics courses; consult Schedule of Classes for topics to be offered in a specific term. 197A. Mass Communication Theory; 197B. Systems, Institutions, and Policies; 197C. Media Content/Criticism and History; 197D. American Studies; 197E. Language/Interaction Structures; 197F. Social Systematics; 197G. Interpersonal Communication Theory; 197J. Heterogeneous Groups Communication. (F,W,Sp)
- 199. Special Studies (2 to 8 units). To be arranged with faculty member who will direct the study. Prerequisites: senior standing, consent of instructor. Independent studies for seniors who desire intensive or specialized investigation of selected research topics.
- 199H. Special Studies for Honors Candidates (2 to 8 units). To be arranged with faculty member who will direct the study. Prerequisites: senior and honors program standing. Independent studies for honors undergraduates who desire intensive or specialized investigation of selected research topics.

Scope and Objectives

Standing at the forefront of innovative literary analysis and criticism, comparative literature is one of the most exciting fields in the humanities. As a discipline it requires exceptional linguistic ability and high intellectual caliber. UCLA's graduate interdepartmental program offers students the opportunity to work with faculty in any of the University's language and literature departments as well as with the Comparative Literature Program faculty.

Comparative literature at UCLA focuses on those elements which define literature in general, such as genre, period, theme, language, and theory. Courses are designed to provide students with a historical understanding of the concepts of genre and period by studying specific genres and periods or literary movements. Paradigmatic or thematic courses offer another way of examining literature synchronically or diachronically regardless of language boundaries.

Courses in literary criticism and theory inquire into the premises of specific critical approaches, and of criticism itself, in order to provide further insight into the intellectual and moral concerns of literature and the world it reflects. Thus, through the study of these various assumptions and aspects of literature and criticism, students learn not only to cross linguistic boundaries, but to join them — to compare and to contrast, to analyze and, finally, to synthesize the text and the subtext, the structure and the history which define, undermine, and transcend the text and its reader.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

A bachelor's degree in literature, ancient or modern, is a prerequisite for admission to the program. Students not having a literature major in their B.A. program are required to demonstrate the equivalent knowledge and comprehension of one literature before being considered a graduate student in good standing. Applicants are expected to have at least a 3.4 grade-point average in upper division literature courses, take the Graduate Record Examination (GRE), and submit three letters of recommendation to the Comparative Literature Program (2326 Murphy Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1536). Applicants should have literary proficiency in one foreign language and at least elementary knowledge of a second.

Areas of Study

Your study plan should combine work in the major and minor literatures by focusing on a limited area in which these literatures may be explored. The area may be a literary period (e.g., Romanticism), a genre (e.g., the novel), or a theoretical problem.

The major literature is the area of your primary concentration. You specialize in one historically defined period (e.g., medieval, Renaissance, and baroque, neoclassicism and 18th century, Romanticism to modern), but general knowledge of the major literature is a prerequisite for the specialization.

In the minor literature, you focus on a period comparable to the area of specialization in the major literature, although you may not have as much historical depth and breadth as in the major literature.

Foreign Language Requirement

Literary proficiency in the major and minor literatures is an essential prerequisite for courses and degrees in comparative literature. You should be able to take graduate classes conducted in the languages of your specialization, speak the major foreign language adequately, and read literary texts in that language with "literary proficiency" (i.e., with sensitivity to stylistic nuances).

Before completing the M.A., you must demonstrate knowledge of two foreign languages. Proficiency in one must be certified by completing two or more upper division and/or graduate literature courses in the appropriate language department. (You must prove more than elementary language competency in order to take these courses.) The second language requirement may be satisfied either by completing two years of language classes, by taking one upper division literature class, or by passing the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with a score of 600 or better. Translation examinations may be administered by departmental members in languages for which no GSFLT is available.

Course Requirements

The following 12 courses are the minimum course requirements. Some students will take extra courses to make up deficiencies.

- (1) Four comparative literature courses, including Comparative Literature 200 and one course in literary theory such as 290, 291, 292, or 293; two courses that deal with primary texts in a comparative context (e.g., courses on genre, period, or a special topic that examines primary texts).
- (2) Five courses (three must be graduate, two may be upper division) in your major literature.
- (3) Three courses (at least one must be graduate) in your minor literature. You should study periods, genres, or problems in the minor literature which lend themselves to comparison with similar elements in your major literature.

Of the above required courses, eight units at most may be in the 500 series. Course 596 or 597 may be applied toward the minimum course requirement and the graduate course requirement.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

The examination for the M.A. is both written and oral, testing both historical knowledge and comprehension of methodology. There are three possible results of the examination: you may receive an M.A. degree and be allowed to progress toward the Ph.D., be granted a terminal M.A., or fail the examination altogether. The program allows a maximum of two attempts to pass the M.A. examinations.

The written examinations test your skill in literary analysis and detailed knowledge of specified works in the major and minor literatures. The examinations are based on reading lists from the works of at least 15 authors in the major literature (two three-hour examinations) and the works of at least 10 authors in the minor literature (one three-hour examination). Normally, the reading list consists of approximately 24 to 30 works in the major literature and 12 to 15 works in the minor literature. For more details on the reading list, contact the program office.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

For entrance into the Ph.D. program, an M.A. degree in Comparative Literature is normally required. Students with an M.A. degree in one national literature, extensive knowledge of a second, and the ability to read literary texts in a third language may be considered for admission. Applicants should submit three letters of recommendation. Students entering with any degree other than an M.A. in Comparative Literature from UCLA are required to pass a "permission to proceed" examination before being allowed to continue toward the Ph.D. It should be taken within your first year in residence.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

The study plan for the Ph.D. should combine work in one major and two minor literatures by focusing on a limited area in which these literatures may be explored. This area may be a literary period or a particular aspect common to several literatures (e.g., a genre like tragedy or the novel, or a phenomenon like neoclassicism or the baroque). It may also be a critical or theoretical problem, involving analyses of styles or modes of interpretation; comparisons of classical and modern genres and themes; questions about the artistic process in different art forms; or problems in literary aesthetics or epistemology. You may substitute, by petition for program approval, a related field such as art history, women's studies, or film for one minor literature.

Foreign Language Requirement

You must have literary proficiency in at least two foreign languages before taking the qualifying examination. Reading knowledge of a third foreign language is strongly recommended. Two of the three languages offered for the Ph.D. must be from different language groups (e.g., Romance and Germanic, English and Slavic). If you intend to offer three literatures written in foreign languages for your Ph.D. degree, you are expected to have literary proficiency in the three pertinent foreign languages. A classical language is usually necessary for anyone majoring in a period prior to the 19th century. If you present three literature areas for the Ph.D., you must fulfill the language requirements through coursework.

If you select a nonliterary minor, you must still demonstrate the ability to read literature in two foreign languages. You are examined in at least one foreign language as part of your course and examination requirements for the Ph.D. You must also demonstrate literature reading proficiency in a second foreign language by taking an upper division course in that language. For example, if you select English (major), French (minor), and film (minor) as your three areas of specialization, you are expected to demonstrate literature reading proficiency in another foreign language such as Italian or German. If you have taken a course to fulfill your M.A. language requirements, you may not use the same course to fulfill the second foreign language requirement for the option described above.

Course Requirements

All students entering with an M.A. must take a minimum of six graduate courses, and often up to 12 courses. Those whose M.A. is not in Comparative Literature at UCLA must take three of the required six courses in comparative literature and one from each of the major and minor literatures/fields. Other relevant or necessary courses are determined in consultation with a graduate adviser. None of the minimum required courses may be in the 500 series. Although only six courses are required, you are strongly advised to take at least two and usually three courses in each of your literatures.

If you have taken your M.A. in Comparative Literature at UCLA, the following courses are required: two comparative literature courses, one with a theoretical orientation; two to three courses in your second minor; two courses in your major literature, preferably in your period of emphasis, plus any additional courses required by the program committee and/or graduate advisers. None of the minimum required courses may be in the 500 series.

Teaching Experience

Teaching experience is not required but is highly recommended.

Qualifying Examinations

The examinations are both written and oral and may be taken over a period of two to three terms at the end of the second year after receiving your M.A. degree. The written examinations are based on reading lists for the major and two minor literatures/fields.

For the major literature, you take one three-hour historical examination based on a reading list of 40 items. No more than 20 of the items may be in the approximately 100-year period of emphasis.

For the minor fields, you must take (1) one three-hour written examination in each minor field, based on approved reading lists of 25 to 30 items or (2) one three-hour written examination in the minor field not included in your M.A. examinations and write a paper of 20 to 30 pages on a topic in the minor field originally presented for the M.A., based on approved reading lists. The latter choice must have approval of the program chair and agreement of the examining professor.

For the University Oral Qualifying Examination, you must submit a detailed dissertation prospectus of approximately 20 pages. The two-to three-hour examination covers all written examinations, as well as your dissertation prospectus.

The program allows a maximum of two attempts to pass the Ph.D. examinations.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Dissertation

The doctoral dissertation must demonstrate original critical work in the field. Although a topic comparing literatures is commonly undertaken, comparative literature students may write a dissertation on a single subject in a single field provided that their wide range of knowledge is demonstrated by the quality of the work.

Graduate Courses

200. Methodology of Comparative Literature (6 units). Seminar, four hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Study of methodology of comparative literature and theory of literature.

202. Classical Tradition: Epic. (Formerly numbered C207.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of Greek, Latin, or Italian. Analysis of Iliad, Odyssey, Aeneid, Gerusalemme Liberata, and Paradise Lost both in relation to their contemporary societies and to literary traditions. Emphasis on how poets build on work of their predecessors. S/U or letter grading. Ms. King

203. Classical Tradition: Tragedy. (Formerly numbered C211.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: knowledge of one appropriate foreign language, usually Greek or French. Analysis of selected Greek dramas and their re-creations in Rome, in the Renaissance, and in the modern period. S/U or letter grading. Ms. King

C204. Satire. (Formerly numbered C212.) Lecture, three hours. Examination of satire both in texts generally recognized as models of the genre as well as in others, including examples of satirical discourse. Special attention to two important literary problems: role played by authors and narrators in relation to treatment of characters before possible audiences and importance of contextual values in interpretation of satire. Concurrently scheduled with Humanities C104. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages whenever possible and may meet as a group one additional hour each week. S/U or letter grading.

C205. Comic Vision. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Literary masterpieces, both dramatic and nondramatic, selected to demonstrate varieties of comic expression. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C105. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages and to meet as a group one additional hour each week. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Band

206. Archetypal Heroes in Literature. (Formerly numbered C229.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Survey and analysis of function and appearance of such archetypal heroes as Achilles, Ulysses, Prometheus, Oedipus, and Orpheus in literature from antiquity to the modern period. S/U or letter grading. Ms. King

207. Allegory and Some Allegories. (Formerly numbered 210.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing, reading knowledge of French, German, Italian, Latin, Greek, or Chinese. Historical perspective on topic of allegory, with readings from texts traditionally held to be examples of the genre. Defining allegory is simple; saying which works count as examples of allegory, and why, is much harder. Authors include Prudentius, Augustine, Dante, Spenser, Donne, Tung Yueh, Hegel, Baudelaire, and Mallarmé. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Saussy

C222. Renaissance Drama. (Formerly numbered C245.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Broad introduction to subject matter and types of plays in the Renaissance, with consideration of historical and literary influences on the plays. Readings include works of such dramatists as Tasso, Machiavelli, Lope de Vega, Racine, Jonson, Shakespeare. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C122. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages and to meet as a group one additional hour each week. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Braunmuller

C240. Dramatic Theory and Criticism in German and English Romanticism. (Formerly numbered C271.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of German. Generic conception of drama in critical essays of the Schlegels, Tieck, Jean Paul, Coleridge, De Quincey, and Hazlitt, with emphasis on role of the actor and the idea of dramatic action as discussed by the critics. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C140. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Burwick

C250. The 19th-Century Novel. (Formerly numbered C275.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of French or German. Comparative study of the 19th-century novel in England and on the continent. Novels selected so as to allow seminar to concentrate on a particular tradition or critical problem. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C150. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Re

C251. Crisis of Authority. (Formerly numbered C278.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing or consent of instructor, reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Darwin's Origin of Species undermines the notion of a traditional fatherly God and reflects a major transition between the 19th and 20th centuries. Threat to, or collapse of, a divinely author(ized) and male-dominated society appears in writers such as G. Eliot, Zola, Ibsen, Strindberg, Conrad, Hardy, Woolf, and Camus. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C151. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages and may meet as a group one additional hour each week. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Shideler

C252. Symbolist Tradition in Poetry. (Formerly numbered C280.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of either French or German. Study of symbolist tradition in 19th- and 20th-century English, French, and German poetry. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C152. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages and may meet as a group one additional hour each week. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Shideler

C260. Literature and the Visual Arts, 1700 to the Present. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Knowledge of art history valuable but not required. Assuming that literature and the visual arts are in some degree expressions of cultural and philosophical patterns of eras, course studies relationships between primarily English writers from 1700 to the present and movements in painting, architecture, and sculpture. Interdisciplinary investigation of similarities and differences between the plastic and verbal arts in comparative study. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C160. Graduate students required to read works in original languages. Mr. Roston

C261. Fiction and History. (Formerly numbered C276.) Seminar, three hours. Analysis of use of historical events, situations, and characters in literary works of the Renaissance and/or modern period. Texts and individual assignments range from Renaissance historical narratives (Italian humanists, Machiavelli) to 19th- and 20th-century novels by authors such as Stendhal, Verga, Tomasi di Lampedusa, Carpentier, and Kundera. Use of fictional methods by historians. Emphasis on how aesthetic, ideological, and political factors influence authors' choice and use of historical material. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C161. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Re, Mr. Saussy

262. The Psychological Novel. (Formerly numbered 292.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: major in literature, reading knowledge of French. Comparative study of French and English novels which both precede and follow development of psychoanalysis. Selected readings of Freud, in addition to the required fiction. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Hutter

C263. Crisis of Consciousness in Modern Literature. (Formerly numbered C209.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Study of modern European and American works which are concerned both in subject matter and artistic methods with the growing self-consciousness of human beings and their society, focusing on works of Kafka, Rilke, Woolf, Sartre, and Stevens. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C163. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages and to meet as a group one additional hour each week. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Komar

C264. The Modern Continental Novel. (Formerly numbered C285.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of at least one appropriate foreign language. Study of the modern novel's development from naturalism toward a mythic or symbolic level. Use of authors such as Gide, Proust, Mann, Joyce, Nabokov, and Grass to focus on development of themes such as primitivism vs. authority, change vs. stability, and the self-conscious narrative. Concurrently scheduled with Humanities C164. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages and to meet as a group one additional hour each week. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Goodwin

265. Intertextuality in Literature and Film. Discussion, three hours. Study of relationships between literature and film from perspective of intertextuality grounded in theorists Mikhail Bakhtin and Jacques Derrida and elaborated by critics Barthes, Chatman, and Kristeva. Focus on processes of inscription, reiteration, transformation, filiation, and dissemination during consideration of representative types of intertextuality. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Goodwin

C267. Theory and Texts of the Fantastic. (Formerly numbered C273.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Attempt to define the fantastic as a theoretical genre separate from the wider genre of fantasy. Critical texts by Todorov and Brooke-Rose. Primary texts by Hoffmann, Nerval, James, Poe, Borges, Casares, Cortazar, Landolfi, and Calvino. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C167. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages and may meet as a group one additional hour each week. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Re

C270. Alternate Traditions: In Search of Female Voices in Contemporary Literature. (Formerly numbered C284.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Investigation of narrative texts by contemporary French, German, English, American, Spanish-American, African, and Asian women writers from a cross-cultural perspective. Common themes, problems, and techniques. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C170. Graduate students required to prepare papers based on texts read in original languages whenever possible. S/U or letter grading. Ms. King, Ms. Komar, Ms. Re

271. Imaginary Women. (Formerly numbered 227.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Examination of archetypal female figures in classical/traditional literatures and their reincarnations in modern African American, Anglo-American, Asian American, European, Native American, and Spanish-American literatures. Particular emphasis on position of women in the cultures and ideology of the authors. S/U or letter grading. Ms. King

C272. The Postmodern Novel. (Formerly numbered C286.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Study of the postmodern novel as it developed out of modernism. Postmodernism defined in three different ways — philosophically, scientifically, and economically. Emphasis on relationship of recent novels to theories of structuralism and poststructuralism. Readings include authors such as Borges, Beckett, Nabokov, Pynchon, Fuentes, Grass, Böll, and Calvino. Concurrently scheduled with Humanities C172. Graduate students required to meet as a group one additional hour each week. S/U or letter grading.

C273. Postmodernism and the Third World. (Formerly numbered C290.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Exploration of intersection between concepts of postmodernism and Third World culture and politics, including topics such as post-Marxism and revolution; historical thought; gender, ethnicity, imperialism, and their relationship to cultural politics; and recent Latin American literary production. Concurrently scheduled with Humanities C173. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Behdad

M274. Issues in Third World Literatures and Cultures. (Same as Asian American Studies M261.) Seminar, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Investigation of politics of power, gender, and race in the complex relationships between the so-called First World and Third World, using both theoretical and textual approaches. S/U or letter grading.

275. Nationalism and Immigration Today. Seminar, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing or consent of instructor, knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Literary and social discourses on issues of nationalism, immigration, and the politics of identity in our postcolonial era, with consideration of broad range of texts (aesthetic representations, theoretical reflections, and legal documents). S/U or letter grading. Mr. Behdad

285. Translation Workshop. (Formerly numbered 230.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: solid reading knowledge of at least one foreign language, consent of instructor. Open to qualified undergraduates with proper language preparation. Theory and practice of literary translation. Analyses of significant theoretical contributions to the field. Weekly exercises in translation technique with genres, periods, and authors at discretion of participants. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Heim

290. Contemporary Theories of Criticism. (Formerly numbered 201.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: course 200 or equivalent. Advanced course in theory of literature focusing on structuralist, psychoanalytic, and Marxist approaches. S/U or letter grading.

291. Problems in Theory of Literature. (Formerly numbered 202.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: course 290 or equivalent, reading knowledge of French or German. Study of specific topics in theory of literature for advanced students in criticism and literary theory. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

292. Problems of the Sign in Literature. (Formerly numbered 203.) Seminar, three hours. Inquiry into theoretical bases and implications of the sign as metaphysical, logical, and grammatical categories. Many texts central to Western thinking dwell on the sign as a concept-tool in order to focus on the relationship between words and things, language and reality, the linguistic medium in its meaning-producing functions. Excerpts from Plato, Aristotle, Augustine, Locke, Vico, and Hegel lead to a discussion of "sciences" envisioned by Saussure (semiology) and Peirce (semiotics) and propounded by contemporary theorists such as Barthes, Hjelmslev, and Greimas. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Kao

293. Psychoanalytic Approaches to Literature. (Formerly numbered 204.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: course 200 or equivalent criticism course in English. Study of development of modern psychoanalytic approaches to literature, with particular stress on affective theories of criticism. Readings include Freud and early psychoanalytic critics, contemporary psychoanalytic critics of literature, and modern British and American psychoanalytic theorists (Winnicott, Schafer) whose work is applicable to literary theory. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Hutter, Mr. Reinhard

C295. Heidegger, Language, and Literature. (Formerly numbered C288.) Seminar, three hours. Knowledge of German not required. Close reading of essays contained in the collection Poetry, Language, and Thought, including "The Origin of the Work of Art," "The Thing," and "Language." Concurrently scheduled with Humanities C195. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Weber

C296. Derrida as a Reader of Heidegger. (Formerly numbered C289.) Seminar, three hours. Retracing of certain of Derrida's attempts to read Heidegger, beginning with the essay, "Restitutions," in Truth and Painting. Other writings include Of Spirit: Heidegger and the Question and Geschlecht. May be concurrently scheduled with Humanities C196. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Weber

297. Death and the Limits of Representation. (Formerly numbered 287.) Seminar, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Prerequisite: reading knowledge of one appropriate foreign language. Examination of fundamental shifts in the relationship that obtains between thinking and death which are closely tied to rethinking of the status and structure of representation. May be repeated once for credit. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Weber

375. Teaching Apprentice Practicum (1 to 4 units). Prerequisite: apprentice personnel employment as a teaching assistant, associate, or fellow. Teaching apprenticeship under active guidance and supervision of a regular faculty member responsible for curriculum and instruction at the University. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

495. Preparation for Teaching Literature and Composition. Lecture, three hours. Seminar on problems and methods of presenting literary texts as exemplary materials in the teaching of composition. Deals with theory and classroom practice and involves individual counseling and faculty evaluation of TA's performance. May not be applied toward M.A. course requirements. S/U grading.

596. Directed Individual Study or Research (2 to 12 units). Prerequisite: graduate standing in comparative literature. Necessary for students in comparative literature who need additional individual study and research. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

596X. Directed Individual Study (2 to 4 units). Preparation for foreign language examination. S/U grading.

597. Preparation for M.A. and Ph.D. Examinations (2 to 12 units). Prerequisite: graduate standing. Preparation for M.A. comprehensive examination or Ph.D. qualifying examinations. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

599. Research for Ph.D. Dissertation (2 to 12 units). Prerequisite: doctoral standing. Research for and preparation of Ph.D. dissertation. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

Scope and Objectives

The major in cybernetics is designed primarily for highly motivated undergraduates interested in interdisciplinary activities in life sciences, behavioral sciences, and engineering and computer sciences. Preparation for the major consists of a broad foundation in basic sciences — chemistry, biology, physics, and mathematics, plus introduction to psychology and computing. The major itself provides an introduction to modeling, information processing, control and system analysis, with emphasis on quantitative ideas and methodologies. Mathematical and other analytical skills are essential in the major.

Cybernetics majors have four options for in-depth studies: life sciences, behavioral sciences, engineering and applied mathematical sciences, or an integration of courses from these areas that form a coherent cybernetics curriculum. The major is appropriate preparation for employment or for graduate studies in any of these areas, with emphasis on interdisciplinary activities. It is also appropriate preparation for professional school studies in medicine, public health, management, dentistry, and engineering.

Precybernetics Major

You may apply for the precybernetics major via petition if you are a sophomore and have taken at least three of the premajor mathematics courses with a 2.7 GPA or better and three other premajor courses. Together, all preparation for the major courses, including mathematics, must be completed with at least a 3.0 GPA and a minimum grade of C in all courses. Transfer students must meet the same academic requirements, based on all courses transferred from another institution which satisfy premajor requirements, and must have completed one 12-unit term of residence in regular session at UCLA.

Preparation for the Major

Required: A minimum of 73 units, including Biology 5, 9; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C/11CL, 132A; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, 33B; Physics 8A, 8B, 8C; Program in Computing 10A; Psychology 10 or 11.

The Major

Admission to the major is by petition only and is based on successful completion of all preparation for the major courses and requirements (2.7 GPA in mathematics, 3.0 GPA overall, and a minimum grade of C in all courses).

The major consists of a methodology core (five and one-half courses), a specialization area (seven courses), and a cybernetics breadth requirement (three courses). Each course in the major must be passed with a grade of C or better.

Methodology Core — Four subject areas as follows:

- (1) One overview course: Computer Science 196A.
- (2) Two courses in probability and statistics from one of the following groups: (a) Statistics M152A and 152B, or (b) Mathematics M150A and Statistics 152B, or (c) Electrical Engineering 131A and Statistics 152B.
- (3) Two courses in signals and control systems (one from each group): (a) Electrical Engineering 102 and (b) Electrical Engineering 141 or Mechanical, Aerospace, and Nuclear Engineering 171A.
- (4) One course in modeling and computer simulation: Computer Science M196B.

Applications/Specialization Areas — A minimum of seven courses in either life sciences, behavioral sciences, engineering and applied mathematics, or an integration of courses from these areas. A continually updated and approved list of courses in each specialization area is available in the program office and the College Counseling Service.

With few exceptions, courses in the life sciences area are in biology, microbiology, chemistry, and biochemistry, as well as in departments of the School of Medicine. Courses in the behavioral sciences area are in psychology and linguistics. And courses in the engineering and applied mathematics area are in engineering, computer science, and mathematics.

Cybernetics Breadth Requirement — One course from each of the applications/specialization areas selected from the current approved list.

Specialization in Computing

You may select this area as an option in the existing applications/specialization areas. Program in Computing 10B, 10C, 30, and 60 are required, in addition to six courses selected from an approved list. You graduate with a bachelor's degree in cybernetics and a specialization in computing.

Computing, Program in

Honors Program

Junior and senior majors who have completed all preparation for the major courses and have an overall grade-point average of 3.0 or better and a 3.5 or better in required major courses may apply for admission to the honors program, in which honors-designated sections of selected courses are required. Students pursuing highest honors must, in addition, complete a senior thesis based on an approved research topic. Those who successfully complete the program (3.0 GPA or better overall, 3.5 or better in major coursework, and a grade of B or better in required honors courses) are awarded a degree with honors. At the discretion of the faculty sponsor and the interdepartmental committee, students demonstrating exceptional ability on the senior research thesis are awarded highest honors.

Upper Division Course

195H. Honors Thesis. Limited to cybernetics honors majors. Honors thesis preparation and submission, under direction of a faculty sponsor on Cybernetics Interdepartmental Committee. P/NP grading.

Scope and Objectives

This undergraduate major aims to provide a liberal education in relation to the critical issues and problems common to developing countries from a global or theme-oriented perspective. It is designed for students who are interested in careers related to international development in academia or in public or private agencies.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

Preparation for the Major

You must be a sophomore in good standing to enter the major. No specific courses are required as preparation for the major, but you should have some beginning experience in the social sciences at the college level.

The Major

Required: Fifty-six units of upper division courses (including the four core courses, Development Studies 100A-M100B, and Economics 110 or 111), taken for a letter grade, and the foreign language requirement. (For the quantitative methods requirement, some lower division courses are accepted in place of upper division courses.) Courses applied toward the major may be selected from the list in item 5 below. Substitutions may be made only with consent of the faculty adviser.

The major consists of six parts:

- (1) Development Studies 100A-M100B.
- (2) Economics 110* or 111*.
- (3) Four core courses (two should be from the same discipline) from Anthropology 130, 150, Economics 112*, 191*, Geography 121, 133, Political Science 115, 167A, 168, Sociology 101, 184.

(4) One course in quantitative methods from Anthropology 180, 186, Biostatistics 100A, Economics 40, Geography 171, Political Science 6, Sociology 18, 104, 112, 113, Statistics 50.

(5) Twenty-four units of elective courses, including at least 16 units to be divided equally between two of the world's developing areas (e.g., Africa, Central and Eastern Europe/Central Asia, East Asia, Latin America, the Near East, South and Southeast Asia), selected from Anthropology 151*, 152*, 153, M154*, 161*, 165*, 167, 171, 173Q, 174P, 175R, 175T, 177, 180, 186, Community Health Sciences 132*, Economics 103A through 103Z*, 120*, 130*, 150*, 151*, 171*, 180*, 191*, 192*, Education M108*, C203*, 204B, 204C, 204D, 204F, 228*, 234, 238, 252B*, 253B, 253C, Geography 117*, 119*, 122*, 124*, M128*, 135, 142, 148*, 151*, 181*, 182A*, 182B*, 186*, 187*, 188*, 189*, History 106A, 106B, 106C, 107A, 107B, 109A, 109B, 110A, 110B, 111A, 111B, 112A through C112D, 113, 134A, 134B, 165A, 165C, 166, 167A through 167D, 168, 169*, 170A, 171, 173, 174, 175A through 175Z*, 176A, 176B, 176C, 177, 178A, 178B, 179A, 179B, 182A*, 182B*, 183A*, 183B*, 184*, 188A, 188B, 188C, 190A, 190B, 197E, Latin American Studies 197, 199*, Political Science 124*, 130, 131*, 156A, 156B, 157, 159, 163A, 163B, 164, 166A through 166D, 167A, 168*, C197A through C197D*, Sociology 105*, 116, 156, 157, 160, 186, 187*, 188, 190, Urban Planning 232A, 232B, 235A*, 235B*, 236A, 246, 266, 267A*, 267B*, 269. Consult the program counselor regarding other possible electives that may be applied toward the major.

(6) Twenty-four quarter units in one modern foreign language or the equivalent in transfer units. You may also take a proficiency examination administered and evaluated by members of the program faculty (or by outside faculty for languages not familiar to program faculty).

Honors Program

Development studies majors who have completed Development Studies 100A-M100B and who have a 3.5 grade-point average in all courses offered for the major are eligible to formally apply for the honors program. In addition to completing all courses required for the major, you must take courses 195A-195B-195C, in which you research, write, and present an honors thesis. To receive honors at graduation, you must have at least a 3.5 GPA in courses applied toward the major (including 195A-195B-195C) and an overall GPA of 3.0.

Highest honors are awarded to students who complete the major (including courses 195A-195B-195C) with a 3.75 GPA and who produce an exceptional thesis.

*Courses so marked have prerequisites.

Upper Division Courses

100A-M100B. Introduction to Development Studies. Seminar, three hours. Two-term seminar for undergraduates designed to examine concepts and issues arising from economic, social, and political change in the Third World. 100A. Economic Development and Culture Change. (Formerly numbered M100A.) Prerequisites: Anthropology 9 or consent of instructor, some beginning experience in social sciences at college level. M100B. Political Economy of Development. (Same as Political Science M197G.) Prerequisite: some beginning experience in social sciences at college level. (W,Sp)

195A-195B-195C. Directed Studies for Honors. Prerequisites: courses 100A-M100B, 3.5 GPA in courses offered for the major, formal application to honors program, consent of instructor. 195A. Research, discussion, and planning of honors thesis. 195B-195C. Research, preliminary drafting, and final writing of honors thesis. In Progress grading for course 195B (credit to be given only on completion of course 195C).

Diversified Liberal Arts (Interdepartmental)

A316 Murphy Hall, (310) 825-1965

Undergraduate Certificate Program

The Diversified Liberal Arts Program (DLAP) is not a major, but a special certificate program through which you may waive the Multisubject Assessment for Teachers (MSAT) in California. The MSAT examination must be passed (or the DLAP completed) before students in elementary school teaching credential programs may begin their student teaching. To earn an elementary school teaching credential, you must complete an accredited program offered through a graduate school of education.

To earn the certificate in diversified liberal arts, you must complete a major in the College of Letters and Science. You must also complete DLAP requirements in four areas: (1) language and literature, (2) mathematics and science, (3) history and social science, (4) arts and culture.

Requirements for one of these areas are normally satisfied by courses taken for your major; in addition, you must complete a pattern of courses in specified areas.

You must petition for admission to the program and are advised to do so as soon as possible. Transfer students may petition to have suitable courses completed at other institutions applied toward the course requirements of this program. The college certifies completion of the program.

If you do not complete the program prior to graduation, you must petition out of the program to be eligible to graduate.

For further information about the program and a complete list of courses that apply, contact a counselor in the College of Letters and Science, A316 Murphy Hall (310-206-6681). For information regarding the Teacher Credential Program in the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies, see a counselor in 1009 Moore Hall (310-825-8328).

Scope and Objectives

The disciplines of geology, geochemistry, geophysics, paleobiology, and space physics are concerned with the structure and evolution of the solar system, Earth, and life: essentially, the physical environment and its interaction with biota. These studies entail the application of fundamental physics and chemistry to a broad subject area stretching from astronomy at one extreme to biology at the other. Areas which are emphasized at UCLA include isotope and trace element analyses, petrology and mineralogy, sedimentology, paleobiology and organic geochemistry, structural geology and tectonophysics, seismology, the Earth's interior, planetary physics, and space plasmas.

The variety of techniques applied lead to several specializations within the five main disciplines. Students completing their studies with a B.S. or M.S. degree usually are employed by industry. Many are employed in environment-related activities; others are involved in mineral or oil exploration or in construction. Students attaining the Ph.D. degree are usually employed by universities or governmental and industrial research groups.

The Bachelor of Arts program in Earth Sciences is intended to provide a broad background in Earth sciences that is especially appropriate for students intending to become K through 12 teachers in Earth, physical, or life sciences. It may also be of interest to students who plan careers in environmental sciences, law, government, business, journalism, public health, medicine, or dentistry. Those who intend to become professional geologists, geochemists, or geophysicists and/or to continue into graduate studies in Earth or space sciences are urged to pursue one of the B.S. degrees.

Bachelor of Science in Geology

Preparation for the Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 1 or 1H, 2, 51A, 51B, 61; Biology 2; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A; Physics 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, and 8C/8CL or 6B; Program in Computing 3 (recommended) or 10A or more advanced placement by examination. All courses must be passed with a minimum grade of C-.

The Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 103A, 103B, 103C, 111, 112, 116, 121A-121B, 135, and three additional courses from C107, C109, 119, 129, 133, 134, 136C, 137, 139, 141, 150, 152.

Students with an interest in nonrenewable natural resources are advised to take courses 136C, 137, 139, 141, and/or 150. Those interested in geochemistry are advised to take Earth and Space Sciences 103C, C107, C109, 119, 121A-121B, C126, and/or Chemistry and Biochemistry 110A, 110B, 114, 132A, 132B, 153A, 184.

Bachelor of Science in Geology — Engineering Geology

Preparation for the Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 1 or 1H, 51A, 51B, 61; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 33A; Physics 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL; Program in Computing 3 (recommended) or 10A or more advanced placement by examination. Recommended: Mathematics 32B. All courses must be passed with a minimum grade of C-.

The Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 103A, 103B, 111, 112, 121A-121B, 135, 139; Civil and Environmental Engineering 108, 120, 121, 128L, 150; one course from Earth and Space Sciences C126, 129, 134, 136C, 137, 141, 150, Geography 100, Civil and Environmental Engineering 151, 155.

Bachelor of Science in Geology — Paleobiology

Preparation for the Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 1 or 1H, 2, 51A, 51B, 61; Biology 5, 5L, and 6 or 9 or 108; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11CL. All courses must be passed with a minimum grade of C-.

The Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 103B, 111, 112, 116; Chemistry and Biochemistry 132A, 132B/132BL, 153A, 153L; six courses from Chemistry and Biochemistry 153B, 154, Biostatistics 110A, 110B, Biology 101A, 101B, 102, 105, 110, 111, 117, 120, 122, 123, 147, 148, Earth and Space Sciences 119, 121A-121B, 133, 141.

Bachelor of Science in Geophysics — Applied Geophysics

Preparation for the Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 1 or 1H, 51A, 51B, 61; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, 33B; Physics 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, 8D/8DL; Program in Computing 3 (recommended) or 10A or more advanced placement by examination. All courses must be passed with a minimum grade of C-.

The Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 111, 112, 136A, 136B, 136C, 152; Physics 105A, 105B, 110A, 110B, 114; two courses from Earth and Space Sciences 103A, 103B, C107, 134, 137, 139, 153, 154, 155, 205, 265, Mathematics 140A, 140B, 140C, Physics 112, 115A, 116, 131, 132, Statistics M152A, 152B, or other courses with consent of adviser.

Bachelor of Science in Geophysics — Geophysics and Space Physics

Preparation for the Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 1 or 1H, 9; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL, 11C; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, 33B; Physics 8A/8AL, 8B/8BL, 8C/8CL, 8D/8DL; Program in Computing 3 (recommended) or 10A or more advanced placement by examination. All courses must be passed with a minimum grade of C-.

The Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 134, M140, 152, 153, 154, 155; Physics 105A, 105B, 110A, 110B, 112; Physics 131 or Mathematics 145; two upper division courses from the physical sciences, engineering, or mathematics (must be approved by the undergraduate adviser).

Students planning to do graduate work in specialized careers in Earth sciences should, when possible, take appropriate courses in departments outside the major in addition to those already specified. Suggested graduate programs for various fields of emphasis are available in the Student Affairs Office, 3683 Geology, and provide guidelines in selecting upper division courses.

Qualified undergraduate students may, with consent of their advisers and the instructor, take Earth and Space Sciences graduate courses numbered from 200A through 249.

Bachelor of Arts in Earth Sciences

Preparation for the Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 1 or 1H, 2, 9, 15, 51A, 51B, 61; Biology 2 or 5; Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B/11BL; Mathematics 3A, 3B, and 3C, or 31A and 31B; Physics 6A, 6B, and 6C, or 8A/8AL and 8B/8BL. All courses must be passed with a minimum grade of C-.

The Major

Required: Earth and Space Sciences 103A, 103B, 111, 112, 116; five additional upper division courses from Earth and Space Sciences other than 100 or 120, English 131G, Geography 100/100A, 101/101A, 104, 105/105A, 106/106A, 107, 113, or other upper division physical sciences, life sciences, or engineering courses by petition.

Honors in Geology or Geophysics

The honors program in geology or geophysics is intended to provide exceptional students an opportunity for advanced research and study under the tutorial guidance of a member of the faculty. Requirements for admission to candidacy are the same as those required for admission to the Honors Programs of the College of Letters and Science. Qualified students wishing to enter the program must submit a completed application form to the departmental honors committee near the end of their junior year. Honors in geology or geophysics are awarded at graduation to those students who have a cumulative GPA of 3.5, who have completed at least 90 graded units at the University of California, and who have completed a minimum of two terms (eight units) of Earth and Space Sciences 199H leading to the preparation of a satisfactory honors thesis. Students demonstrating exceptional ability are awarded highest honors.

Graduate Study

Admission

Application may be made for admission to any term. Graduate Record Examination (GRE) scores are required; the examination should be taken at least six weeks before the deadline. Also required are three letters of recommendation which should be sent to the Graduate Adviser, Department of Earth and Space Sciences, 3683 Geology, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1567. Application forms and a brochure giving information about the department may be obtained from the graduate adviser. Students who wish to apply for fellowships or teaching assistantships should be aware that these are allocated in February for the following academic year; completed applications should be received by January.

Major Fields and Subdisciplines

The Department of Earth and Space Sciences offers programs leading to the M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in Geochemistry, in Geology, and in Geophysics and Space Physics. The program in geochemistry offers study in crystal chemistry, experimental petrology, isotopic studies of stable and radioactive elements, meteorite research, planetology, and lunar geochemistry. The program in geology offers study in geomorphology, glaciology, mineralogy, paleobiology, paleontology, petrology, sedimentology, stratigraphy, structural geology, tectonophysics, and other fields. The program in geophysics and space physics offers study in applied geophysics, the Earth's interior (seismology, gravity, thermal regime, geomagnetism, tectonics), geophysical fluid dynamics (turbulence, rotating systems, stability, hydromagnetism), planetology (orbital dynamics, planetary interiors, surfaces and atmospheres, solar-system origin), and space physics (magnetosphere, radiation belts, solar wind, magnetic fields, cosmic rays). Other comparable areas of study are also possible.

Foreign Language Requirement

Advising committees may require one or more foreign language in special individual cases. The committees determine how the requirement is to be fulfilled.

Master of Science in Geochemistry

Admission

A bachelor's degree in chemistry, geology, physics, or a related field is required. Applicants must have outstanding records in the basic sciences, physics, chemistry, and mathematics. The Graduate Record Examination (GRE) Subject Test may be in any appropriate field of science.

Course Requirements

A minimum of nine courses is required for the degree, at least six of which must be graduate-level courses. Each course of study is worked out individually between you and the advising committee. You are expected to attain, either through prior training or through prescribed coursework, a common mastery of the subject matter of Earth and Space Sciences 51A, 51B, C107, C109, 234B, Chemistry and Biochemistry 110A, and 110B, as well as more advanced courses in particular fields, and some familiarity with the methods of field geology. You must also take one of the following each term: course 235A, 235B, 235C, 295A, 295B, or 295C.

Sixteen units of 500-series courses (596, 597, 598) may be applied toward the total course requirement; 12 units may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement.

Thesis Plan

The thesis must be approved by the research director (usually the chair of your advising committee), as well as by the other members of the advising committee. No examination is required of students who write a thesis.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

If you elect this plan, the advising committee prepares and administers the final examination (normally oral). In most cases, a failed final examination can be repeated once.

Master of Science in Geology

Admission

A bachelor's degree in geology, biology, chemistry, physics, or other science is required. Applicants must have outstanding records in the relevant basic sciences and mathematics.

Course Requirements

Each course of study is worked out individually between you and the advising committee. It may include appropriate courses offered by other departments. Unless you have already passed Earth and Space Sciences 61 and 111, you are required to take either 195G or 61 and 111G during your first year in residence. Depending on your performance in course 195G, you may subsequently be required to take either 111G or 61 and 111G. You must also take one of the following each term: course 235A, 235B, 235C, 295A, 295B, or 295C.

Courses applied toward the 36-unit minimum requirement must be from the 100, 200, or 500 series in the physical or life sciences. At least 24 units must be graduate-level courses, of which at least four units must be a geology seminar (courses 251 through 260). Except for courses 597 and 598, those graded on an S/U basis may not be applied toward the requirements. The advising committees may require additional courses in light of individual educational objectives and backgrounds.

Eight units of 500-series courses (596, 597, 598) may be applied toward the total course requirement; four units may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement.

Thesis Plan

This plan is normally required for students not continuing to the doctorate. The thesis subject may be selected at once and the research undertaken concurrently with coursework; in any event, it should normally be selected within your first year in residence. The completed thesis must be approved by the thesis committee. If it is not, the committee may recommend either termination of graduate study or further coursework or research or both, leading to a revised thesis. Revision and resubmission is not normally permitted more than once.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

This plan is recommended for those continuing to the Ph.D. The examination consists of a six-hour written part covering your major field of study and a subsequent oral part which may be more general in scope. If the examination is failed, the advising committee may recommend either termination of graduate study or further coursework followed by another examination. Reexamination is not normally permitted more than once.

Master of Science in Geophysics and Space Physics

Admission

A bachelor's degree in a physical science, engineering, mathematics, or other field is required. Undergraduate work must include junior- or senior-level courses in mathematical methods, dynamics, electromagnetism, and thermodynamics. Recent Graduate Record Examination (GRE) General Test scores are required; Subject Test scores are desirable, preferably in Physics, although Mathematics or Geology scores are also acceptable.

Qualified students may proceed directly toward the Ph.D. degree, although most obtain the M.S. degree in the process.

Course Requirements

Courses applied toward the 36-unit minimum requirement must include Earth and Space Sciences 200A, 200B, and 200C and at least 12 additional units of 200-series (graduate) courses. At least half of these must fall within a single field of concentration (applied geophysics, Earth's interior, geophysical fluid dynamics, planetology, or space physics) selected in consultation with your faculty adviser, and the remainder must contribute to your general competence in geophysics and space physics. Courses 200A, 200B, and 200C must be passed with a grade-point average of 3.2 or better unless you are following the thesis plan. Courses graded on an S/U basis may not be applied toward the minimum requirement.

Thesis Plan

The completed thesis must be approved by your faculty adviser (usually the chair of your advising committee), as well as by the other members of that committee. Eight units of 500-series courses (596, 598) may be applied toward the total course requirement.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

You may select either (1) a written six-hour examination in question/answer format or (2) an examination in written proposal/oral format. Contact the department for details of each format. Courses in the 500 series may not be applied toward the 36-unit minimum requirement.

Specialization in Applied Geophysics

The objective of this program is to provide advanced technical training to students who plan to do detailed analysis of geophysical data in industry, mainly petroleum exploration. Emphasis is on theory, computation, data analysis, and inversion. Fieldwork and original measurements are strongly supported, but UCLA has no facilities for gathering or routine processing of reflection seismic data. Undergraduate preparation for admission is equivalent to a B.S. in Geophysics (applied geophysics specialty), including a common mastery of the subject matter of Earth and Space Sciences 61, 111, 112, 136A, 136B, 136C, 152, Physics 105A, 105B, 110A, 110B, and 114. Exceptions may be allowed, but in particular, deficiency in geophysical fieldwork must be made up.

Course Requirements — Courses applied toward the 36-unit minimum requirement must include Earth and Space Sciences 200A and 202, plus at least two courses from 203, 204, 205, 222. Eight additional units of graduate-level courses are required; courses 200B, 208, M224A, M224B are recommended. Eight units of 500-series courses (596, 598) may be applied toward the graduate course requirement. Except for courses 596 and 598, those graded on an S/U basis may not be applied toward the minimum requirement.

Thesis Plan — A thesis is required for this specialization. A qualifying examination on the suitability of the proposed thesis should be taken by your fourth term in residence. You are also required to take a final examination on the adequacy of your completed thesis.

Ph.D. in Geochemistry

Admission

Admission requirements are the same as those for the M.S. in Geochemistry.

Course Requirements

Each course of study is worked out individually in consultation with your advising committee. You are expected to complete at least the minimum number of courses which are required for the M.S. in Geochemistry and to attain, either through prior training or through prescribed coursework, a common mastery of the subject matter of Earth and Space Sciences 51A, 51B, C107, C109, 234B, Chemistry and Biochemistry 110A, and 110B, as well as more advanced courses in particular fields, and some familiarity with the methods of field geology. You must also take one of the following each term: course 235A, 235B, 235C, 295A, 295B, or 295C.

Qualifying Examinations

The departmental written qualifying examination must be taken before the end of your first year of the doctoral program if you have a master's degree; otherwise, it must be taken before the end of your second year of enrollment. It may be given in either a question/answer format or in a proposal format, at your discretion. Contact the department for details of each format. In case of failure, an examination of either format may be repeated at the discretion of the examining committee.

After passing the written qualifying examination, you must nominate your doctoral committee and arrange a time for the University Oral Qualifying Examination. This examination determines the suitability of the selected problem for the dissertation and your ability to research the problem but is not limited to these topics. Repetition of a failed examination is at the option of the doctoral committee.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

The final oral examination is normally required.

Ph.D. in Geology

Admission

Admission requirements are the same as those for the M.S. in Geology.

Course Requirements

Each course of study is worked out individually in consultation with your advising committee. It may include appropriate courses offered by other departments. Unless you have already passed Earth and Space Sciences 61 and 111, you are required to take either 195G or 61 and 111G during your first year in residence. Depending on your performance in course 195G, you may subsequently be required to take either 111G or 61 and 111G. You must also take one of the following each term: course 235A, 235B, 235C, 295A, 295B, or 295C. You are expected to complete at least the minimum number of courses which are required for the M.S. in Geology and must take a geology seminar each year.

Qualifying Examinations

The departmental written qualifying examination must be taken before the end of your first year of the doctoral program if you have a master's degree; otherwise, it must be taken before the end of your second year of enrollment. It is given in either a question/answer format or in a proposal/proposition format, at your discretion. Contact the department for details of each format.

After passing the written qualifying examination, you must nominate your doctoral committee and arrange a time for the University Oral Qualifying Examination. This examination determines the suitability of the selected problem for the dissertation and your ability to research the problem but is not limited to these topics. Repetition of a failed examination is at the option of the doctoral committee.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

The final oral examination is normally required.

Ph.D. in Geophysics and Space Physics

Admission

Admission requirements are the same as those for the M.S. in Geophysics and Space Physics.

Course Requirements

Six courses are required, three in fundamental physics and three in the major geophysics disciplines. You must attain a grade-point average of 3.3 or better (on a 4.0 scale) in the six courses. Contact the department for details.

Qualifying Examinations

The departmental written qualifying examination is given in either a question/answer format or in a written research proposal/oral format, at your discretion. Contact the department for details of each format.

After passing the written qualifying examination, you must nominate your doctoral committee and arrange a time for the University Oral Qualifying Examination. This examination determines the suitability of the selected problem for the dissertation and your ability to research the problem but is not limited to these topics. Repetition of a failed examination is at the option of the doctoral committee. If you do not pass this examination within four years after entering the program, you are subject to dismissal.

Final Oral Examination

The examination is required.

Lower Division Courses

1. Introduction to Earth Science. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Not open to students with credit for or currently enrolled in course 1H or 100. Elements of Earth science; study of Earth materials; nature and interpretation of geologic evidence; study of geologic processes; historical aspects of geology. (F,W,Sp)

1H. Fundamentals of Earth Science. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours; two field days. Not open to students with credit for or currently enrolled in course 1 or 100. Particularly recommended for future physical sciences majors with strong high school or some lower division preparation. Introduction to Earth materials, physical geology, and tectonics, with examples of geophysical and geochemical methods. Mr. Shreve (Sp)

2. Earth History. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours; fieldwork. Enforced requisite: course 1 or 1H. Methods of historical science; consideration of special problems related to physical and biological evolution of Earth from earliest time to the present. Mr. Ingersoll (W)

5. Earth Science and Society: Geological Ecological Interactions. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours; field trips. Geologic aspects of major environmental problems, with emphasis on lithosphere/biosphere interactions. Problems of exploration and exploitation of fossil fuel resources. Comparison of society-produced materials and natural cycles. Ms. Reid (W)

6. Earthquakes. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Causes and effects of earthquakes, with special emphasis on problems of living with earthquakes in Southern California. Topics include relationship between earthquakes and local and regional geology, types of earthquakes, past and future earthquakes in California, earthquake engineering, disaster preparedness, and prospects for predicting or controlling earthquakes. (F,W,Sp)

9. Origin and Evolution of Solar System. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Properties of sun, planets, asteroids, and comets. Astronomical observations relevant to understanding the solar system and its origin. Dynamical problems, including examination of fallacious hypotheses. Meteoritic evidence regarding earliest history of the solar system. Chemical models of solar nebula. Space exploration and its planning. (F,W,Sp)

15. Introduction to Oceanography. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Not open for credit to students with credit for Biology 25. Processes responsible for chemical composition of ocean and current circulation patterns. Seafloor spreading and morphology of ocean floor. Biological productivity, marine ecology, and minerals forming in the ocean. (F)

16. Major Events in History of Life. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Designed for nonmajors. History of life on Earth as revealed through the fossil record. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Schopf (F)

17. Dinosaurs and Their Relatives. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours; one optional field trip. Designed for nonmajors. Exploration of biology, evolution, and extinction of dinosaurs and close relatives, in context of history of biosphere. Information from paleontology, biology, and geology. Mr. Marshall (W)

20. Natural History of Southern California. Lecture, one hour; laboratory, three hours; four field weekends; outside study, eight hours. Identification, distribution, diversity of native plants and communities; identification and interpretation of rocks, minerals, and geologic features and geologic history of physiographic regions of Southern California. Emphasis on field-based learning. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Hall (Sp)

51A. Mineralogy-Lithology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours. Enforced requisite: course 1 or 1H. Recommended: completion of chemistry requirement. Mineralogic crystal chemistry; relation of physical properties to structure. Structural classification and petrogenesis of major minerals and rocks. Laboratory study of crystallography and identification of minerals and igneous, sedimentary, and metamorphic rocks in hand sample. Mr. Dollase (F)

51B. Optical Mineralogy-Petrography. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours. Enforced requisite: course 51A. Preparation: one introductory high school or college physics course. Principles of optical crystallography. Utilization of optical properties to identify nonopaque minerals in immersion media and in thin section. Study of common igneous, sedimentary, and metamorphic rocks in thin section. Mr. Dollase (W)

51. Elements of Field Geology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, three hours; fieldwork, one day per week. Enforced requisites: courses (1 or 1H) and 2. Majors must have completed or be concurrently enrolled in course 51B. Techniques of geologic mapping; preparation of geologic reports; methods of mapping faults and folds, sedimentary, igneous, and metamorphic terrains, and Quaternary deposits; introduction to field methods in engineering and environmental geology, petroleum geology, and mining geology and mineral exploration; interpretation of geologic maps; field exercises in pace-and-compass topographic and geologic mapping. Mr. Ingersoll (Sp)

Upper Division Courses

100. Principles of Earth Science. Lecture, three hours. Designed for nonmajors. Not open to students with credit for course 1 or 1H. Fundamentals of physical geology and Earth history; major problems of geology, such as continental drift and development of large-scale features of Earth; physical and biological evolution.

103A. Igneous Petrology (6 units). Lecture, two to three hours; laboratory, six hours; field trips. Prerequisites: courses 51A, 51B, Chemistry 11B, Mathematics 31B, Physics 8B. Recommended: Mathematics 32A. Mineralogy, chemical composition, and field occurrence of igneous rocks with reference to their origin by melting in earth. Introduction to thermodynamics as applied to petrology. Formation of magma, its movement, eruption, crystallization, and chemical evolution. Petrologic structure of the crust and mantle and its relation to seismology. Overview of petrological and chemical evolution of Earth, moon, and other planets from their origin to the present. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Reid (Sp)

103B. Sedimentary Petrology. Lecture, two to three hours; laboratory, six hours; field trips. Prerequisite: course 103A. Recommended: course 61. Study of sedimentary rocks based on characteristics of sedimentary particles and dynamics of depositional processes. Lectures focus on development of depositional facies models, and laboratories emphasize recognition of sedimentary deposits from each major depositional facies. Mr. Reed (F)

103C. Metamorphic Petrology. Lecture, two to three hours; laboratory, six hours; field trips. Prerequisite: course 103B. Interpretation of metamorphic rocks based on field occurrence, mineralogical composition, texture, and application of physical and chemical principles. Mr. Manning (Sp)

C106. Physical Geochemistry. Lecture, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Prerequisite: course 51B or equivalent. Basic principles of physical chemistry for geologic applications. Thermodynamics and kinetics of reactions among minerals, natural waters, and magmas; construction and interpretation of phase diagrams; case studies of important geochemical and environmental issues. Concurrently scheduled with course C206. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Manning

C107. Geochemistry. (Formerly numbered 131.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: junior, senior, or graduate standing in physical sciences or consent of instructor. Origin and abundance of the elements and their isotopes; distribution and chemistry of the elements in Earth and its environment. Concurrently scheduled with course C207. P/NP or letter grading. (Alternates yearly with courses C109/C209.)

C109. Isotope Geochemistry. (Formerly numbered C130.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: junior, senior, or graduate standing in physical or biological sciences or consent of instructor. Theoretical aspects of isotope behavior: stable and radiogenic isotopes. Principles of geochronology. Use of isotopes as tracers in crust and mantle processes. Stable isotopes as indicators of environment and paleoclimate. Concurrently scheduled with course C209. P/NP or letter grading. (Alternates yearly with courses C107/C207.) Ms. Reid (Sp)

111. Stratigraphic and Field Geology (6 units). Lecture, two hours; laboratory, three hours; fieldwork, one day per week. Prerequisite: course 61 or consent of instructor. Principles of stratigraphy; geologic mapping of a selected area; preparation of a geologic report. Mr. Hall (W)

111G. Field Geology (2 to 4 units). Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. Geologic mapping, principles of stratigraphy, structural geology, and map interpretation. Mr. Hall (W)

112. Structural Geology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisite: course 1 or consent of instructor. Recommended: course 51B. Planar and linear structures at different scales in sedimentary, metamorphic, and igneous rocks. Faults and folds, their description, classification, and kinematic and dynamic analysis. Deformation, strength, fracture, and rheological properties of rocks. Mr. Yin (F)

116. Paleontology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours; field trips. Prerequisite: Biology 5 or consent of instructor. Review of major groups of fossil organisms and their significance in geology and biology. Mr. Runnegar (W)

119. Continental Drift and Plate Tectonics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: upper division standing and one introductory geology course (course 1, 1H, 100, or equivalent), or consent of instructor. Classical concepts of sedimentation and tectonics. Alfred Wegener's theory of continental drift and ensuing controversy. Physiography of continents and oceans. Geophysical evidence regarding nature of ocean floor. Magnetic stratigraphy. Seafloor spreading. Plate tectonic model and its driving mechanisms. Tectonic, igneous, and metamorphic processes at plate boundaries. Mr. Bires (Sp)

120. Rubey Colloquium: Major Advances in Earth Science. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Lectures on major advances in Earth science offered by distinguished authorities (including regular faculty). Supervision of continuity and assessment of student performance by a faculty member. Content varies from year to year. If laboratory work is required, course 199 must be taken concurrently.

C126. Advanced Igneous Petrology. (Formerly numbered C132.) Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours; field trips. Prerequisite: course 103A or consent of instructor. Understanding the genesis of igneous rocks based on geochemical, tectonophysical, and other geological evidence and principles. Concurrently scheduled with course C226. P/NP or letter grading.

129. Hydrogeology. (Formerly numbered 129A-129B.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 1 or 1H or 100 or equivalent, upper division standing. Hydrogeologic controls of groundwater occurrence, movement, quality, and management. Hydrologic equation, groundwater/surface water relationships, water wells, pumping tests, pollution, artificial recharge, seawater intrusion, safe yield of groundwater basins, groundwater models. Mr. Hallinger

133. Regional Geology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisites: courses 61 and 111, or consent of instructor. Application of geologic, stratigraphic, paleontologic, biologic, and climatic principles to a specific province or provinces. Emphasis on tectonic evolution of selected regions. Mr. Davidson (Sp)

134. Computing in Earth and Space Sciences. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: Program in Computing 3 or 10A or consent of instructor. Original programming and application of software to generate and test hypotheses with non-ideal or incomplete data sets. Interpolation/extrapolation with graphics to generate hypotheses; forward modeling from fundamental equations to explore implications; probabilistic testing of models against data. Examples and exercises from the Earth and space sciences. Introduction to software used in research and industry. Mr. Bird (F)

135. Introduction to Applied Geophysics. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, one hour. Prerequisites: Physics 8A, 8B, 8C or 6B, Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, and Program in Computing 3 or 10A, or consent of instructor. Not open for credit to students with credit for course 136A. Principles and techniques of gravimetric, seismic, magnetic, and other geophysical methods of exploration for ores, petroleum, and other economic minerals. Mr. Jackson (Sp)

136A. Applied Geophysics. Lecture, three hours; laboratory/field trips, three hours. Prerequisites: Physics 8A, 8B, 8C, 8D, Mathematics 33A, Program in Computing 3 or 10A. Not open for credit to students with credit for course 135. Seismic reflection and refraction, Fourier analysis and deconvolution, vibroseis, synthetic seismograms, marine seismics, seismic interpretation, gravity and magnetic fields, inversion uniqueness and depth rules. Mr. Davis (Sp)

136C. Field Geophysics (6 units). Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour; laboratory, two hours; fieldwork, 10 hours. Prerequisites: course 135 or 136A, consent of instructor. Application of seismic, gravimetric, magnetic, electrical, and other geophysical methods to geologic and engineering problems. Practical aspects of geophysical exploration, including planning, data collection, data reduction, and interpretation. Fieldwork on unsolved problems (week-long field trip). Mr. Davis (Sp)

136D. Advanced Field Geophysics (6 units). Lecture, six hours; laboratory, six hours; fieldwork, 12 hours. Prerequisites: course 135 or 136A, consent of instructor. Application of seismic reflection, seismic refraction, gravity, magnetic, electrical, and electromagnetic methods to geologic problems. Planning, data collection, data reduction, and interpretation. Use of computer in applied geophysics. Mr. Davis, Mr. Jackson (Sum, six weeks)

137. Petroleum Geology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 61 and 111, or consent of instructor. Geology applied to exploration for and production of natural gas and petroleum; techniques of surface and subsurface geology; problems of petroleum geology. Mr. Hallinger (Sp)

139. Engineering and Environmental Geology. Lecture, two and one-half hours. Prerequisite: course 1 or 100. Recommended: course 111. Principles and practice of soil mechanics and foundation engineering in light of geologic conditions, recognition, prediction, and control or abatement of subsidence, landslides, earthquakes, and other geologic aspects of urban planning and subsurface disposal of liquids and solid wastes. Mr. Merifield (W)

140. Introduction to Fluid Dynamics. (Same as Atmospheric Sciences CM140.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Corequisite: Physics 131. Equations of fluid motion. Circulation theorems. Irrotational flow. Vortex motion. Rotating frame. Hydrostatic and geostrophic balance. Sound and shock waves. Viscous flow. Mr. Mechoso (F)

141. Basin Analysis. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisites: courses 103B, 111. Interpretation of sedimentary rock records in terms of tectonics and basin evolution. Sedimentary patterns in modern plate settings serve to focus interpretations of deformed rocks in complex structural regions. Mr. Ingersoll (F)

150. Remote Sensing for Earth Sciences. Lecture, three hours. Open to upper division and graduate students. Remote sensing related to development of natural resources. Characteristics of electromagnetic spectrum and review of remote sensing devices. Applicability to land-use classification, soil survey, urban studies, vegetation classification; emphasis on geologic interpretation of imagery. Mr. Sabins (W)

152. Physics of the Earth. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: Physics 8A, 8B, 8C, Mathematics 31A, 31B, and 32A, or consent of instructor. Application of physics to structure and evolution of the solid Earth. Seismology, convection and heat flow, gravity, geomagnetism, rock magnetism, and relation of these topics to plate tectonics and other problems of current geophysical interest. Mr. Anderson (W)

153. Oceans and Atmospheres. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: Physics 8A, 8B, 8C, Mathematics 31A, 31B, and 32A, or consent of instructor. Physics and chemistry of Earth's oceans and atmosphere; origin and evolution of planetary atmospheres; biogeochemical cycles, atmospheric radiation and climate, energetics and dynamics of oceanic and atmospheric circulation systems. P/NP or letter grading.

154. Solar Terrestrial Physics. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite or corequisite: Physics 110B. Particle and electromagnetic emissions from the sun under quiet and under disturbed conditions. Solar wind. Magnetospheres and ionospheres of Earth and other planets. Geomagnetic phenomena and the aurora. Mr. Russell (F)

155. Planetary Physics. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, Physics 8A, 8B, and 8C, or consent of instructor. Formation of solar nebula; origin of planets and their satellites; comets, asteroids, and meteorites; celestial mechanics and dynamics; physics of planetary interiors, surfaces, and atmospheres. Mr. Paige (Sp)

195G. Field Geology for Graduate Students (2 to 4 units). Lecture, two hours; four to five field trips. Prerequisite: course 121B or equivalent or consent of instructor. Required of new graduate students in geology program. Advanced techniques in field geologic mapping, exposing students to igneous, metamorphic, and sedimentary terranes with varying amounts of tectonism. May be repeated for credit. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Reed (F)

199. Special Studies in Earth and Space Sciences (2 to 8 units). May be repeated for credit.

199H. Honors Research in Earth and Space Sciences. Prerequisites: senior standing, consent of departmental honors committee. Individual research designed to broaden and deepen students' knowledge of some phase of Earth and space sciences.

Graduate Courses

200C. Introduction to Geophysics and Space Physics III: Plasmas — Aeronomy and the Interplanetary Medium. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: Physics 105A, 110B, 112, and 131, or consent of instructor. Solar surface features, heating and expansion of corona, solar wind, plasma and magnetic fields, interaction of the solar wind with Earth, magnetospheric phenomena. Ms. Kivelson (W)

201. Classical Mechanics. Lecture, three hours. Kinematics, variational principles and Lagrange equations, rotational dynamics. Hamilton equations of motion, linear and nonlinear perturbation theory, applications to solar system.

202. Continuum Mechanics. Lecture, three hours. Kinematics and dynamics of continuous media. Properties of stress, strain, and rate-of-strain tensors. Conservation laws. Elasticity and viscosity. Heat transfer, boundary layers, and dynamical similarity. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Newman (F)

203. Electrodynamics. Prerequisite: upper division electromagnetic theory course or consent of instructor. Maxwell equations and boundary conditions; momentum, angular momentum, and energy of electromagnetic fields; plane electromagnetic and magneto-hydrodynamic waves; wave guides, simple radiating systems, and diffraction.

204. Time-Series Analysis and Spectral Estimation. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: intermediate courses in calculus (including linear algebra and complex variables) and computer programming (including FORTRAN). Basic methods in time-series analysis, including spectral estimation, prediction, and signal detection, in application to problems in geophysics, atmospheric physics, and space physics. Topics include Fourier transforms (continuous, discrete, FFT), time series (Z-transforms, deconvolution), maximum entropy spectral analysis, autoregressive and moving average methods (AR, MA, ARMA), and multichannel prediction and spectral analysis. Mr. Newman (Sp)

205. Inverse Theory and Data Interpretation. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: Mathematics 115A, M150A-150B, and 151, or consent of instructor. Inverse modeling problem — determination of model parameters consistent with experimental data, considering effects of random errors and nonuniqueness. Emphasis on linear and quasi-linear problems; nonlinear problems also discussed. Tools used include matrix theory, quadratic forms, orthogonal rotations, statistics, principal axis transformation for rectangular matrices, Bachus/Gilbert resolving kernels, and Lagrange multipliers. Examples from a broad range of physical sciences. Mr. Jackson (W)

C206. Physical Geochemistry. Lecture, three hours; outside study, nine hours. Prerequisite: course 51B or equivalent. Basic principles of physical chemistry for geologic applications. Thermodynamics and kinetics of reactions among minerals, natural waters, and magmas; construction and interpretation of phase diagrams; case studies of important geochemical and environmental issues. Concurrently scheduled with course C106. Additional independent research project and oral presentation required of graduate students. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Manning

C207. Geochemistry. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: junior, senior, or graduate standing in physical sciences or consent of instructor. Origin and abundance of the elements and their isotopes; distribution and chemistry of the elements in Earth and its environment. Concurrently scheduled with course C107. Additional homework and class presentation required of graduate students. S/U or letter grading. (Alternates yearly with courses C109/C209.)

208. Geothermics. Lecture, two and one-half hours; discussion, 30 minutes. Prerequisite: Mathematics 33A or consent of instructor. Basic concepts of heat transfer applied to solutions of geological and geophysical problems, including continental heat flow, cooling of oceanic lithosphere, solidification of magmas, thermal and subsidence history of sedimentary basins, frictional heating on fault zones, mantle geotherms, temperature in descending slabs, thermal convection in geothermal regions. Mr. Schubert

C209. Isotope Geochemistry. (Formerly numbered C232.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: junior, senior, or graduate standing in physical or biological sciences or consent of instructor. Theoretical aspects of isotope behavior: stable and radiogenic isotopes. Principles of geochronology. Use of isotopes as tracers in crust and mantle processes. Stable isotopes as indicators of environment and paleoclimate. Concurrently scheduled with course C109. Additional literature survey, which may result in class presentation, expected of graduate students. S/U or letter grading. (Alternates yearly with courses C107/C207.) Ms. Reid (Sp)

219. Planetary and Orbital Dynamics. Planetary rotations, satellite orbits, and tidal dissipation; planetary orbital system; resonance effects and chaos; spin-orbit and orbit-orbit coupling; planetary rings. Mr. Kaula (W)

220. Principles of Paleobiology. Lecture/discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing in science. Open to qualified undergraduates in biological and physical sciences with consent of instructor. Current and classic problems in paleobiology, with emphasis on interdisciplinary problems involving aspects of biology, geology, organic geochemistry, and cosmology. Content varies from year to year. May be repeated for credit. Mr. Marshall

221. Field Geology. Lecture, one hour; discussion, one hour; fieldwork, 10 days. Prerequisites: course 121B, or 195G and consent of instructor. Planning, execution, and presentation of geologic mapping projects at professional level. Resolution of problems in Southern California geology from synthesis of new and published research. Field area varies from year to year. May be repeated for credit. Mr. Yin

222. Introduction to Seismology. Lecture, three hours. Types of seismic waves; travel-time seismology; epicenter location; amplitude variations; seismograph theory; explosion seismology; seismicity; focal conditions; surface wave analysis; microseisms and tsunamis. Mr. Davis

M224A. Elastodynamics. (Same as Mechanical, Aerospace, and Nuclear Engineering M257A.) Lecture, four hours; outside study, eight hours. Prerequisites: Mechanical, Aerospace, and Nuclear Engineering 256A and M256B, or consent of instructor. Equations of linear elasticity, Cauchy equation of motion, constitutive relations, boundary and initial conditions, principle of energy. Sources and waves in unbounded isotropic, anisotropic, and dissipative solids. Half-space problems. Guided waves in layered media. Applications to dynamic fracture, nondestructive evaluation (NDE), and mechanics of earthquakes. Mr. Knopoff (W)

M224B. Elastic Wave Propagation II. (Same as Mechanical, Aerospace, and Nuclear Engineering M257B.) Prerequisite: course M224A. Diffraction and scattering of elastic waves by isolated cracks and inclusions; normal mode theories for vibration of finite elastic bodies; dynamic theories of fracture; representative applications in engineering and seismology.

225A. Physics and Chemistry of Planetary Interiors I. Chemical compositions of Earth and planets; high-pressure and temperature effects, phase transitions, and equations of state; variations of density and temperature with depth; thermal and compositional evolution. Mr. Anderson

225B. Physics and Chemistry of Planetary Interiors II. Lateral inhomogeneities in Earth: seismic velocities, petrology, geothermal and gravitational variations; evidences of motion; remanent magnetism, seismic motions; postglacial rebound; plate tectonics; rheology of mantle; thermal convection. Mr. Schubert

226. Advanced Igneous Petrology. (Formerly numbered C236.) Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours; field trips. Prerequisite: course 103A or graduate standing or consent of instructor. Understanding the genesis of igneous rocks based on geochemical, tectonophysical, and other geological evidence and principles. Concurrently scheduled with course C126. Graduate students required to read more recommended references, make class presentations on particular topics resulting from that reading, and lead seminar-type discussions on their selected topics. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Davidson

229. Planetary Atmospheres. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 200B or consent of instructor. Planetary atmospheric structure, dynamics, and composition. Topics include spacecraft observations; origin and evolution of atmospheres; photochemistry, radiation mechanisms, and transport; atmospheric waves and general circulation; wave-mean flow and turbulence; remote sensing and inversion techniques. Mr. Newman

230. X-Ray Crystallography. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: course 51B. Point, translation, and space group symmetry, diffraction of X-ray, reciprocal lattice theory, single crystal X-ray methods, diffraction symmetry and elementary crystal structure analysis. (Alternates yearly with course 231.) Mr. Dollase (F)

231. Crystal Chemistry and Structure of Minerals. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: course 51B. Bonding, interatomic configurations, polymorphic transformations, isotypism, thermal and positional disorder; survey of structures of common minerals, and relation of physical and chemical properties to crystal structure. (Alternates yearly with course 230.)

233. Mineral Physics and Equations of State. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Interrelationship of physical properties of rock-forming minerals: optical reflectivity, refraction index, sound velocity, elastic constants, specific heat, and thermal expansivity. Determination of pressure, volume, and temperature relationships and planet-forming compounds. Variation of elastic constants with temperature and pressure. Application of shock-wave experiments to equations of state. Mr. Anderson (Sp)

234A. Thermodynamic and Geometric Principles of Phase Equilibria. Prerequisites: course 51B and Chemistry 110B, or consent of instructor. Thermodynamic bases of phase transformations and of phase rules. Geometric representation of multicomponent systems using pressure, temperature, chemical potential, molal volume, and fugacity of oxygen, water, and other volatile components as variable parameters.

235A-235B-235C. Current Research in Geochemistry (1 unit each). Prerequisite: graduate standing in Earth and space sciences. Seminars presented by staff, outside speakers, and graduate students stressing current research in Earth and planetary chemistry. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

237. Geochemistry of Solutions. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 103A, 103C, Chemistry 110A, and 110B, or consent of instructor. Classical thermodynamics applied to mineral solutions, silicate melts, and low- and high-temperature aqueous solutions and gases. Chemical kinetics and its application to geologic problems.

238. Metamorphic Petrology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisite: one introductory petrology and petrography course or consent of instructor. Interpretation of metamorphic rocks in light of observation, theory, and experiment. Geological relations, petrographic evidence, metamorphic zoning, thermodynamics of phase equilibria, projections, chemographic relationships, use of piezobirefringent haloes, Rayleigh depletion model, isotopic fractionation, environmental factors of metamorphism. Laboratory study of representative metamorphic rocks and suites of rocks selected to illustrate topics discussed in lectures.

239. Structural Petrology of Deformed Rocks. Discussion, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 51B, 112. Recommended: courses 245A-245B, 249. Use of universal stage. Microscopic study of textures, structures, and preferred orientations of minerals in tectonites. Deformation mechanisms in crystals and aggregates. Theories of development of preferred orientation. Application of experimental data to interpretation of microfabrics. (Alternates yearly with course 249.)

240. Space Plasma Physics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 203 or Physics 210A. Physics of plasmas in space, including treatments based on magnetohydrodynamics and kinetic theory. Applications to solar or planetary winds; steady-state magnetospheres; magnetospheric convection; substorm processes; magnetic merging; field-aligned currents and magnetosphere/ionosphere coupling; ring current dynamics; and wave particle instabilities. Ms. Kivelson, Mr. Russell (Sp)

241. Sedimentary Petrology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, six hours. Prerequisites: courses 51B, 103B. Texture, composition, structure, and modes of origin of sedimentary rocks. Content varies from year to year.

242. Sandstone Petrology. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, four hours. Prerequisite or corequisite: course 141. Petrographic study of sandstones, with emphasis on provenance, petrofacies, and paleotectonic reconstructions. Mr. Ingersoll (F)

M243A-M243B-M243C. Advanced Evolutionary Biology. (Same as Biology M231A-M231B-M231C.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Series of advanced studies of concepts and methods in evolutionary biology. Topics may include speciation, extinction, coevolution, fossil record, rates of evolution, contributions of molecular biology in evolutionary studies, and development of evolutionary thought. Students encouraged to take each course in sequence. Themes vary from year to year. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading. M243A. Mechanisms of Evolution. Prerequisites: Biology 120 and/or 135 or equivalent; M243B. Patterns of Evolution; M243C. Molecular Evolution.

244. Tectonics of Sedimentary Basins. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours; field trips. Prerequisites: courses 103B, 119. Recommended: course 141. Plate-tectonic settings of sedimentary basins. Basin analysis, stratigraphy, paleoenvironments, sedimentology, and related subjects in context of plate-tectonic controls on basin evolution. Mr. Ingersoll

245A-245B. Stress and Deformation. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: Physics 8A, 8B, Mathematics 32A, and 32B, or consent of instructor. Recommended: Mathematics 33A. Scalars, vectors, tensors; subscript notation; rotation and inversion of axes, transformation matrix; stress; finite homogeneous strain, rotation; infinitesimal strain, strain rate; Mohr's circle construction and other graphical methods; flow laws.

246. Stress in the Lithosphere. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 202 or 245A or Civil Engineering 108 or consent of instructor. Overcoming, hydrofracture, fault plane solutions, seismic stress drops; effects of erosion, cooling, Earth ellipticity, topography, and density anomalies. State of stress in plate boundaries and interiors. Application of finite element and analytic methods to stress determination. Mr. Bird (W)

247. Glaciology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 245A or equivalent or consent of instructor. Occurrence and classification of glaciers; accumulation and ablation; glacier budget; mechanical properties of ice; glacier flow; crevasses; textural and structural features; thermal relationships; bed slip; climatic response; catastrophic advances. Mr. Shreve

248. Advanced Structural Geology. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course 111. Principles governing fracture, folding, and flow of rocks; solutions of structural problems at various scales; regional tectonic problems. Mr. Yin

249. Structural Analysis of Deformed Rocks. Discussion, three hours; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 111 and 112, or consent of instructor. Recommended: course 248. Geometrical analysis of megascopic structures in terranes with complex or multiple deformations. Analysis of strain from deformed primary features. Interpretation of structural history in metamorphic terranes. (Alternates yearly with course 239.)

250. Advanced Engineering and Environmental Geology. Lecture, three hours; required field trips. Prerequisite: course 139 or consent of instructor. Current topics in engineering and environmental geology, including slope stability, hazardous waste disposal, grading codes, slip rates and recurrence intervals of active faults, computer and remote sensing applications, and case histories. Offered irregularly according to demand.

251. Seminar: Mineralogy. Lecture, three hours. Examination of groups of rock-forming minerals (e.g., feldspars), integrating such aspects as crystal structure, crystal chemistry, phase equilibria, and petrogenesis. Mr. Dollase

252. Seminar: Geochemistry. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Phase equilibria under crustal conditions, chemistry of ocean waters, recent and ancient sediments, structure and chemistry of upper mantle, geochronology, cosmochronology, and cosmochemistry. Mr. Wasson

253. Seminar: Petrology. Lecture, three hours. Problems of igneous or metamorphic petrology: methods of evaluating physical conditions of metamorphism; diffusion in mineralogical systems; origin of ultramafic rocks and problems of the mantle; element fractionation among coexisting phases; other current subjects in the field. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Manning (Sp)

254. Seminar: Sedimentology. Lecture, three hours. Processes of sediment transport and deposition; deep sea sediments; deltas and estuaries; petrology of carbonates, sandstones, and lutites; stratigraphy; paleoenvironmental studies.

255. Seminar: Structural Geology and Tectonics. Lecture, three hours. Flow and fracture in Earth's crust from microscopic to continental scale and in experiments. Examples may include metamorphic terranes, glaciers, plutons, volcanoes, and consolidated or unconsolidated sediments. Modern concepts of oceanic basins; processes leading to segregation of continental-type rocks.

256. Seminar: Glaciology and Geomorphology. Lecture, three hours. Glacier physics, theoretical geomorphology, river mechanics, statistical models. Mr. Shreve (W)

257. Seminar: Paleontology. Lecture/discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced topics in paleobiology, biostratigraphy, paleoecology, and paleobiogeography, with emphasis on relations to other disciplines. Mr. Marshall, Mr. Schopf (F,W)

258. Seminar: Mineral Deposits. Lecture, three hours. Problems of distribution, composition, and formation of mineral deposits; mineral economics; investigations of opaque minerals by microscopic or other techniques.

259. Seminar: Paleotectonics. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: course 244 or consent of instructor. Basin evolution and paleogeography, with emphasis on the Phanerozoic of the Western U.S. Mr. Ingersoll

260. Seminar: Advanced Topics in Geology (2 to 4 units). Topics vary. May be repeated for credit.

261. Topics in Magnetospheric Plasma Physics. Lectures, discussions, and exercises on specific advanced topics in magnetospheric plasma physics. Previous courses examined magnetic storms, magnetospheric substorms, ultralow frequency waves, and adiabatic particle motion in Earth's radiation belts. Mr. McPherron (W)

265. Instrumentation, Data Processing, and Data Analysis in Space Physics. Lecture, three hours. Principles, testing, and operations of magnetometers and other instruments. Data processing, display, and archiving. Time-series analysis techniques, including filtering. Fourier series, eigenanalysis, and power spectra. Mr. Russell

268. Seminar: Resource Analysis. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Geological, geophysical, economic, and technological factors in studies of optimum use of mineral and energy resources. Emphasis on different mineral or energy sources from time to time.

M270A-M270B-M270C. Seminars: Climate Dynamics (2 to 4 units each). (Same as Atmospheric Sciences M272A-M272B-M272C and Geography M270A-M270B-M270C.) Lecture, two hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Archaeological, geochemical, micropaleontological, and stratigraphic evidence for climate change throughout the geological past. Rheology and dynamics of climatic subsystems: atmosphere and oceans, ice sheets and marine ice, lithosphere and mantle. Climate of other planets. Modeling, simulation, and prediction of modern climate on monthly, seasonal, and interannual time scale. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading. (F,W,Sp)

282. Seminar: Geophysics. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Seismology, geophysical prospecting, electromagnetic prospecting. Selected topics in Earth physics. Content varies from year to year. May be repeated for credit.

M285. Origin and Evolution of Solar System. (Same as Astronomy M285.) Dynamical problems of solar system; chemical evidences from geochemistry, meteorites, and solar atmosphere; nucleosynthesis; solar origin, evolution, and termination; solar nebula, hydromagnetic processes, formation of planets and satellite systems. Content varies from year to year. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

286A-286B-286C. Seminars: Planetology (2 units each). Problems of current interest concerning moon, planets, and meteorites. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

287A-287B-287C. Seminars: Seismology and Earth's Interior (2 units each). Problems of current interest in seismology and Earth's interior. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

M288A-M288B-M288C. Seminars: Space Physics (2 units each). (Same as Atmospheric Sciences M275A-M275B-M275C.) Lecture, one hour. Problems of current interest concerning particles and fields in space. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading. (F,W,Sp)

289A-289B-289C. Seminars: Fluid Dynamics (2 units each). Problems of current interest in fluid dynamics, with emphasis on geophysical applications. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

290. Seminar: Time-Series Analysis (2 units). Discussion, three hours. Discussion of recent research in spectral estimation, filtering, and signal detection applied to geophysical problems. S/U grading.

Mr. Jackson (Sp)

295A-295B-295C. Current Research in Earth and Space Sciences (1 unit each). Prerequisite: graduate standing in Earth and space sciences. Seminars presented by outside speakers, staff, and/or graduate students describing current research. Written reports required. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

Mr. Bird, Mr. Yin

296A-296Z. Research Topics in Earth and Space Sciences (1 unit each). Discussion, one to three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing in Earth and space sciences or consent of instructor. Advanced study and analysis of current topics in Earth and space sciences. Discussion of current research and literature in research specialty of faculty member teaching course. S/U grading:

296A. Rock Deformation, Structural Geology, Tectonics. Mr. Christie

296B. Volcanology and Geochemistry of Volcanic Rocks. Mr. Davidson

296C. Seismology and Solid Earth Physics. Mr. Davis

296D. Thermal Evolution of Lithosphere. Mr. Harrison

Scope and Objectives

The Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures aims to provide students with an exposure to the rich cultural heritage of China, Japan, Korea, and India. This is accomplished through courses in language, literature, religion, thought, archaeology, and other aspects of culture. For undergraduates the department offers a program leading to the B.A. degree in Chinese or Japanese, in which the emphasis is on the language and culture of China or Japan. The language program aims to develop the four skills of speaking, aural comprehension, reading, and writing in a balanced and mutually supportive manner.

At the graduate level, the department offers a program leading to an M.A. degree in several fields of East Asian culture. The program aims to give students a solid mastery of these fields preparatory to careers in teaching or in areas such as journalism, business, banking, or government service. The Ph.D. program, which is very selective, trains research scholars for academic careers in specialized fields.

Classes for Nonmajors

The department offers the following courses in which knowledge of Asian languages is not required: Chinese 50, 150, 151, 160, 175, 190, East Asian Languages and Cultures 60, 61, 88, 161, 162, Indic 175, Japanese 50, 88, 90, 150, 151, 160, 161, 175, M182, Korean 50, 150, 151, 160, 175, 180A, 180B, 180C.

Buddhist Courses

The department also offers the following courses in Buddhism: Chinese 160, 165, 265A-265B, East Asian Languages and Cultures 60, 61, 161, 162, 265A-265B, Japanese 160, 165, 265A-265B, Korean 160, 165, 265A-265B.

Bachelor of Arts in Chinese

Preparation for the Major

Required: Chinese 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 50, History 9C, and 11A or 11B. Recommended: Anthropology 9, Chinese 110A, and English 4.

The Major

Required: A total of 11½ courses, of which seven must be upper division language courses, including at least two vernacular language courses from Chinese 100A, 100B, 100C, 101A, 101B, 101C, and at least four classical language courses from 110A, 110B, 110C, 140A, 140B, 140C, 165.

The remaining four and one-half required courses must include Chinese 150 or 151; one course from 160, 175, 190; East Asian Languages and Cultures 199 (at least two units in the senior year); Art History C115D, C115E, or C115F; and either History 182A, 182B, 183A, 183B, or 184.

English 95A, 95B, 95C, and additional courses in Chinese history are recommended. Students planning to undertake graduate study are urged to include in their undergraduate program additional courses in classical Chinese and beginning courses in Japanese or Korean. Those planning to undertake advanced graduate study are urged to gain a reading knowledge of French or German.

Bachelor of Arts in Japanese

Preparation for the Major

Required: Japanese 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 50, History 9C, and 11A or 11B. Recommended: Anthropology 9 and English 4.

The Major

Required: A total of 12½ courses, of which seven must be upper division language courses selected from Japanese 100A, 100B, 100C, 130A, 130B, 140A, 140B, 140C, C149. The seven courses must include 100B and 130A or 130B.

The remaining five and one-half required courses must include Japanese 120 or CM122 or CM123; 150 or 151; one course from 160 or 175; East Asian Languages and Cultures 199 (at least two units in the senior year); Art History

114C; and either History 187A, 187B, or 187C.

English 95A, 95B, 95C, and additional courses in Japanese history are recommended. Students planning to undertake graduate study are urged to include in their undergraduate program three courses in classical Japanese and beginning courses in Chinese or Korean. Those planning to undertake advanced graduate study are urged to gain a reading knowledge of French or German.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

To qualify for admission you are expected to (1) meet general University requirements for the undergraduate major, (2) have taken a minimum of three quarter courses or the equivalent in classical Chinese (for Chinese majors), classical Japanese (for Japanese majors), or a minimum of three years of modern Korean (for Korean majors), and (3) present a B.A. degree from a Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures similar to UCLA's. Applicants with a B.A. in another field or from departments whose requirements are less rigorous are admitted to the Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures (B316 Murphy Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1540) only if they can meet the requisite standards within one year. Selection is based on (1) prior scholastic performance, (2) recommendations by professors, (3) score on the Graduate Record Examination (GRE), (4) statement of purpose focusing on research interests, and (5) an undergraduate term paper or comparable writing sample in English.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

M.A. students may specialize in Chinese language and culture, Japanese language and culture, or Korean language and culture. A comparative or interdisciplinary field may be incorporated into an area of specialization.

Language Requirements

Students majoring in Chinese must have completed one year of Japanese or Korean with a grade of S or better; those majoring in Japanese must have completed one year of classical or modern Chinese or Korean with a grade of S or better; those majoring in Korean must have completed one year of Chinese or Japanese with a grade of S or better. This requirement may be fulfilled before admission to the M.A. program.

Course Requirements

Nine courses (36 units minimum) are required for the degree, of which six (24 units minimum) must be graduate courses. Chinese 200 is required for the Chinese major; Japanese 200 is required for the Japanese major; Korean 200 is required for the Korean major. With departmental consent, up to two courses (eight units) taken outside the department (S/U grading is acceptable) may be applied toward the nine courses. No more than two 500-series courses (four units) may be applied toward the nine courses required for the degree; only one 500-series course may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement. Courses taken to meet admission standards and language requirements may not be applied toward the total course requirement. You must take at least one seminar in each of your comprehensive examination fields.

International students may also be required to take English as a Second Language 33A, 33B, 33C, 34, 36, or other ESL courses.

Thesis Plan

This plan is recommended if you intend to proceed to the Ph.D. After completing at least one year of graduate work with excellence, you may petition the department to present a thesis; you also must have a letter of support from a faculty member agreeing to serve as your thesis director. After your committee accepts your thesis, you must take an oral examination related to it and a translation examination in your area of specialization.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

Comprehensive examinations are offered in the literature and cultural history of China, Japan, or Korea. You are required to take an examination in each of three fields within your area of specialization, including one in a literature field. In consultation with your graduate adviser, you may replace one field with an outside field either within the department or in another department.

For the major in Chinese, you must take comprehensive examinations in three of the following fields: (1) modern Chinese literature, (2) traditional Chinese fiction and drama, (3) traditional Chinese poetry, (4) Chinese civilization or archaeology, (5) Chinese Buddhism.

For the major in Japanese, you must take comprehensive examinations in three of the following fields: (1) classical Japanese literature (poetry and prose), (2) classical Japanese culture and folklore, (3) modern Japanese literature and culture, (4) Japanese Buddhism, (5) Japanese linguistics.

For the major in Korean, you must take comprehensive examinations in three of the following fields: (1) Korean culture, (2) Korean Buddhism, (3) classical Korean poetry, (4) classical Korean fiction, (5) modern Korean literature.

You must also take a translation examination in your area of specialization, and you are required to present two seminar research papers. The results of the examinations and the quality of the papers determine whether you are admitted to the Ph.D. program.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

An M.A. degree in the field or in a related field is required. Selection among qualified applicants from outside the department is based on (1) prior scholastic performance, (2) three letters of recommendation, (3) score on the Graduate Record Examination (GRE), (4) statement of purpose focusing on research interests, and (5) a recent research paper in English. Students with an M.A. in the department are judged on their M.A. record.

International students are encouraged to complete an M.A. in the department before proceeding to the Ph.D. program.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

The department emphasizes four major fields at the Ph.D. level: (1) Chinese language and literature with the subdisciplines of poetry, drama, fiction, and modern literature; (2) Japanese language and literature with the subdisciplines of ancient, medieval, early modern, and modern literature; (3) Korean language and literature with the subdisciplines of culture, Buddhism, classical poetry and fiction, and modern literature; (4) Buddhist studies with the subdisciplines of Chinese Buddhism, Japanese Buddhism, and Korean Buddhism. A comparative or interdisciplinary field may be incorporated into an area of specialization. In addition, a program in ancient Chinese civilization or Japanese linguistics may be arranged by petition.

Foreign Language Requirement

You must demonstrate reading knowledge of French or German by passing (1) a reading examination administered by the department's foreign language examination committee, (2) the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with a score of 500 or better, or (3) a level five course with a grade of B or better or S. With the consent of the department, Russian may be substituted.

Course Requirements

Students entering the program with an M.A. in a different field, or in the same field but from another institution, must meet the standards of the department's M.A. coursework in addition to fulfilling Ph.D. course requirements. A minimum of five graduate courses (not including courses taken to meet the language requirements listed below) beyond the M.A. degree is required. In addition, students majoring in Chinese must take two years of modern Japanese with grades of S and a written examination testing their ability to translate Japanese studies in their field; those majoring in Japanese must take two years of modern Chinese, classical Chinese, or modern Korean with grades of S and a written examination testing their ability to translate Chinese or Korean studies in their field; those majoring in Korean must take two years of modern Chinese, classical Chinese, or modern Japanese with grades of S and a written examination testing their ability to translate Chinese or Japanese studies in their field. Those majoring in Buddhist studies are encouraged to take appropriate courses in Sanskrit and/or Pali. A grade of B or better or S is required for all language courses.

Qualifying Examinations

You must take written examinations as follows:

For the major in Chinese literature — (1) a general examination in Chinese literature covering modern Chinese literature, traditional fiction and drama, and traditional Chinese poetry; (2) examinations in three approved fields to be selected from at least two of the following groups: (a) Chinese poetry, Chinese fiction and drama, modern Chinese literature, (b) ancient Chinese civilization, Chinese Buddhism or another field of Chinese thought or religion, (c) an outside field from within the department, (d) a field offered in another department or interdepartmental program.

For the major in Japanese literature — (1) a general examination in Japanese literature; (2) examinations in two of the following approved fields (which cannot be from the same group): (a) ancient, medieval, early modern, or modern Japanese literature, (b) Japanese Buddhism, another field of Japanese thought or religion, or Japanese linguistics, (c) Chinese or Korean literature, (d) a field offered in another department or interdepartmental program.

For the major in Korean literature — (1) a general examination in Korean literature; (2) examinations in three approved fields to be selected from at least two of the following groups: (a) Korean poetry, Korean fiction, modern Korean literature, (b) Korean Buddhism, Korean thought, (c) Chinese or Japanese literature, (d) a field offered in another department or interdepartmental program.

For the major in Buddhist studies — (1) a general examination in your major field; (2) an examination in an approved subfield within your major field; (3) a general examination in another approved field inside or outside the department.

For the major in ancient Chinese civilization or Japanese linguistics — (1) an examination in your major language area; (2) a general examination in your major field; (3) an examination in an approved subfield within your major field; (4) a general examination in another approved field inside or outside the department.

The written qualifying examinations must be taken within a four-week period after satisfying all language and course requirements. With consent of the department, you may repeat the qualifying examinations once only. You must also take a translation examination in your area of specialization.

After successful completion of the written examinations, the department appoints a doctoral committee whose chair serves as your dissertation adviser. Preferably within six months, but no more than a year after your written examinations, you must pass the University Oral Qualifying Examination on the dissertation proposal. With department consent, you may repeat the examination once.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Dissertation/Final Oral Examination

Within three years after you have advanced to candidacy, you must present a dissertation embodying the results of independent investigation. If you fail to meet the five-year time limit for the completion of the dissertation, you are required to take the written qualifying examinations again.

A final oral defense of the dissertation is optional at the discretion of the doctoral committee.

Chinese

Lower Division Courses

No credit is allowed for completing a less advanced course after successful completion of a more advanced course in grammar and/or composition.

1. Elementary Modern Chinese. Lecture, two hours; discussion, three hours. Not open to students who have learned, from whatever source, enough Chinese to qualify for more advanced courses. ## Scope and Objectives

This undergraduate major is an area studies program of the East Asian region which is divided into three areas of concentration — China, Japan, and Korea. It offers a social science approach, combined with language study and work in the humanities.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

Two years of language and a total of 13 upper division courses, including courses in the social sciences, culture, and language, must be taken for graduation. You must take a minimum of nine courses in the area of your choice. The remainder must be taken in another area of concentration within the major. No more than eight courses may be from a single department. You should select the courses from the lists below. Courses on East Asia not listed below, offered only on a temporary basis, may also be applied toward the major. At the discretion of the adviser, you may be advised to take theory classes applicable to the major requirements.

China Concentration

Preparation for the Major: Chinese 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, History 11A-11B, Sociology 1.

The Major: A minimum of nine courses selected from Anthropology 175T*, Art History C115B, C115D, C115E, C115F, Chinese 150, 151, 160, 175, 190, and up to three upper division language courses or equivalent, Economics 190*, 191*, 192*, Ethnomusicology and Systematic Musicology 156A, 156B, 157, 158A, 158B, 158C, Geography 186, History 182A, 182B, 183A, 183B, 184, Political Science 135, 159, Sociology 188*, and a 199 special studies course in Chinese or in any social sciences or humanities department.

Japan Concentration

Preparation for the Major: History 9C, Japanese 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, Sociology 1.

The Major: A minimum of nine courses selected from Anthropology 175T*, Art History 114C, C115C, Economics 190*, 191*, 192*, Ethnomusicology and Systematic Musicology 160A, 160B, History 185, 186, 187A, 187B, 187C, Japanese 150, 151, 160, 175, M182, and up to three upper division language courses or equivalent, Political Science 136, 160, Sociology 188*, 189, Theater 102A, and a 199 special studies course in Japanese or in any social sciences or humanities department.

Korea Concentration

Preparation for the Major: Korean 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 50, Sociology 1.

The Major: A minimum of nine courses selected from Anthropology 175T*, Art History 114E, East Asian Languages and Cultures 162, Economics 190*, 191*, 192*, Korean 150, 151, 160, 175, 180A, 180B, 180C, and three upper division language courses or equivalent, Sociology 188*, Theater 102E*, and a 199 special studies course in Korean or in any social sciences or humanities department.

Scope and Objectives

UCLA's Economics Department is ranked among the 10 best in the nation according to a recent survey conducted by the Conference Board of the Associated Research Councils. Its undergraduate program is designed for students who wish to gain a thorough understanding of economic analysis. Emphasis is on economic principles applied to resolving interpersonal conflicts of interest and coordinating productive activity in a world of scarce resources. Because students must gain a thorough theoretical and technical competence before extensive study of the applied specializations in the discipline, the analytic core of the major in economics is closely structured. Some courses are appropriate for nonmajors, but the curriculum is most suitable for students who wish to make the study of economics the primary focus in their undergraduate education.

The undergraduate major provides analytical training in reference to socioeconomic phenomena and provides an excellent theoretical background for those pursuing graduate education in law, management, public administration, journalism, social welfare, architecture and urban planning, and education, as well as economics.

The graduate program is designed primarily for students pursuing the Ph.D. degree. The doctorate is awarded to those students who have achieved the level of study and training required for a professional economist. The degree recognizes students' ability to make scholarly contributions in their fields of specialization and to undertake advanced research in those areas. A Master of Arts program is also offered, which involves coursework and comprehensive examinations designed for the Ph.D. student.

Bachelor of Arts in Economics

Preeconomics Major

While you are completing the lower division preparation courses for the major, you may be classified as a preeconomics major. When you have completed the preparation courses for the major and one 12-unit term in residence at UCLA, you must petition to enter the major at the undergraduate counselor's office in 2253 Bunche Hall by the time you attain 135 quarter units.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Economics 1, 2, 11, 40 (or Statistics 50 as a substitute for course 40); English 4 or 100W or 129; Mathematics 31A, and 31B or 31E. All courses must be taken for a letter grade. A 2.0 (C) grade is required in each pre-major course. To enter the major, you must have a 2.5 grade-point average in the economics and mathematics preparation courses and a GPA of at least 2.0 in any upper division courses taken for the major.

Repetition of more than one preparation course or of any preparation course more than once results in automatic denial of admission to the major. Transfer credit for any of the above is subject to department approval; consult the undergraduate counselor before enrolling in any courses for the major.

The Major

Required: Nine upper division courses in economics which must include Economics 101, 102, and at least one course in three different fields in economics selected from the list below (all courses must be taken for a letter grade). Economics 100, 110, and 190 may not be included among the nine upper division courses. One or two of the nine courses may include Management 120A, 120B, 130A, 130B, and/or 133 (Learning Center courses or courses transferred from other institutions may not be applied toward this option).

A grade of C- or better is required in each of courses 101 and 102. In addition, you must have a 2.0 grade-point average in your upper division major courses to graduate. All upper division courses for the major must be taken for a letter grade. Transfer credit for any of the above is subject to department approval; consult the undergraduate counselor before enrolling in any courses for the major.

Major Fields

Economic theory (courses 101, 102, 103A-103Z, 104, 105AH, 105BH, 107); economic development (courses 111, 112); regional economics (courses 120, 121); public finance (courses 130, 133, M135, *M136); statistics, mathematical economics, and econometrics (courses 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147A, 147B); labor economics (courses 150, 151, 152); money and banking (courses 160, 161); government and industry (courses 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177); economic institutions (courses 180, 181A, 181B, 182, 183, 184); international economics (courses 191, 192).

Bachelor of Arts in Business Economics

This program offers students a business orientation in their undergraduate studies and is designed to prepare students for careers in business and for graduate education in business, economics, and law. The program requires students to include specific courses offered by the department and the John E. Anderson Graduate School of Management (see "The Major").

Admission

Students who did not qualify for admission to the major by the last day of Spring Quarter 1992 must follow the pre-major and major requirements listed below.

Enrollment in the program is limited. Applications for admission are handled exclusively by the Department of Economics. To apply you must have completed at least 72 quarter units (but no more than 135 quarter units), one 12-unit term in residence in regular session at UCLA, and all courses listed under "Preparation for the Major." In addition, you must (1) be enrolled in UCLA regular session at the time of application, (2) have a 2.0 (C) minimum grade in each preparation course, (3) have a 3.0 (B) overall average in all preparation courses except English, and (4) have a 2.0 (C) grade-point average in your upper division courses taken for the major before applying (excluding Economics 101).

Note: The requisite grade-point averages plus completion of the preparation for the major courses do not guarantee admission to the program. Admission is on a competitive basis, using the above qualifications as minimum standards for consideration.

Prebusiness Economics Major

While you are completing the preparation courses for the major, you may be classified as a pre-business economics major. (Transfer students who wish to enter UCLA as prebusiness economics majors must meet the admission screening requirements. For information, contact the Office of Undergraduate Admissions and Relations with Schools.) When you have completed all of the required preparation courses and have at least 72 quarter units (but no more than 135 quarter units), you must petition to enter the major at the business economics counselor's office in 2250B Bunche Hall.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Economics 1, 2, 11, 40 (or Statistics 50), 101; English 4 or 100W or 129; Management 1A-1B; Mathematics 31A, and 31B or 31E. All courses must be taken for a letter grade.

Repetition of more than one preparation course or of any preparation course more than once results in automatic denial of admission to the major. Transfer credit for any of the above is subject to department approval; consult the business economics counselor before enrolling in any courses for the major.

The Major

Required: Economics 102 and at least two courses from 104, 173, 174, 177, 184; four other upper division courses in economics in at least two different fields (no more than two may be taken in the government and industry field); four upper division courses from Management 108, 120A, 120B, 122, 123, 124, 127, 130A, 130B, 133, 140, 175. Transfer credit for any of the major courses is subject to department approval. In addition, some graduate courses from the Anderson Graduate School of Management may be applied toward the major with department consent prior to taking the courses. Consult the business economics counselor before enrolling in any courses for the major.

All upper division major courses must be taken for a letter grade. A grade of C- or better is required in each upper division major course (except for Economics 101 which is part of the premajor), and you must have a 2.0 GPA in your upper division major courses to graduate in this major.

Bachelor of Arts in Economics/International Area Studies

This program is for students who wish to attain specialized knowledge of a particular geographical area in addition to the economics analysis provided by the major. It should be useful to those who plan careers in international business or government service. The department encourages participation in the University of California Education Abroad Program or other recognized international study programs. Experience in foreign firms or institutions would be an advantage but yields no academic unit credit toward the major.

Admission

Students who did not qualify for admission to the major by the last day of Spring Quarter 1992 must follow the premajor and major requirements listed below.

Qualified students must submit written applications to the undergraduate counselor in 2253 Bunche Hall to be admitted. To apply you must have completed at least 72 quarter units, one 12-unit term in residence in regular session at UCLA, and all courses listed under "Preparation for the Major" (except for the second year of your foreign language). In addition, you must be enrolled in UCLA regular session at the time of application. All courses must be completed for a letter grade. A minimum 2.0 (C) grade is required in each premajor course, with a combined 2.5 GPA in the economics and mathematics courses. You must also have a 2.0 (C) grade-point average in your upper division courses taken for the major before applying. Language course preparation need not be completed at the time of admission but must be completed before preparing the research paper required in Economics 193. Your program as a whole must be approved by the Economics Department counselor before you are admitted to the major; you must apply before you reach 135 quarter units.

Preeconomics/International Area Studies Major

While you are completing the preparation courses for the major, you may be classified as a preeconomics/international area studies major. When you have completed the required mathematics and economics preparation courses and at least the first year of foreign language, and have at least 72 quarter units (but no more than 135 quarter units), you must petition to enter the major at the undergraduate counselor's office.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Economics 1, 2, 11, 40 (or Statistics 50), 101, 102; Mathematics 31A, and 31B or 31E. You also must complete the sixth quarter course (or equivalent) of any modern foreign language spoken in the geographical area of your major concentration.

Repetition of more than one preparation course or of any preparation course more than once results in automatic denial of admission to the major. Transfer credit for any of the above is subject to department approval; consult the undergraduate counselor before enrolling in any courses for the major.

The Major

Required: A total of 12 upper division courses selected from economics and the "Approved Noneconomics Courses" listed below for your concentration. Eight must be from economics, including Economics 191, 192, 193, and five courses from at least two different fields in economics (selected from the "Major Fields" listed under the regular economics major). Economics 101 and 102 (which are required for the premajor) cannot be used to satisfy this requirement. The four remaining upper division courses must be chosen from the approved courses listed below for your concentration and must include selections from at least two different departments. Economics 193 must be completed in your last year before graduation and includes the preparation of a research paper on the economy of the country or region of your specialization. Sources in the language of the region or country must be utilized. The noneconomics courses, the research paper, and the language learned must show consistency of purpose.

One or two courses from Management 120A, 120B, 130A, 130B, 133 may be substituted for one or two of the economics electives (Learning Center courses or courses transferred from other institutions may not be applied toward this option).

To graduate in the major you must achieve a 2.0 GPA for both economics and noneconomics courses, with a grade of C- or better in each course.

Concentrations for the Major

When you declare your major, you must also select a concentration that includes a geographical area where the foreign language you have taken is spoken, and you must complete four of the approved noneconomics courses listed, including courses from at least two different departments. You may not use courses that are not on your concentration list unless you have petitioned and received approval in advance. Consult the undergraduate counselor in 2253 Bunche Hall regarding the petition process.

(6) Individual Concentration

Language, geographical area, and non-economics courses to be approved in advance by the economics/international area studies faculty adviser

Specialization in Computing

Majors in economics, business economics, and economics/international area studies may select a specialization in computing by (1) satisfying all the requirements for a bachelor's degree in the specified major, (2) completing Program in Computing 10A, 10B, Mathematics 61, and two courses from Program in Computing 10C, 30, 60, and (3) completing at least two courses from Economics 104, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147A, 147B, 199, with the additional provision that the courses taken must make substantial use of computers. A grade of C- or better is required in each course, with a combined GPA of at least 2.0. You graduate with a bachelor's degree in your major and a specialization in computing.

Bachelor of Science in Economics/System Science

The degree is described following the Economics Department courses.

Honors Program

The departmental honors program is open to majors in economics, business economics, economics/international area studies, and economics/system science who have an overall 3.5 grade-point average.

To qualify for departmental honors at graduation, you must (1) select at least seven of the required upper division economics courses from the approved list designated for departmental honors, (2) complete a senior thesis acceptable to the departmental honors committee, (3) present your thesis in Economics 195H, and (4) complete your major requirements with at least a 3.5 GPA in the economics courses. Highest honors are awarded at the discretion of the departmental honors committee based on grade-point average and quality of the senior thesis.

Economics 195H and 199, the courses used for thesis preparation, may be counted as upper division courses toward the field in which the thesis is written (for purposes of satisfying the requirements for the major). Further information and application forms are available from the undergraduate counselor in 2253 Bunche Hall.

Graduate Study*Admission

Applicants for graduate study who satisfy the University minimum requirements are eligible to apply. It is strongly recommended that you have undergraduate training in economics, mathematics, and statistics. You must also submit a full record of prior university experience, three letters of reference, and your scores on the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) General Test and the Subject Test in Economics. International applicants must also submit scores for the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL).

The Department of Economics (2263 Bunche Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1477) admits students only for Fall Quarter of each academic year. The deadline for submitting the admission/fellowship application is December 15.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

Economic theory; econometrics; information and uncertainty; mathematical economics; monetary theory; economic history; public finance; labor economics; industrial organization; international economics; development economics.

Master of Arts Degree*Course Requirements

The department requires nine upper division and graduate-level courses in economics completed in graduate standing at UCLA. At least five of the nine courses must be graduate-level courses in the department, one of which must be either Economics 207 or 241 or 242. Each course must be completed with a grade of B or better.

With prior consent of the vice chair for graduate affairs, you may offer a maximum of two courses from outside the department; however, you must still take five graduate economics courses.

Four units of course 596 may be applied toward the total course requirement and the minimum graduate course requirement with prior consent of the vice chair for graduate affairs.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

The comprehensive examination requirement for the master's degree consists of passing two examinations and may be met in one of the following three ways:

- (1) Master's-level (M) passes in comprehensive examinations for two of the three first-year sequences and a grade of B or better in all three courses in the remaining sequence OR
- (2) Master's-level (M) passes in the comprehensive examination for one of the three first-year sequences and in one doctoral field examination OR
- (3) Master's-level (M) passes in two doctoral field examinations.

Examinations are graded H (Ph.D. honors pass), P (pass at the Ph.D. level), M (pass at the M.A. level), or F (fail).

Ph.D. Degree

The standard first-year core sequences are defined as the first-year graduate courses in microeconomic theory (Economics 201A-201B-201C), macroeconomic theory (courses 202A-202B-202C), and quantitative methods (courses 203A, 203B, 203C).

Qualifying Examinations

All Ph.D. qualifying examinations are intended to determine competency in the overall field and are not restricted solely to the material presented in course lectures or assigned exercises. Written qualifying examinations are offered in the following areas (with preparatory courses in parentheses):

Core Sequences — Microeconomic theory (Economics 201A-201B-201C); macroeconomic theory (courses 202A-202B-202C); quantitative methods (courses 203A, 203B, 203C).

Elective Doctoral Fields — Econometrics (Economics 203B, 203C, 231A, 231B, M232A, 232B); information and uncertainty (courses 211A-211B, 212A); mathematical economics (courses 213A-213B, 214A); monetary theory (courses 221A-221B); economic history (courses 241, 242); public finance (courses 251A, 251B, 252); labor economics (courses 261A-261B); industrial organization (courses 271A-271B, 271C); international economics (courses 281A, 281B, 281C); development economics (courses 286A, 286B, 287A, 287B).

Written examinations are graded H (honors pass), P (pass at the Ph.D. level), M (pass at the M.A. level), or F (fail). They can be repeated, but you may sit for no more than seven in total.

You must pass (with a P or better) the qualifying examinations for two of the first-year core sequences — microeconomic theory, macroeconomic theory, and/or quantitative methods — by the end of Spring Quarter of your second year. You must satisfy an additional requirement in the remaining first-year core sequence by either earning a Ph.D. pass on the corresponding qualifying examination or earning a grade of B or better in all three courses.

You must also pass (with a P or better) qualifying examinations in three doctoral elective fields, usually by the end of your second year, even if you passed all three first-year core sequence qualifying examinations. Contact the graduate adviser for details on a breadth option (substituting three graduate courses for one of the three elective fields).

A written paper, ideally related to your doctoral dissertation, must be completed by the end of your third year. Material from the paper may be used as the basis for your presentation in a departmental workshop (see below), as well as the basis for your dissertation proposal.

In order to be advanced to candidacy, you are required to present a paper in a departmental workshop. It is recommended that this be completed by the end of your third year.

The University Oral Qualifying Examination, administered by your doctoral committee, is scheduled after successful completion of all written qualifying examinations, course requirements, written paper and workshop requirements, and submission of a written dissertation proposal. The examination focuses on, but is not limited to, the dissertation proposal.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

A final oral examination on the doctoral dissertation is required unless it is waived by the committee that supervises the dissertation.

Lower Division Courses

1. Principles of Economics. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Not open to students with credit for course 100. Introduction to principles of economic analysis, economic institutions, and issues of economic policy. Emphasis on allocation of resources and distribution of income through the price system.

2. Principles of Economics. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Not open to students with credit for course 100. Introduction to principles of economic analysis, economic institutions, and issues of economic policy. Emphasis on aggregative economics, including national income, monetary and fiscal policy, and international trade.

5. Introductory Economics. Lecture, three hours. Not open to students with credit for course 1, 2, or 100. Principles of economics as tools of analysis. Presentation of a set of concepts with which to analyze a wide range of social problems that economic theory illuminates. May not be used to fulfill entrance requirements for any Economics Department major.

11. Microeconomic Theory. (Formerly numbered 101A.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Enforced requisites: courses 1, 2. Preparation: two calculus courses. Laws of demand, supply, returns, and costs; price and output determination in different market situations.

40. Introduction to Statistical Methods. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Not open to students with credit for Mathematics M150A-150B, 151, Statistics 50, M152A, or 152B. Elements of statistical analysis. Presentation and interpretation of data; descriptive statistics; theory of probability and basic sampling distributions; statistical inference, including principles of estimation and tests of hypotheses; introduction to regression and correlation.

Mr. Potter, Mr. Ryu

98A. Lower Division Research Seminar: Microeconomics. Discussion, three hours. Enforced requisite: course 1. Limited to 10 freshmen/sophomores. Seminar in which students do intensive research project under guidance of regular faculty. Students select topics in consultation with instructor (topics limited to material covered in course 1), write papers, and present them at the seminar.

98B. Lower Division Research Seminar: Macroeconomics. Discussion, three hours. Enforced requisite: course 2. Limited to 10 freshmen/sophomores. Seminar in which students do intensive research project under guidance of regular faculty. Students select topics in consultation with instructor (topics limited to material covered in course 2), write papers, and present them at the seminar.

99. Lower Division Seminar (2 or 4 units). Enforced requisites: courses 1 and 2 (B or better). Preparation: overall 3.0 grade-point average. Designed to provide an instructional vehicle for student research projects. May not be used to fulfill entrance requirements for any Economics Department major.

Upper Division Courses

Courses 1 and 2, or 100 are prerequisite to all upper division courses in economics.

100. Economic Principles and Problems. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Not open to students with credit for course 1, 2, or 5. Principles of economics with application to current economic problems. May not be used to fulfill entrance requirements for any Economics Department major.

101. Microeconomic Theory. (Formerly numbered 101B.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 11. Theory of factor pricing and income distribution; general equilibrium; implications of pricing process for optimum allocation of resources; interest and capital.

102. Macroeconomic Theory. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: two calculus courses or consent of instructor. Theory of income, employment, and price level. Analysis of secular growth and business fluctuations; introduction to monetary and fiscal policy. Mr. Farmer, Mr. Hansen, Mr. Thompson

103A-103Z. Upper Division Research Seminars: Applications of Economic Theory. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 11 and others as set by instructor. Limited enrollment seminars in which students usually write a research paper on a topic selected in consultation with instructor:

M103A. Political and Economic Issues in the Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons. (Same as Political Science M139A.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight or nine hours. Interdisciplinary approach to the problem of nuclear proliferation. Economic aspects of acquisition of nuclear weapons and economic aspects of nuclear energy treating technological, bargaining, and stability issues. Mr. Intriligator (alternate years)

103B. Economics of Energy. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101, 102. Topics include pricing and taxation of exhaustible resources, interactions between energy and the economy, institutions such as OPEC and oil price controls, oil debt and balance of payments, energy conservation, and future technologies.

104. Managerial Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 11. Enrollment priority to business economics students. Application of economic principles to business decisions. Allocating joint costs. Implicit costs of capacity constraints. Problems in capital budgeting, financing, and pricing. Role of interest rates in business decisions. Mr. Riley

105AH. Topics in Microeconomics (Honors). Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101, and departmental honors program standing or consent of instructor. Introduction to Walrasian and Nash equilibrium. Modeling of selected applied topics such as peak load pricing, pricing of externalities, strategic pricing. Mr. Levine

105BH. Topics in Macroeconomics (Honors). Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101, and departmental honors program standing or consent of instructor. Imperfect information-based models of monetary business cycles: theory and evidence. Real business cycle models: role of shocks and interindustrial technology structure in explaining fluctuations. Policy analysis and policy intervention in a world with rational maximizing agents: recent perspectives. Mr. Hansen

107. History of Economic Theory. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 1 or 100. Survey of economic analysis from Grecian antiquity to the early 20th century, concentrating on the 18th and 19th centuries; special attention to selected writers, including Aristotle, mercantilists, Physiocrats, Hume, Smith, Malthus, Ricardo, Marx, marginalists, and Marshall.

110. Economic Problems of Underdeveloped Countries. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 1 or 100. Limited to non-Economics Department majors. Not open for credit to students with credit for course 111 or 112. Survey of major issues of development economics. Economic structure of low-income countries and primary causes for their limited economic growth. Economic goals and policy alternatives open to their leaders. Possible roles of developed countries. May not be applied toward any Economics Department major.

111. Theories of Economic Growth and Development. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 11. Growth models, theory of production under constraints, relative factor prices and their impact on choice of technology, investment criteria, role of the market, economic planning in less developed areas. Mr. Lal

112. Policies for Economic Development. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 102 or 111. Suggested strategies for economic development: inflation, balanced growth, industry vs. agriculture, import substitution, export-oriented expansion, foreign aid, and others. Selected case studies. Mr. Lal

120. Introduction to Urban and Regional Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 11 or consent of instructor. Survey of broad range of policy and theoretical issues that are raised when economic analysis is applied in an urban setting. Topics include urbanization and urban growth, housing markets, location decisions of households and firms, transportation, urban labor markets, and local public sector.

121. Urban Economic Analysis. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101. Urban economic analysis requires development of analytical tools that are different in some respects from standard methodology presented in courses 11 and 101. Construction and implementation of these tools, with applications to urban location decisions, housing, transportation, labor markets, and local public sector.

130. Public Finance. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11 and 101, or consent of instructor. Role of government in a market economy. Alternative justifications for government intervention. Principles and effects of spending programs (especially social insurance and health), taxation, deficit financing, and federal credit programs. Taxation in an open economy. Properties of public choice mechanisms.

133. State and Local Finance. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 130. Division of functions and revenues between state and local governments; revenues, expenditures, and indebtedness of these governments. Analyses of state and local tax systems.

M135. Economic Models of Public Choice. (Same as Political Science M105.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight or nine hours. Prerequisites: course 11, any lower division political science course, and junior/senior standing, or consent of instructor. Analysis of methods and consequences of arriving at collective decisions through political mechanisms. Topics include free-rider problem, voting and majority choice, demand revelation, and political bargaining. Mr. Wallerstein

M136. Economic Models of Political Conflict and Conflict Resolution. (Same as Political Science M106.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight or nine hours. Prerequisites: course 11, any lower division political science course, and junior/senior standing, or consent of instructor. Biological, cultural, and organizational sources of political conflict. Role of threats, promises, commitments. Models of the onset and termination of conflict. Conduct of war: strategy and tactics.

141. Principles of Statistical Decision. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 40 or equivalent. Errors of first and second kind; economic loss functions; prior probabilities and Bayes theorem. Analysis of classical and Bayesian approaches. Application to inventory and production problems. Value of information and implications for sampling design. Mr. Ellickson, Mr. McCall, Mr. Ostroy

142. Probabilistic Microeconomics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101. Combination of basic probability introduced in course 40 with microeconomic models presented in courses 11 and 101 in order to explain phenomena such as insurance, job search, and stock market behavior. Optimal production and consumption under uncertainty. Review of probability and introduction to alternative measures of risk and risk aversion. Mr. McCall

143. Applied Regression Analysis. Lecture, three hours; discussion/computer tutorial, one hour. Prerequisite: course 40 or equivalent. Not open to students with credit for course 147A or 147B. Review of simple regression; assumptions of classical linear regression model; multiple regression, estimation, and inference; violations of assumptions of classical model (multicollinearity, heteroskedasticity, autocorrelation); autoregressive models, dummy variables. Emphasis on practical experience with regression analysis and interpretation; matrix algebra not required. Ms. Cameron

144. Introduction to Mathematical Methods in Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101, two calculus courses. Introduction to use of mathematics in economic analysis. Topics include partial differentiation, optimization, integration, and differential and difference equations, with applications to the theory of the household and the firm, capital theory, and economic dynamics.

Mr. Ellickson, Mr. Intriligator, Mr. Riley

145. Topics in Mathematical Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 144. Possible topics include game theory; competitive equilibrium analysis; examination of market failure and role for market intervention. Mr. Ellickson, Mr. Ostroy

146. Linear Models in Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: one linear or matrix algebra course. Not open for credit to students with credit for Mathematics 144 or Electrical Engineering 136. Possible topics include duality theory of linear programming and simplex algorithm, input-output analysis, and two-person zero-sum games.

Mr. McCall, Mr. Ostroy, Mr. Shapley

147A. Introduction to Econometrics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: two calculus courses and course 143 (or Mathematics M150A-150B or Statistics M152A, 152B), or consent of instructor. Introduction to econometrics, including review of matrix algebra and statistical theory; linear regression model; model specification; data collection; estimation and hypothesis testing; and introduction to simultaneous equations models. Original econometric paper required. Mr. Ellickson, Mr. Intriligator, Mr. Levine

147B. Applications of Econometrics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 147A. Econometric models and data; forecasting, policy analysis, estimation of simultaneous equations models, applications of econometrics. Major original econometric paper required. Mr. Ellickson, Mr. Intriligator, Mr. Levine

148. Introductory System Theory. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: Mathematics 33A, 33B. Introduction to modeling and analysis of dynamic systems, with emphasis on examples from social and life sciences. Linearity, impulse responses, stability, state variables, algorithms for filtering and control. Mr. Ellickson

150. Wage Theory. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11 and 101, or consent of instructor. Supply and demand for labor. Analysis of government, union, and other constraints on competitive system of wage determination. Wage level and structure. Wages and human capital theory. Ms. Currie

151. Labor, Wages, and Income. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 150 or consent of instructor. Selected topics in labor theory; income distribution; business cycles and unemployment; investments in human capital and life cycles; migration; human fertility; marriage and divorce, etc.

152. Trade Unions and Professional Associations. Lecture, three hours. Comparative behavior of unions and professional associations; criteria for wage maximization; quantification of gains; analysis of legal framework applying to such organizations.

160. Money and Banking. Lecture, three hours. Recommended prerequisite: course 102. Principles of money and banking in the U.S.; legal and institutional framework; money supply process; instruments, effects, and practice of monetary policy.

161. Monetary Theory. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 160. Nature of money and monetary exchange; level and term structure of interest rates; level and growth rate of money; transmission of monetary shocks; theory and practice of monetary policy.

170. Monopoly and Competition. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 11. Comparison of economic and legal treatments of the competitive process. Monopoly competition, and collusion as economic theory, as antitrust doctrine, and as fact. Source of monopoly. Predatory behavior. Misleading practices in theory and policy. General problem of relationship between private rights of action and competitive entry. Mr. Demsetz, Mr. Klein

171. Industrial Organization: Theory and Tactics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 11. Study of pricing and output decisions of firms under conditions of less than perfect competition or monopoly; theories of oligopoly and monopolistic competition; information costs and advertising; examination of pricing practices such as price discrimination, tie-in selling, predatory pricing, and resale price maintenance. Mr. Demsetz, Mr. Klein

172. Economic Analysis of Laws and Legal Institutions. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 11. Application of economic theory to legal rule formulation; study of economic nature and consequences of alternative legal arrangements, with special reference to property rights. Application of economic theory to analysis of effects of laws relative to property contracts, torts, crimes, taxation, and constitutional issues. Analysis of legal process. Mr. Demsetz

173. Centralized Markets. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 11. Enrollment priority to business economics students. Organization and function of stock, bond, commodity, and foreign exchange markets. Theory and evidence related to efficiency of these markets in evaluating information, to their role in facilitating risk-bearing and capital allocation. Interrelationship between business finance and organized capital markets. Mr. Demsetz, Mr. Williams

174. Organization of the Firm. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 11. Enrollment priority to business economics students. Role of the firm in traditional economic theory and modern developments in the theory of the firm. Functions of ownership and management in face of risk and opportunism. Internal organization of the firm. Problem of separation of ownership from control in the modern corporation. Determinates of firm size, vertical integration, and degree of specialization of activities of firms. Decision making within the firm in a democratic setting. Mr. Demsetz, Mr. Dick

175. Economics of Transportation. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 11. Economic characteristics of transport; functions of the different agencies; pricing and resource allocation in transport; public regulation of transport; urban transport; modern transport problem.

176. Business and Government. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101. Several aspects of interaction between business and government, including regulation of prices, entry, working conditions, natural resource use, policies of taxation, and subsidy of business. Mr. Demsetz

177. Contractual Arrangements in Business. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101. Enrollment priority to business economics students. Economic and legal determinants of contractual arrangements adopted by business. Franchise contracts, rights-of-first refusal, and tie-in contracts. Legal constraints and efficiency of different contractual arrangements. Mr. Demsetz, Mr. Klein

180. Comparative Systems: Transformation of Socialist Economies. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101. Comparative analysis of capitalist and socialist economies. Models of transition from centrally planned to free market economies. Analysis and critique of actual implementation. Future prospects.

181A. Development of Economic Institutions in Western Europe. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. European economic history, 900-1700. Custom, command, and market modes of organization. Evolution of property rights, contract forms, and monetary arrangements. Decline of feudal institutions, especially serfdom. Open field village and enclosures. Crafts manufacturing and guild organization. Development of banking. Public finances and role of government. Mr. Rosenthal

181B. Development of Economic Institutions in Western Europe. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. European economic history, 1700-1914. Industrial revolution in Britain and its spread to the continent. Rise of factories, industrial firms, and unions. Changes in standard of living and demographic consequences. Imperial expansion and decline of Britain. Worldwide diffusion of economic growth and the Gerschenkron hypothesis. Mr. Rosenthal, Mr. Sokoloff

182. Centralized Economics Systems. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 11, 101. Introduction to theory of centralized systems and examination of some centralized economies. Considerable attention to economy of the U.S.S.R.; some attention to other economies selected in light of the centralized model and with view to the march of current events.

183. Development of Economic Institutions in the U.S. Lecture, three hours. Study of changing economic conditions in the U.S. from Colonial times to the early 20th century and effects of these changes on American society. Mr. Sokoloff

184. History of Enterprise and Entrepreneurship in the American Economy. Lecture, three hours. Enrollment priority to business economics students. Study of role of innovation in history of American enterprise. Examination of specific episodes of salient entrepreneurial innovation, as well as general theoretical and empirical treatments. Mr. Sokoloff

190. International Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 1 or 100. Limited to non-Economics Department majors. Not open to students with credit for course 191 or 192. General introduction to international economics, based on examination of theory of trade and the means and significance of balance of payments adjustments, with analysis of major issues of international commercial and monetary policy confronting national and international agencies. May not be applied toward any Economics Department major.

191. International Trade Theory. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 101. Not open to students with credit for course 190. Theory of international trade: bases, direction, terms, volume, and gains of trade. Effects of tariffs, quantitative restrictions, and international integration. Effects of free and restricted trade on economic welfare and political stability. Mr. Stanczak

192. International Finance. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 102. Not open to students with credit for course 190. Emphasis on interpretation of the balance of payments and adjustment to national and international equilibria through changes in price levels, exchange rates, and national income. Other topics include making international payments, determination of exchange rates under various monetary standards, capital movements, exchange controls, and international monetary organization. Ms. Ozler, Mr. Sturzenegger

193. Research in International Area Studies Seminar. Lecture, three hours. Limited to economics/international area studies seniors. Students prepare research paper on economy of the country or region of specialization. Mr. Sturzenegger

195H. Honors Thesis Seminar. Seminar, three hours. Limited to seniors in departmental honors program. Seminar in which students present results of their senior theses.

199. Special Studies in Economics (2 or 4 units). Prerequisites: courses 11, 101, junior/senior standing, consent of instructor. May be repeated but may be applied only once toward the major requirements.

Graduate Courses

Foundations of Economics

201A-201B-201C. Microeconomics. Lecture, three hours:

201A. Theory of the Firm and Consumer. Two input/two output model. Walrasian equilibrium and Pareto efficiency. Choice over time — consumer savings and firm investment decisions. Choice under uncertainty — state claims model, asset pricing. Mr. Riley

201B. General Equilibrium and Welfare Economics. Meaning of competition in general equilibrium. Decentralization and appropriation roles of prices. Increasing returns. Public goods. Pecuniary and non-pecuniary externalities. Mechanism design. Mr. Ostroy

201C. Basic Concepts and Techniques of Noncooperative Game Theory and Information Economics. Nash equilibrium and subgame perfection. Games with incomplete information. Models of strategic market behavior. Screening and signaling. Bargaining models. Theory of the firm. Mr. Ellickson

202A-202B-202C. Macroeconomics. Lecture, three hours:

202A. Dynamics and Growth Theory. Essential techniques and concepts from dynamical mathematics and neoclassical growth theory. Linear and nonlinear dynamical systems. Dynamic programming and control theory. Stochastic dynamics. Determinacy of equilibrium. Descriptive, optimal, and overlapping generations models of accumulation. Stochastic growth theory. Increasing returns and applications to economic development. Mr. Azariadis

202B. Business Cycles. Survey of representative agent and complete market models of short-run fluctuations. Facts about fluctuations and long-term growth. Real business cycle theory. Calibrating and simulating dynamic models. Asset prices, money, and inflation. Taxation of factor incomes. Cyclical aspects of employment. Mr. Potter

202C. Topics in Macroeconomics. Heterogeneous-agent models of endogenous fluctuations and growth. General equilibrium techniques in macroeconomics. Overlapping fluctuations model with national debt. Fiscal policy. Externalities, indeterminacy, and growth. Expectations and business cycles. Money and monetary policy. Historical overview of mainstream macroeconomics. Wicksell and Keynes. Monetarist controversy. New classical and new Keynesian macroeconomics. Mr. Farmer

203A. Probability and Statistics for Econometrics. Lecture, three hours. Provides statistical tools necessary to understand econometric techniques. Random variables, distribution and density functions, sampling, estimators, estimation techniques, hypothesis testing, and statistical inference. Use of economic problems and examples. S/U or letter grading. Ms. McGarry

203B. Introduction to Econometrics: Single Equation Models. Lecture, three hours. Estimation of basic linear regression model, testing hypotheses, generalized least squares, serial correlation, heteroskedasticity, multicollinearity, error-in-variables, distributed lags, qualitative dependent variables, and forecasting. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Ryu

203C. Introduction to Econometrics: Systems Models. Lecture, three hours. Multivariate regression, simultaneous equation estimation, identification, and latent variables. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Cameron

204A-204Z. Applications of Economic Theory. Lecture, three hours:

M204L-M204M-M204N. Seminars: Pharmaceutical Economics and Policy (1 unit, 1 unit, 2 units). (Formerly numbered M204L.) (Same as Health Services M204A-M204B-M204C.) Seminar, three hours every other week for three terms. Prerequisites: courses 201A-201B-201C or equivalent, Health Services 236 or equivalent, or consent of instructor, graduate standing in public health or economics. Various topics in economics of pharmaceutical industry, including rates of innovation, drug regulation, and economic impact of pharmaceuticals. In Progress grading. Mr. Intriligator, Mr. Schweitzer

205. Economic Modeling. Lecture, three hours. Development of modeling skills by considering a sequence of economic issues (e.g., peak load pricing, regulation, monopoly, capital asset pricing, Pareto efficiency). Emphasis on multivariate constrained optimization. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Intriligator, Mr. McCall

207. History of Economic Thought. Lecture, three hours. Topics from classical economics, including work of Smith, Ricardo, and Mill, and developments from the 1870s, including contributions of major figures of the marginalist revolution, the socialist controversy, and history of welfare economics. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Ostroy

Economic Theory

211A-211B. Economics of Uncertainty, Information, and Games. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 201C, introductory probability. Theory of individual decision making under uncertainty, applied to topics such as asset pricing models, adverse selection, moral hazard, bargaining, signaling, auctions, and search. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Levine, Mr. McCall, Mr. Riley

212A-212Z. Topics in Advanced Theory. Lecture, three hours. Current research in microeconomic theory. Content varies. Courses in this sequence not ordinarily given every year. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading:

212A. Search Theory. Prerequisites: calculus, introductory probability. Price searching, queueing, Brownian motion, martingales, and applications to the theory of the firm. Mr. McCall

212B. Applied Game Theory. Prerequisites: calculus, introductory probability. Use of theory of Bayesian games to study bargaining, monetary theory, and oligopoly. Use of theory of mechanisms to study auction design and imperfectly competitive markets. Mr. Levine, Mr. Riley

213A-213B. General Equilibrium and Game Theory. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 201C or consent of instructor. Selected advanced theoretical topics of current interest and introduction to modern mathematical economics, including general equilibrium theory and game theory. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Ellickson, Mr. Ostroy, Mr. Shapley

214A-214Z. Topics in Mathematical Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 213B or consent of instructor. Current research in mathematical economics. Content varies. Ordinarily only two courses in this sequence given every year. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading:

214A. General Equilibrium Theory. Prerequisite: course 201C or equivalent or consent of instructor. Core convergence theorem, cooperative and noncooperative approach to competitive equilibrium theory, perfectly competitive equilibria, the no-surplus condition, and applications to mechanism theory and incomplete market models. Mr. Ostroy

M214B. Game Theory. (Same as Political Science M208A.) Prerequisites: course 213A or suitable mathematics courses. Bargaining theory, the core, the value, other solution concepts. Applications to oligopoly, general exchange and production economies, and allocation of joint costs. Mr. Shapley

M214C. Large Economies. (Same as Political Science M208C.) Prerequisites: course 213A or suitable mathematics courses. Consideration of economics with a continuum of consumers and with a continuum of goods. Basic model applied to perfectly competitive equilibrium, the core, location models, and other models with nonconvex preferences and/or technology. Mr. Ellickson

M215. Topics in Applied Game Theory. (Same as Political Science M208B.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: calculus or introductory probability, and graduate standing in economics or consent of instructor. Survey and applications of major solution concepts to models of bargaining, oligopoly, cost allocation, and voting power. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Shapley

219A-219B-219C. Workshops: Economic Theory and Mathematical Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Workshops for dissertation and pre-dissertation writers. Research in progress presented, discussed, and criticized by visiting experts, UCLA faculty members, advanced graduate students. Research paper required. S/U grading.

Also see Management 200 (game theory and information economics), 203A (decision theory), 203B (economics of information)

Monetary Economics

221A-221B. Monetary Economics I, II. Lecture, three hours. S/U or letter grading:

221A. Prerequisite: course 202C. Emphasis on empirical studies in money and banking. Econometric implications of rational expectations, random vs. deterministic trends, unemployment, central bank operating procedures, and evolution of monetary institutions. Mr. Leijonhufvud

221B. Prerequisite: course 221A. Emphasis on theoretical aspects of monetary economics. Financial intermediation, models of banking panics, asset prices volatility, contract theory, game theoretic models of policy, and Keynesian models with monopolistic competition, search, and coordination failures. Mr. Leijonhufvud

222A-222Z. Topics in Monetary Economics. Lecture, three hours. Current research in monetary economics. Content varies. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading:

M222A. Control and Coordination in Economics. (Same as Computer Science M222.) Prerequisite: graduate standing in economics or engineering or consent of instructor. Recommended: appropriate mathematics course. Stabilization policies, short- and long-run dynamics and stability analysis; decentralization, coordination in teams; certainty equivalence and separation theorems; stochastic and learning models. Bayesian approach to price and output rate adjustment. Mr. Aoki

229A-229B-229C. Workshops: Monetary Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Workshops for dissertation and pre-dissertation writers. Research in progress presented, discussed, and criticized by visiting experts, UCLA faculty members, advanced graduate students. Research paper required. S/U grading. Mr. Leijonhufvud

Also see Management 239A, 239B, 239C (Ph.D. sequence in finance), 239D (advanced topics in finance), 239X-239Y-239Z (finance workshops)

Econometrics

231A. Econometrics: Single Equation Models. Lecture, three hours. Linear regression model, specification error, functional form, autocorrelation, nonlinear estimation, distributed lags, nonnormality, univariate time series, qualitative dependent variables, aggregation, structural change, and errors-in-variables. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Learner

231B. System Models. Lecture, three hours. Multivariate regression, errors-in-variables, simultaneous equations, identification, proxy variables, latent variables, factor analysis of panel data, asymptotic distribution theory. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Ryu

232A-232Z. Topics in Econometrics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 231A, 231B. Current research in econometrics. Content varies. Courses in this sequence not ordinarily given every year. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

M232A. Bayesian Econometrics. (Same as Political Science M208E.) Subjective probability, introduction to decision theory, Bayesian analysis of regression, sensitivity analysis, simplification of models, criticism. Mr. Leamer

232B. Time Series. Stationary stochastic processes, Box/Jenkins methods, spectral analysis, forecasting, rational expectation models, analysis of macroeconomic data.

239A-239B-239C. Workshops: Econometrics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Workshops for dissertation and pre-dissertation writers. Research in progress presented, discussed, and criticized by visiting experts, UCLA faculty members, advanced graduate students. Research paper required. S/U grading.

Economic History

241. Economic History of Western Europe. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing or consent of instructor. Seminar on European economic history, with emphasis on evolution of institutions and growth. Serfdom, medieval agriculture and the agricultural revolution, demographics, industrial revolution, imperial expansion, and decline of Britain. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Rosenthal, Mr. Sokoloff

242. Economic History of the U.S. Lecture, three hours. Seminar on American economic history. Onset of industrialization, relative economic backwardness of the South, slavery, technological change, rise in industrial concentration, women in the labor force, development of financial markets. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Sokoloff

243A-243Z. Topics in Economic History. Lecture, three hours. Current research in economic history. Content varies. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

249A-249B-249C. Von Grep Workshops: History of Entrepreneurship in the U.S. Economy. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Workshops for advanced graduate students. Research in progress discussed by visiting experts, UCLA faculty members, graduate students. S/U grading. Mr. Sokoloff

Public Finance

251A. Theory and Policy of Taxation. Lecture, three hours. Examination of influence of taxation on economic efficiency and incidence of taxation in first part of course. Topics include tax equivalences, Ramsey rules, and alternative forms of taxation. Special tax provisions, tax incentives, and progressivity in taxation in second part of course. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Harberger

251B. Cost-Benefit Analysis of Public Projects and Programs. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 251A. Presentation of those aspects of applied capital theory that are relevant in decisions concerning investment projects in first part of course. Differences between social and private benefits and costs (shadow prices) for foreign exchange, capital, and labor, with applications to public investment decisions, in second part of course. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Harberger

252. Economics of Federalism. Lecture, three hours. Theories of perfect games and social organization. Role of government, collective goods, collective defense, local public goods, spillovers, and inter-governmental relations. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Thompson

253A-253Z. Topics in Public Finance. Lecture, three hours. Current research in public finance. Content varies. Topics include Social Security taxes and programs, unemployment insurance, public provision of medical care, theory of public goods, and theory of public choice. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

254A-254B-254C. Workshops: Public Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Workshops for advanced graduate students. Research in progress discussed by graduate students, UCLA faculty members, visiting experts. S/U grading.

Labor Economics

261A-261B. Labor Economics I, II. Lecture, three hours. S/U or letter grading:

261A. Wage determination in competitive labor markets. Extension of wage determination to schooling and occupational choice, life-cycle earnings profiles, discrimination, minimum wage legislation, and unionism. Emphasis on empirical literature. Ms. Currie

261B. Prerequisite: course 261A. Models of life-cycle learning and work behavior, with particular emphasis on recent literature examining labor force behavior and experience of women. Ms. Currie

262A-262Z. Topics in Labor Economics. Lecture, three hours. Current research in labor economics. Content varies. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

269A-269B-269C. Workshops: Labor Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Workshops for dissertation and pre-dissertation writers. Research in progress presented, discussed, and criticized by visiting experts, UCLA faculty members, advanced graduate students. Research paper required. S/U grading.

Industrial Organization

271A-271B. Industrial Organization, Price Policies, and Regulation I, II. Lecture, three hours. S/U or letter grading:

271C. Mathematical Theory in Industrial Organization. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 201A-201B-201C. Formal modeling of theory of industrial organization: principal-agent problem, entry deterrence, endogenous price discrimination, monopolistic competition, new approaches to rationality. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Dick

272A-272Z. Topics in Industrial Organization. Lecture, three hours. Current research in industrial organization. Content varies. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

273A. Public Utility Regulation. Lecture, three hours. Theory, practice, and consequences of regulation in electric power, gas, water, telecommunications, broadcasting, and other regulated industries; experiences of unregulated monopoly and public enterprises by way of contrast. S/U or letter grading.

273B. National Transport Policy. Lecture, three hours. Regulation of surface and air carriers, pricing and investment in public transport facilities, policy toward merchant marine. S/U or letter grading.

279A-279B-279C. Workshops: Business Organization. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Workshops for dissertation and pre-dissertation writers. Research in progress presented, discussed, and criticized by visiting experts, UCLA faculty members, advanced graduate students. Research paper required. S/U grading. Mr. Demsetz, Mr. Klein

International Economics

281A. International Trade Theory. Lecture, three hours. Theoretical and empirical analysis of micro-economic relationships among countries. Determinants of commodity and factor flows, prices, and factor rewards. Effects of trade barriers. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Leamer

281B. International Finance. Lecture, three hours. Theory and evidence on balance of payments, exchange rate determination, international transmission of inflation and business cycles, macroeconomic policy in open economies, alternative monetary systems. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Edwards

281C. International Economics. Lecture, three hours. Theoretical and empirical analysis of interrelation between flows of capital, people, and goods. Applications to current policy. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Ozler

282A-282Z. Topics in International Economics. Lecture, three hours. Current research in international economics. Content varies. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

283. Economics of Soviet External Involvement. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Interrelations between Soviet economy and the U.S.S.R.'s international behavior. Major topics, considered in various regional contexts of Soviet activity, include (1) extent of the U.S.S.R.'s global involvement, (2) domestic economic constraints on that involvement, and (3) external influences on Soviet domestic economic development. S/U or letter grading.

284. Soviet Economic Theory and Organization. Lecture, three hours. Overall strategy of planning used by U.S.S.R. planners and specific planning methods, interpreted broadly to cover not only instructions and objectives but also institutional arrangements. Intended and unintended outcomes of the methods. S/U or letter grading.

285A-285B-285C. Workshops: International Economics. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Workshops for dissertation and pre-dissertation writers. Research in progress presented, discussed, and criticized by visiting experts, UCLA faculty members, advanced graduate students. Research paper required. S/U grading. Mr. Edwards, Mr. Harberger

Development Economics

286A. Economic Development. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 201C, 202C. Study of theoretical and empirical problems related to developing countries. Emphasis on relation between international trade and economic development, dynamic aspects of commercial policies, inflation, stabilization, structural adjustment, growth and migration. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Edwards

286B. Analysis and Appraisal of Development Projects. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 286A. Methodology for evaluating investment projects, with special attention to types of issues that arise in developing countries. Discussion of social versus private evaluation criteria; applications to highway, electricity, and irrigation projects. S/U or letter grading. Mr. Harberger

287A-287Z. Topics in Development Economics. Lecture, three hours. Current research in development economics. Content varies. Courses in this sequence not ordinarily given every year. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

287A. Economic Problems of Latin America. Economic history of Latin America. The great depression, import substitution and industrialization, inflation and growth, free market experiments, and economic integration. Mr. Edwards

287B. Economic Development in East Asia. Recent economic history of East Asia, focusing on postwar development of Japan, Korea, and China. Emphasis on role of international investment and trade, especially with the U.S., in area's economic development.

Urban Economics

291A-291B. Urban Economics. Lecture, three hours. Course 291A is prerequisite to 291B. Implications of urbanization for economic analysis. Development of theory in course 291A; emphasis on policy in 291B. Use of monocentric model of urban land use to introduce location and transportation costs. Examination of housing, transportation, and local public services. Ms. Cameron

293A-293Z. Topics in Urban Economics. Lecture, three hours. Current research in urban and regional economics. Content varies. Serves as forum for presentation of papers on urban economics by students, UCLA faculty members, and visitors. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading. Ms. Cameron

Special Studies

299A-299B-299C. Workshops: Preparing a Dissertation Proposal. Lecture, three hours. Workshops for third-year graduate students who are preparing for oral qualifying examination. Presentation of journal articles for critical analysis to develop students' analytical skills. Presentation of students' own research for critical analysis by fellow students and faculty. Workshops open to research in all fields of economics. S/U grading.

375. Teaching Apprentice Practicum (1 to 4 units). Prerequisite: apprentice personnel employment as a teaching assistant, associate, or fellow. Teaching apprenticeship under active guidance and supervision of a regular faculty member responsible for curriculum and instruction at the University. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

495. Teaching College Economics (2 units). Discussion, one hour; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing. Required of all new teaching assistants. Classroom practice in teaching, with individual and group instruction on related educational methods, materials, and evaluation. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

596. Individual Study (2 to 8 units). Directed individual study or research. S/U grading.

597. Individual Study: Graduate Examinations (2 to 8 units). Directed individual study in preparation for M.A. comprehensive examination or Ph.D. qualifying examinations. S/U grading.

599. Individual Research: Ph.D. Dissertation (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: advancement to Ph.D. candidacy. Directed individual research in preparation of Ph.D. dissertation. S/U grading.

Economics/System Science (Interdepartmental)

2263 Bunche Hall, (310) 825-1011

Professors

Masanao Aoki, Ph.D. (Economics)
 Bryan C. Ellickson, Ph.D. (Economics; Distinguished Teaching Award)
 Michael D. Intriligator, Ph.D. (Economics)
 Stephen E. Jacobsen, Ph.D. (Electrical Engineering)

Scope and Objectives

The major is an alternative to the regular departmental major in economics and combines work in the School of Engineering and Applied Science with preparation in economic theory and in those aspects of mathematics and statistics necessary for the study of quantitative aspects of economics and systems theory. The major is appropriate for students with interests in such areas as economic theory, mathematical economics, econometrics, feedback and control systems, optimization, computing techniques, and the modeling and analysis of various socioeconomic systems.

Bachelor of Science Degree

Admission

This interdepartmental major is in the process of being disestablished as there is no longer a system science department in the School of Engineering and Applied Science. Therefore, students admitted to the University for Fall Quarter 1993 and thereafter cannot enter this major. You can pursue one of the alternate programs available in mathematics/applied science (see Mathematics later in this chapter).

Students admitted to the preeconomics/system science major prior to Fall Quarter 1993 can apply for admission to the economics/system science major or to one of the alternate programs. All preeconomics/system science students applying for admission to the major are subject to the minimum entrance requirements as listed in the 1992-93 UCLA General Catalog.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Economics 1, 2, 11; Computer Science 10C or 10F or Program in Computing 3 or 10A; Mathematics 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, 33B. All courses must be completed for a letter grade of C – or better.

Repetition of more than one preparation course or of any preparation course more than once results in automatic denial of admission to the major. Transfer credit for any of the above is subject to department approval; consult the undergraduate counselor in 2253 Bunche Hall before enrolling in any courses for the major.

The Major

Required: Thirteen upper division courses as follows: five courses in economics selected from Economics 101 and above, including 101, 102, and one course from 141, 142, 144, 145, 146, 147A, 147B; six courses in system science selected from Electrical Engineering 102, 103, 131A, 131B, 136, 141, 142, including 131A (or Mathematics M150A or Statistics M152A) and 131B (or Mathematics 151 or Statistics 152B); two courses in mathematics selected from Mathematics 110A and above (such mathematics courses may not also be applied toward the system science requirements).

Recommended courses include Electrical Engineering 141 and 142 in the area of dynamic systems analysis and Electrical Engineering 136 in the area of optimization.

All upper division major courses must be completed for a letter grade of C – or better, with an overall 2.0 GPA.

Scope and Objectives

The undergraduate specialization in education is designed to (1) allow students to learn more about the multitude of professional and research issues in the field of education and to understand the complex interactions between social, political, and economic forces which influence and shape educational policies in America, (2) provide an introductory educational sequence for students who wish to pursue careers in education either as teachers or researchers, and (3) present an information base in the area of education by which UCLA students can become better consumers of educational services as future parents, taxpayers, and citizens.

The teaching philosophy is governed by a need to address these objectives with a logical and time-efficient course structure — lower division courses that provide an introduction to educational policy, upper division social and behavioral sciences courses (sociology, political science, history, philosophy, anthropology, economics, psychology) taught in the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies, upper division elective courses in which students can pursue their own specific interests in the area of education, and a special studies research experience. The specialization must be taken in conjunction with a departmental or interdepartmental major.

Special Undergraduate Program

Enrollment is limited but includes sophomores and upper division students. To enter the specialization you must submit a formal application to the Office of Student Services in the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies. All courses applied toward the specialization must be taken for a letter grade.

Preparation for the Specialization

Required: Two courses from Education 91A through 91E.

Upper Division

Required: Two social sciences courses from Education M108, 112, C191A through C191E; two elective courses from Education 100A-100B, M102, 125A, M148, 180, 181, 192, 197. Additional courses will be applicable as approved.

After successfully completing the six required courses with at least a 2.5 GPA, you must complete one special studies research experience (Education 199) or practicum course (Education 197) with a professor in the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies. Internship research areas include administration, curriculum, and teaching studies; higher education; psychological foundations and educational research methods; and social sciences (history, economics, anthropology, sociology, philosophy).

For further information and application forms, contact the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies Office of Student Services at the program address.

Scope and Objectives

An interest in English and American literature draws many students to the Department of English, which also offers courses in other fields, including the history and structure of the English language itself. Although committed to no single method or approach, the department encourages an emphasis on literary history and requires of its undergraduate majors a firsthand acquaintance with such influential writers as Chaucer, Milton, and Shakespeare. Students may range outward from this core to a rich variety of other fields — literary criticism, for example, or the ethnic literatures and popular culture of America, or the relation of literature to such complementary disciplines as history, sociology, psychology, and philosophy. Qualified students may elect a concentration in creative writing or an interdisciplinary program in American studies.

An understanding and appreciation of literature can furnish lifelong rewards. In addition to such personal benefits, the department seeks to impart the capacity to make balanced critical judgments and the ability to write the English language persuasively, with point and effect. Such skills are essential to success in a variety of professions for which the major in English can provide excellent preparation, including law, administration, business, and teaching.

A graduate program leading to the Master of Arts degree is available for students who wish to continue the study of literature at an advanced level. A parallel program continues to the Ph.D. degree. Because the Ph.D. program may require five years or more, it is intended only for qualified students who are seriously committed to advanced literary scholarship and, in some cases, to a career in college or university teaching.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

Admission to Courses in English

You must have completed the Subject A requirement before taking any courses in English (other than English A or 2). For further information regarding Subject A, see "Undergraduate Degree Requirements" in Chapter 2.

Preparation for the Major

Required: English 3, 4, 10A, 10B, 10C taken in the stated sequence (each course is a prerequisite for the next course).

Extra-Departmental Requirement in Foreign Literature or Foreign Language: All English majors must have completed either (1) level five or equivalent in any one foreign language or (2) level three or the equivalent of one foreign language and two additional courses in foreign language or foreign literature, including foreign literature in translation (see course listings later in this chapter). Italian 46 may not be applied. The courses may be taken on a P/NP grading basis.

The Major

Required: Twelve upper division English courses, including 141A or 141B, 142A, 142B, 143, at least one course from each of the 150 and 180 series, and six additional courses of which four must be selected from 140A, 140B, 142C, or 150 through M197.

You are encouraged to choose additional electives from courses 140A through M197. English 140A is especially recommended if you plan graduate work in literature. You may wish to select several courses in the relevant classical and postclassical foreign literatures and thought.

Special Programs

The department offers special programs in American studies, creative writing, and general literature, and one for international students. For all programs, the regular "Preparation for the Major" sequence as well as the departmental foreign language requirement apply. Because of the specialized nature of these programs, students should consult the departmental counselor before selecting and declaring one of them as a concentration.

American Studies — This program consists of nine upper division courses in English and six related upper division courses taken in other departments. The nine English courses must include 178; one course from M102 through M107A or 109; two courses from 142A, 142B, 143; three courses from the 170 series, with at least one course from 170, 171, or 172, and no more than one course from 176 or 177; and one course pertaining to American studies selected from 187, 188, or 189, taken preferably in the senior year. Of the six upper division courses in other departments, four must be in a selected discipline (history, political science, sociology, etc.). One of the four courses must deal with the methodology of the discipline, while the other three must explicitly treat American culture. The courses must be selected in consultation with the English departmental counselor.

General Literature — This program consists of nine upper division courses in English or American literature and six upper division courses in foreign literatures (at least one of which must be taught in the original language). The nine English courses must include 141A, 141B, or 143; 142A and 142B; at least one course from the 150 series; and four electives selected from courses 140A through M197 (students intending graduate work in literature are especially encouraged to take English 140A). A listing of acceptable courses may be obtained from the department.

Creative Writing — This program consists of English 142A and 142B and a minimum of 10 additional upper division English courses: three creative writing courses from the 133A through 134C series, taken in a single genre (poetry or short story), three literature courses paralleling the creative writing specialization, and four electives selected from courses 140A through M197. You may declare this program as a concentration only after you have completed three creative writing workshops in a single genre. If you are planning to select this program, you are encouraged to take course 20; for further details, contact the departmental counselor.

International Students Program — The department offers a special program in English to bona fide international students whose native language is other than English. For this program, you must satisfy all requirements listed under "Preparation for the Major"; you may fulfill the departmental foreign language requirement with your own native language. The following 12 courses are required for the program itself: English as a Second Language 103, 106, 109; two courses from English 100 through 199; 122; 142A, 142B; and four additional courses from those numbered 140A through M197. If you complete this program and wish to pursue graduate study, you should consult the departmental counselor about programs of study and requirements for admission.

National Teachers Examination Waiver for Instructional Credential in English

On request the department will provide a letter asking for a waiver of the National Teachers Examination (NTE) to qualified graduating English majors. To qualify, you must complete either English 120A and 130A (elementary school) and at least one American literature course selected from 170 through 174, or English 120B and 130B (secondary school) and at least one American literature course selected from 170 through 174, as part of or in addition to the major. If you are interested in elementary school education, you are strongly urged to participate in the Diversified Liberal Arts Program (DLAP), administered by the College Counseling Service, A316 Murphy Hall. You are also encouraged to select additional courses in language, children's literature, literature for adolescents, American literature, and literature for minorities as some of your electives. The NTE is only one requirement in obtaining an instructional credential. For additional information on courses leading to the credential, consult the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies at (310) 825-8328.

Honors Program

Admission — The honors program is open to English majors with a 3.5 departmental and a 3.25 overall grade-point average. If you have a lower GPA, you may petition for admission to the program, but these grade-point averages must be achieved before graduation in order to qualify for honors. You should apply by Spring Quarter of your junior year. For application forms and further information, contact the departmental counselor.

Requirements — All honors students are required to take English 140A during the junior year and one seminar from the English 180 through 189 sequence, preferably before the senior year. In Fall Quarter of your senior year, you must take course 199HA. During Winter and Spring Quarters, you take courses 199HB and 199HC, in which you write a thesis under the direction of a faculty member. The thesis determines whether you receive high honors, honors, or no honors.

M.A. and Ph.D. Degrees

All students admitted into the UCLA English graduate program with a B.A. must enter the M.A. course of study, which also serves as the first phase of the doctoral program. The M.A. degree may be obtained either by passing the first qualifying examination (which also grants admission into the second phase of the doctoral program) or by writing a thesis. Students admitted with a master's degree may waive some course requirements but must pass the first qualifying examination.

Admission

Admission to the program is based on a thorough review of the student's academic record. Ordinarily, students holding the B.A. are expected to meet these minimum requirements: an undergraduate major or program that provides preparation for advanced study of literature; a grade-point average in all English courses and in the junior and senior years of at least 3.5; and a recent (within the last five years) score on the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) of 650 on both the verbal section of the General Test and the Literature in English Subject Test or a combined score of 1,300. Applicants holding the M.A. are expected to have a grade-point average of at least 3.7 in all graduate courses and a correspondingly higher score on the Literature in English Subject Test. A minimum of three letters of recommendation attesting to your ability to succeed in graduate study and a writing sample are also required. Care should be taken with the statement of purpose and the writing sample, since the quality of thought and argument they exhibit, as well as their style, weigh significantly in admissions decisions. For a descriptive brochure, write to the Graduate Assistant, Department of English, 2225 Rolfe Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1530.

If you elect the M.A. thesis option, you may, on completion of that course of study, petition to enter the doctoral program provided you have maintained a grade-point average of at least 3.7 in your graduate studies and are recommended by your thesis committee. Such petitions are not automatically approved and should be accompanied by appropriate supporting materials.

Foreign Language Requirement

If you are pursuing only the M.A. degree, you may fulfill the language requirement by demonstrating reading knowledge of any foreign language. This requirement should be satisfied at the beginning of your first term in residence, but in any event no later than the midpoint of the term in which you complete all degree requirements.

If you are pursuing the Ph.D., you are expected to have reading knowledge of two foreign languages or to demonstrate superior proficiency in a single language (which must have prior approval of the vice chair of graduate studies). The departmentally approved languages are French, German, Italian, Spanish, Latin, and Greek, but other languages may be substituted by petition on the basis of a special research interest.

Course Requirements

Nine letter-graded English courses from the 200 series are required for the M.A. If you enter the program with an M.A. in English, some of your prior coursework may be accepted by petition. An additional five letter-graded courses are required for the Ph.D.

Teaching Experience

Although teaching experience is not required, most students in the Ph.D. program have the opportunity to serve as teaching assistants after passing English 495A and being in the program for at least one year. Teaching assistantships are awarded on the basis of merit.

Qualifying Examinations

The doctoral program is divided into three stages, the first two of which culminate in the first and second qualifying examinations.

First Stage

First Qualifying Examination Option—If you are pursuing the Ph.D. degree, you take the first qualifying examination sometime early in your third year in the program. The examination consists of two substantial essays, which may be seminar papers, and a two-hour oral test in three historical periods or in two historical periods and one genre. The graduate faculty decides in each case whether to grant an M.A. and whether you will be admitted to the second stage of the Ph.D. program. Further details on breadth and philology requirements are available from the department.

Terminal M.A. Thesis—Students electing to take a terminal M.A. must request a thesis committee (three faculty members) from the graduate counselor at least two terms before completing the program. The committee then meets with you to consider your thesis proposal. Your thesis should not be less than 40 nor more than 60 pages in length.

Second Stage

In this stage of the program, you are encouraged to take as many seminars as possible (any graduate seminar may be repeated for credit), as well as suitable courses in other departments. When sufficiently well prepared and after satisfying the second language requirement, you take the second qualifying examination.

Second Qualifying Examination—The University Oral Qualifying Examination, at least two hours in length, deals with your prospectus, a substantially researched paper which has been approved by the committee chair and distributed to the doctoral committee at least two weeks before the scheduled examination. The committee must certify that the prospectus has been approved. If you fail the examination, you may, at the discretion of the committee, repeat it once only.

Third Stage/Candidate in Philosophy Degree

Once you have passed the second qualifying examination, you may advance to candidacy and, on application, receive the Candidate in Philosophy (C.Phil.) degree. You may then proceed with the writing of the dissertation.

Final Oral Examination

A final oral defense of the dissertation is optional with the doctoral committee but is usually not required.

Scope and Objectives

Students need writing proficiency at every stage of their university careers. Although UCLA does not have a composition major, this program offers a series of courses introducing the varieties of university discourse and providing instruction in basic to high-level skills. Besides courses which satisfy the University's Subject A and English Composition requirements, the program offers writing courses linked with courses in other departments, intermediate and advanced courses in exposition, and language and composition courses for teachers. Special programs include the First-Year Intensive Program (FIPW) and the Transfer Intensive Program (TIP).

Subject A

Every student who does not satisfy the Subject A requirement by presenting transfer credit or acceptable test scores is required to take, as early as possible during the first year in residence, either English A or 2. Placement in these courses is determined by performance on the Subject A Examination. For more information regarding Subject A, see "Undergraduate Degree Requirements" in Chapter 2.

Composition Requirement

The College of Letters and Science and each of the University's professional schools set their own composition requirement. Completing English 3 with a grade of C or better meets the requirement in all divisions. For further information about the composition requirement, see the introductory copy for your college or school.

Students who score 660 or better on the SAT II Subject Test in Writing are eligible to take the English 3 Proficiency Examination. Outstanding performance on this examination fulfills the composition requirement. For further information, contact the Student Services Office.

Lower Division Courses

A. Introduction to University Discourse (No credit). Lecture, five hours. Preparation: appropriate score on Subject A Examination. English A displaces four units on student's Study List but yields no credit toward a degree. First course in reading university-level texts and framing written responses that employ a range of rhetorical strategies from paraphrase to analysis. Emphasis on revision, developing syntactic variety and academic vocabulary, and editing for grammar and style. Completion of this course with a grade of C or better or demonstration of minimum competence on Subject A Examination is requisite to English 2.

2. Approaches to University Writing. Requisite: English A (C or better) or appropriate score on Subject A Examination. Second course in university-level discourse, with analysis and critique of university-level texts. Emphasis on revision for argumentative coherence and effective style. Completion of this course with a grade of C or better meets Subject A requirement.

3. English Composition, Rhetoric, and Language. Lecture, three hours. Requisite: satisfaction of Subject A requirement by examination or by completion of course 2 (C or better). Rhetorical techniques and skillful argument. Analysis of varieties of academic prose and writing of a minimum of five formal papers (three to five pages each). Completion of this course with a grade of C or better satisfies English Composition requirement.

3H. English Composition, Rhetoric, and Language (Honors). Lecture, three hours. Preparation: satisfaction of Subject A requirement. Rhetorical techniques and skillful argument. Analysis of varieties of academic prose and writing of a minimum of five formal papers (three to five pages each).

Upper Division Courses

100W. Intensive Writing. Prerequisite: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements. Students must be concurrently enrolled in a course offered in conjunction with English 100W (consult Schedule of Classes for courses so designated). Writing assignments use materials from adjunct course and develop analytical reading and writing skills needed for work in its discipline.

100WH. Intensive Writing (Honors). Prerequisite: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements. Students must be concurrently enrolled in an honors course offered in conjunction with English 100WH (consult Schedule of Classes for courses so designated). Writing assignments use materials from adjunct course and develop analytical reading and writing skills needed for work in its discipline.

120A. Language Study for Teachers: Elementary School. Prerequisite: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements. Survey of topics in English linguistics of special interest to elementary school teachers. Subjects include approaches to English grammar; language acquisition and development; language attitudes; regional and social dialects of American English; bilingual schooling; contribution of English language study to teaching of reading, writing, spelling, and literature.

120C. Language Study for Teachers of Subjects Other Than English: Secondary School. Prerequisite: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements. Introduction for teachers of subjects other than English to basic concepts in language acquisition, dialectology, sociolinguistics, and composition.

129. Intermediate Exposition. Prerequisites: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements, sophomore standing. Intermediate course in academic writing suitable for both lower and upper division students. Teaches students how to write longer papers built on more complex, demanding texts. Readings include at least two books dealing with issues central to humanities, social sciences, or life sciences. Writing assignments include a research project appropriate to students' majors.

129H. Intermediate Exposition (Honors). Prerequisites: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements, sophomore standing. Honors course parallel to course 129.

130B. Composition for Teachers: Secondary School. Prerequisite: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements. Preparation for future secondary school teachers of English composition in writing and criticism of the kinds of prose discourse usually taught in secondary schools.

129A-129J

Advanced Exposition. Prerequisites: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements, upper division standing. Writing course designed to help students develop stylistic and argumentative virtuosity in various rhetorical contexts, including different sections that emphasize principles of effective writing in major professions. May be taken P/NP by English majors, though English majors who wish to use course to satisfy departmental prerequisites must take it for a letter grade. Each course may be taken independently for credit. 131A. General; 131B. Business; 131C. Prehealth Care; 131D. Journalism/Communication Studies; 131E. Prelaw; 131F. Fine Arts; 131G. Science and Technology; 131H. Honors; 131J. Literature.

132. Composition and Society. Prerequisites: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements, upper division standing. Intensive study of some aspect of relationship between composition and social, economic, or political history. P/NP or letter grading.

197F. Rhetoric in Modern American Culture. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisites: satisfaction of Subject A and English Composition requirements, course 4 or 129 or one course from 131 series, upper division standing. One-term field studies course designed to provide students with academic background in and firsthand knowledge of media writing. P/NP or letter grading.

Graduate Courses

300. Teaching English. Required of candidates for single subject credential in English. Study of theories of rhetoric, composition, reading, and literature as they apply to secondary school English curriculum.

495A-495B. Supervised Teacher Preparation (2 units each). Discussion, one hour; laboratory, 30 minutes. In Progress and S/U grading. 495A. Required of all applicants for a teaching assistantship in English. Practical concerns of designing a course, creating assignments, grading papers, and holding conferences for English 3 classes. 495B. Must be taken concurrently with first teaching assignment. Examination of specialized problems which occur in teaching English 3 and introduction to techniques for teaching English 2 and ESL.

495C. Supervised Teacher Preparation (2 units). Prerequisites: courses 495A-495B. S/U grading.

Environmental Science and Engineering (Interdepartmental)

This interdisciplinary graduate program, which leads to the Doctor of Environmental Science and Engineering (D.Env.) degree, provides scientific training in the enlightened management of the environment through a broad range of environmental disciplines. For details on this program, see Chapter 17 on the School of Public Health.

Scope and Objectives

The interdisciplinary Folklore and Mythology Program, which leads to the Master of Arts and Ph.D. degrees, provides coordinated study of the traditional lifestyles of specific societies and culture areas, on the one hand, and systematic training in the research methods and investigative techniques of cross-cultural study, on the other. Courses focus on the nature, history, and functions of such traditional forms as narrative, music, art, dance, religion, festival, and speech and consider the part they play in human development and cultural existence. The program examines the ways in which human traditions both reflect and contribute to continuity and consistency in thought and life.

Trained folklorists pursue careers in teaching, research, governmental agencies, museum work and administration, performing groups and arts management, social work, the medical and legal professions, and business. Their responsibilities include documenting cultural and ethnic traditions, introducing traditional artists and their works to interested audiences, describing transformations of traditional processes and forms, and preserving on tape and film the customs and mores of social groups and individuals.

Although no undergraduate degree program is offered in folklore and mythology, students majoring in world arts and cultures may select folklore and mythology as their area of concentration. A variety of undergraduate courses offered by departments or by faculty participating in the interdepartmental program is also available to all University students. Those with undergraduate preparation in folklore and mythology studies may continue their work on the graduate level. For planning coursework, you should consult departmental counselors and the chair of the committee which administers the interdepartmental program.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

Two letters of recommendation from former instructors or other comparable references are required and should be sent to the Chair, Folklore and Mythology Program, 1041 AGSM, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1459.

Foreign Language Requirement

Reading knowledge of French, German, or Spanish is required; other languages may be substituted by petition to the program faculty. You have the option of demonstrating proficiency either by

- (1) Passing the fifth quarter or fourth semester course in the selected foreign language at a college or university with a grade of B or equivalent no more than five years before graduate enrollment OR
- (2) Successfully completing the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with a score of 550 or better OR
- (3) Passing a reading examination administered and evaluated by members of the program faculty (or by outside faculty for languages not familiar to the program faculty).

Course Requirements

All degree candidates, whether electing the thesis or comprehensive examination plan (see below), must complete the following courses: Folklore and Mythology 200A and 200B (in sequence) and at least one course from each of the following groups:

- Group 1 — One course in folk song, folk music, or folk dance (e.g., C206, M243B, M258, or CM284).
- Group 2 — One course in the folklore and mythology of a specific culture or culture area.

Group 3 — One course in folktale, legend, or myth (e.g., 215 or 216).

Group 4 — One additional form/genre-based graduate course in folklore and mythology studies (e.g., 213, M214, 217, 218, or C275).

Group 5 — One graduate seminar in an area of folklore and mythology (e.g., 228, M235, 259).

Only eight units of course 596 may be applied toward the minimum course requirements.

Thesis Plan

If you select this plan, you must complete a minimum of 10 courses (six in the 200 series; two 596 courses may be included) and submit an acceptable thesis, prepared under the direction of a member of the program faculty. Submission of the thesis is followed by an oral examination covering the fields of folklore and mythology studies. You must complete all degree requirements in a maximum of six regular academic terms.

The thesis committee is appointed no later than the term before you expect to complete the requirements.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

If you plan to pursue a Ph.D. degree in Folklore and Mythology, you must elect this plan and must complete a minimum of 10 courses (six in the 200 series; two 596 courses may be included). After completion of the coursework, you are expected to demonstrate competence in written and oral examinations (the latter only if requested by M.A. committee members or by you) requiring a grasp of (1) theoretical bases, major documents, and research methods and techniques of folklore and mythology studies, (2) two forms of folklore and mythology, and (3) the folklore and mythology of a specific country, continent, or geographical area. You must complete all degree requirements in a maximum of six regular academic terms.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

Requirements for admission to the doctoral program include completing the requirements for the M.A. degree in Folklore and Mythology (or equivalent) and the written comprehensive examination. You are admitted to the doctoral program on the recommendation of the interdepartmental committee (you may secure provisional admission in order to complete the admission requirements).

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

You must develop competency in (1) a major field of folklore and mythology and (2) an area of concentration within a related discipline. These areas are selected with the approval of the guidance committee.

Foreign Language Requirement

Reading knowledge of two foreign languages approved by the guidance committee is required. You may demonstrate proficiency by any of the three methods described above under "Foreign Language Requirement" for the master's degree.

The foreign language examinations must be completed before you attempt the qualifying examinations.

Course Requirements

Before attempting the qualifying examinations, you must complete a minimum of nine courses or seminars in the 200 series (or substitutes recommended by the guidance committee) in (1) folklore and mythology and (2) an area of concentration within a related discipline. At least five of the nine courses must be selected from Folklore and Mythology 200A through M286B, and at least two of the nine are to be folklore seminars (e.g., courses 228, M235, M258, 259, M270A, M270B). No more than two 596 courses may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement.

Qualifying Examinations

After the required preparation, you complete a written examination covering (1) your specialization in folklore and mythology and (2) your related area of concentration. The examination is administered by a committee appointed with approval of the interdepartmental committee.

The written examination is followed by the University Oral Qualifying Examination covering the same two areas listed above, which you must pass in order to be advanced to candidacy. The oral examination is administered by the doctoral committee, which also considers and approves your dissertation topic.

Final Oral Examination

An oral defense of the dissertation may be required, to be determined by your doctoral committee after you complete the oral qualifying examination.

Scope and Objectives

The UCLA French Department is a major West Coast center for the study of French. In recent decades French critical thought has maintained a dominant position in the Western world. The department seeks to give its students not only a background in the various fields of French studies, but also opportunity to relate literary, linguistic, and cultural study to examination of the critical intellectual questions of our time.

The lower division program is designed to provide practical competence in French after one year and thorough basic knowledge of the language after two years.

The upper division program is chiefly devoted to perfecting linguistic skills and to the study of French culture and literature. Courses in linguistics and business French are also offered. Students graduating with a Bachelor of Arts in French should be fully fluent in French and possess a thorough background in French literature and culture. All four plans lead to the Bachelor of Arts degree and subsequently to graduate studies in French.

The graduate program comprises training in the various fields of French literature and thought, as well as in literary criticism, analysis, and theory. A number of courses in linguistics and stylistics are also offered. The department offers both the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees.

Bachelor of Arts Degrees

Preparation for the Majors

Required: French 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 12, or equivalent. You normally take course 6 before undertaking course 12. If you receive a grade of A in course 5, you may enroll in course 12 concurrently with course 6, with consent of instructor. Students in Plan D must also take Linguistics 20.

The Majors

Four plans are offered by the department:

Plan A (General) leads to the Bachelor of Arts in French and subsequently to the standard elementary or secondary instructional credential. Required: Thirteen upper division courses, including French 100, 101, 102; two courses from 114A, 114B, 114C; at least two courses in French culture and two in French literature; four additional elective courses normally selected from upper division offerings in the department in language, civilization, literature, or the arts. Two upper division elective courses from outside the department may be substituted in the major program with consent of the undergraduate adviser.

Candidates for an instructional credential within Plan A must take 13 upper division French Department courses, including French 105, in order to qualify for a waiver of the National Teachers Examination for the single subject instructional credential in French.

Plan B (Literature) leads to the Bachelor of Arts in French. Required: Thirteen upper division courses, including French 100, 101, 102; two courses from 114A, 114B, 114C; at least five courses in French literature; three additional elective courses normally selected from upper division offerings in the department in language, civilization, literature, or the arts. Two upper division elective courses from outside the department may be substituted in the major program with consent of the undergraduate adviser.

Plan C (French Studies), with emphasis on French culture, leads to the Bachelor of Arts in French and is a core program in French allowing for individual selection of relevant courses in related fields such as humanities, social sciences, women's studies, and linguistics. Required: Thirteen upper division courses, including French 100, 101, 102; two courses from 114A, 114B, 114C; at least two courses in French literature; one additional elective course normally selected from upper division offerings in the department in language, civilization, literature, or the arts; five upper division elective courses in fields relevant to French studies to be selected in or outside the department in consultation with the undergraduate adviser.

Plan D (French and Linguistics) leads to the Bachelor of Arts in French and Linguistics. In addition to the normal preparation for the major, you are required to complete the sixth term of work in one other foreign language or the third term in each of two other foreign languages. Linguistics 20 is required as preparation for the major. Required: Twelve upper division courses, including French 100, 101, 102; two courses from 114A, 114B, 114C; two courses from French 103, 105, 107, 108A, 108B, 109; Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, and 165A or 165B.

It is strongly advised that students who intend to pursue advanced degrees begin preparation for the language requirements at the undergraduate level.

If your knowledge of French exceeds the preparation usually received in courses preparing for the major and if you demonstrate the requisite attainment in French 100, 101, or 102, you may substitute for those courses in grammar and composition an equivalent number of upper division courses in the French Department in consultation with an adviser. All prospective French majors who are native or quasi-native speakers of French must see the undergraduate adviser before beginning upper division work in the major.

All majors must complete a minimum of nine courses of appropriate upper division work in the UCLA French Department. A maximum of eight units of course 199 may be applied toward the elective requirements for the major if approved in advance by the undergraduate adviser. You must maintain a C average in upper division major courses in order to remain in any of the French majors.

Coursework taken on a Passed/Not Passed basis is not acceptable in any area of the major program.

It is recommended that students intending to major in French consult the undergraduate adviser before enrolling in upper division courses.

Honors Program

The department encourages those students in the French majors with initiative and independence of mind who desire an enriched individualized course of study to apply for the honors program.

The honors program is designed for French majors who have fulfilled their lower division requirements and have a 3.5 departmental grade-point average. Students whose GPA falls between 3.3 and 3.5 should submit a composition from an advanced language or literature course to the honors committee. If the work submitted meets with approval, you are admitted to the program.

To graduate with departmental honors, you must complete a minimum of two honors projects in the context of nonhonors upper division courses (French 115A and above) taken for honors credit. You must do an honors project (a research paper of 12 to 15 pages) in addition to the regular course requirements. An honors contract must be signed before the end of the third week of the term. After completing the project, you fill out a completion form.

On the basis of your coursework and field of interest, you are expected to formulate a research topic you wish to pursue in greater depth. You take course 170 where you receive regular personal supervision from a faculty member in the research, methodology, and writing of your approximately 20- to 25-page honors thesis (honors projects and the honors thesis are not to be confused). Course 170 counts toward the requirements for the French majors as outlined above.

You may begin the honors program toward the end of your junior year or during your senior year. The honors projects and course 170 may be taken over two terms minimum. You are allowed to enroll in graduate courses with the consent of the instructor but cannot use those courses to replace an honors project. Departmental honors will be recorded on your final transcript if you fulfill all requirements for the program. You may submit your final honors thesis for the departmental prize.

Instructional Credential in French

If you wish a single subject instructional credential in French, you must have the consent of the French Department in order to gain admission to student teaching. For the single subject credential, consent is contingent on a major (or equivalent) in French and the successful completion of French 370. For additional information, consult the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies, 1009 Moore Hall (310-825-8328), and/or the French Department.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

The Graduate Record Examination (GRE) General Test, a sample of written work in French, and three letters of recommendation are required and should be sent to the Department of French, 2326 Murphy Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1550. You must hold a Bachelor of Arts in French or the equivalent.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

For practical purposes and ease of identification, the corpus of French literature is referred to in terms of three periods: (1) medieval and

Renaissance, (2) classical (17th and 18th centuries), and (3) modern (19th and 20th centuries, with francophone literature as an option).

Foreign Language Requirement

The foreign language requirement may be fulfilled by (1) passing a course of at least level three in either German, Latin, Spanish, or Italian, (2) by passing the University reading examination in one of these languages, or (3) by passing the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with a score of 500 or better. In special cases, substitution of another foreign language is accepted if approved by the graduate adviser. You must complete the foreign language requirement before you submit your M.A. thesis (Plan I) or take the M.A. examination (Plan II). All candidates for the M.A. must be proficient in spoken French.

Plans of Study

The department offers two master's programs: Plan I (thesis plan) and Plan II (comprehensive examination plan).

Plans I and II Course Requirements — A total of 11 courses in French is required, including French 201 and 203 (should be taken as early as possible), at least two courses in each of the periods, and one additional course in the period not covered on the M.A. examination. For Plan I thesis candidates, this is the period of specialization which is not covered on the oral qualifying examination. At least eight of the courses must be at the graduate level. Four units of course 596 (or 598 for students in Plan I) may be substituted for one required period course with approval of the graduate adviser or thesis director.

Plan I (Thesis Plan) — You may apply to the chair of the department for admission into Plan I after completing at least six graduate courses (200 series), four of which must be literature courses in the French Department. The minimum admission requirements are a 3.5 graduate GPA in French and letters from two graduate professors in the department specifically recommending admission into this plan. A brief statement of your proposed thesis topic is also required.

Final admission into Plan I (i.e., permission to write the thesis) is contingent on passing a one-hour oral examination, administered by the departmental M.A. committee, in the two periods other than the proposed period of specialization (in which you will write the thesis). You normally take the examination during the fourth term (but no later than the sixth term) after admission. Your thesis committee is appointed only after you have passed the examination. If you fail this examination, the examining committee determines whether you may be permitted another attempt or be advised to take the comprehensive examination (Plan II).

For the purpose of course requirements, the period of specialization for the thesis is considered the period not covered on the M.A. examination; course 598 may be applied as one of the three courses required in this period.

The thesis should demonstrate proficiency in the methods and concepts of literary research; a suitable length is normally about 50 pages. A tentative outline of the proposed thesis must be approved in writing by the thesis committee before work on the thesis is begun. Final approval of the thesis by the committee is also required.

Plan II (Comprehensive Examination Plan)

—You must pass written examinations of four hours in length in each of the two periods prepared and a 30-minute oral examination in French covering the two periods of the written examination. The examinations are given in Fall and Spring Quarters and may be retaken once.

Three results are possible in either Plan I or II — fail, pass without admission to the doctoral program, or pass with admission to the doctoral program. The decision concerning admission to the doctoral program is made by the department on the basis of your M.A. examination or thesis results and overall appraisal of your record.

Students who either fail or pass without admission to the doctoral program are permitted to retake the examination or resubmit the thesis once, at a date no later than a year after the first attempt.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

For UCLA applicants, completion of the master's degree in French with recommendation for admission to the doctoral program is required; outside applicants must hold an M.A. degree in French or equivalent and must submit three letters of recommendation, as well as the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) General Test and a sample of written work in French.

Admitted students holding the M.A. or an equivalent degree from another institution must take an oral examen de passage in two periods of literary history (to be selected in consultation with the graduate adviser) in order to be formally admitted to the doctoral program. This examination, administered by the M.A. committee, should be taken during your first year in residence. In case of failure it may be repeated once.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

For practical purposes and ease of identification, the corpus of French literature is referred to in terms of three periods: (1) medieval and Renaissance, (2) classical (17th and 18th centuries), and (3) modern (19th and 20th centuries, with francophone literature as an option).

Foreign Language Requirement

Languages are divided into three groups: Latin; German and Russian; and other Romance languages. You must demonstrate proficiency in two languages at level five, with no more than one from any one group. The languages selected must be approved by your guidance committee. Language requirements may also be satisfied by passing the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with level five corresponding to a score of 550. Substitution of another language, when warranted by the nature of your specialization, must be recommended by the guidance committee and approved by the graduate adviser. Language requirements are to be completed before taking the doctoral qualifying examinations.

Course Requirements

The following courses are required: (1) French 201 and 203, if not already covered at the M.A. level, (2) a minimum of three seminars taken after obtaining the M.A. (balance should be sought between theoretical and literary-historical relevance to your proposed period of specialization), (3) at least two graduate courses in other departments related to the area of specialization. In addition, you are expected to follow the guidance committee's suggestions in taking courses in preparation for the doctoral qualifying examinations.

Qualifying Examinations

Two written examinations of three hours each, based on individual reading lists of approximately 15 works each, are required as follows: (1) focused specifically on the historical area related to the proposed dissertation topic and (2) in areas of critical theory relevant to the proposed dissertation topic. The examinations must be taken within a period of one week; in no case may they be separated by a longer interval. The topics are determined by prior consultation with the doctoral guidance committee. At the discretion of the guidance committee, you may be permitted to retake a failed written examination once.

After passing the written examinations, you are admitted to the University Oral Qualifying Examination which should be taken during the same term as the written qualifying examinations. You must submit a 20- to 30-page prospectus of your proposed dissertation, including an outline and a bibliography. This examination, normally of two hours duration, bears on the written examinations and on the proposed dissertation subject.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

This examination is not required by the department but may be imposed at the discretion of an individual doctoral committee.

Lower Division Courses

If you have taken French elsewhere, you must take a placement test administered by the department. Depending on the results of the placement test or with recommendation of an instructor, you may be permitted to enroll in a course of study at a more advanced level.

No credit is allowed for completing a less advanced course after successful completion of a more advanced course in grammar and/or composition.

1. Elementary French. Lecture, five hours.

1G. Elementary French for Graduate Students (3 units). Preparation for GSFLT or other language examinations. A passing grade does not imply satisfaction of language requirements. S/U grading.

Upper Division Courses

Prerequisites to all upper division courses taken in partial fulfillment of the French major are French 6, 12, or equivalent. Credit is ordinarily not allowed for completing a less advanced course after successful completion of a more advanced course in grammar and/or composition. Courses 105 through 109 are not sequential and may be taken in any order, provided the prerequisites for each course are fulfilled.

100. Introduction to Written Expression. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 6 or equivalent. Development of writing techniques in French, with emphasis on revision of grammatical structures.

Mr. Collaros in charge (F,W,Sp)

101. Intermediate Exposition. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 100 or equivalent. Development of narrative techniques in writing, with emphasis on editing for grammar and style.

Mr. Collaros in charge (F,W,Sp)

102. Advanced Exposition. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 101 or equivalent. Development of analytic writing skills in French, with emphasis on rhetorical techniques and skillful argument.

Mr. Collaros in charge (F,W,Sp)

103. Composition and Style. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 102 or equivalent. Designed to develop proficiency in composition and style, with concentration on three linguistic skills of reading, writing, and translating.

Ms. Dufresne (F,W,Sp)

105. Structure of French. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: course 15, consent of instructor. Prior background in linguistics not required. Introduction to linguistic analysis of French in areas of phonology, morphology, syntax, and language variation.

Ms. Jansma (W)

107. Advanced Oral Expression. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 100 or consent of instructor. Communicative and rhetorical strategies; techniques of oral exposition, argumentation, and analysis.

Ms. Dufresne (F,W,Sp)

108A-108B-108C. Advanced Practical Translation. Lecture, three hours:

108A. Prerequisite: course 103 with a grade of B or consent of instructor. Introduction to translation of advanced texts of general interest, with work in theory of translation.

Mr. Collaros in charge

108B. Prerequisite: course 108A or consent of instructor. Practice in translation of technical documents and texts; comparative stylistics of translation.

Mr. Collaros in charge

108C. Prerequisite: course 108B or consent of instructor. Advanced work in areas of general and specialized interest.

Mr. Collaros in charge

109. French Business: Its Language and Culture. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 6 or equivalent. Study of language of economics and business in France as well as its specific practices and customs.

Mr. Collaros (Sp)

114A-114B-114C. Survey of French Literature. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 12 or consent of instructor. Survey of French literature from the medieval period through the 20th century:

114A. Medieval and Renaissance Literature. Masterpieces of medieval and Renaissance literature, including examples of epic (La Chanson de Roland), romance (Chrétien de Troyes' Yvain), and Renaissance prose and poetry (including Marot, Du Bellay, Ronsard, Rabelais, Marguerite de Navarre, and Montaigne).

Mr. Coleman in charge

114B. 17th and 18th Centuries. Study of selections from major works of classicism and the Enlightenment, including those by Racine, Pascal, La Fayette, La Fontaine, Laclous, Diderot, Voltaire, and Rousseau.

Mr. Coleman in charge

114C. 19th and 20th Centuries. Study of major literary movements and writers of the period, including works by Hugo, Baudelaire, Balzac, Stendhal, Flaubert, Zola, Gide, Proust, Sartre, Robbe-Grillet, and Duras.

Mr. Coleman in charge

115A-115B-115C. Medieval French Literature. Lecture, three hours:

115A. Invention of Love in the 12th Century. Selections from the broad range of lyric poetry and narrative romance in which is first elaborated "romantic" (sometimes called "courtly") love. Readings include works of the troubadours and trouvères, different versions of the Tristan-myth, a romance of Chrétien de Troyes, and first part of Romance of the Rose.

Mr. Haidu

115B. Medieval Knight: Heroism and Its Social Problems. Readings in literature and history of medieval warfare and its ideals in relation to social structure of the time. Texts include La Chanson de Roland, Faoul de Cambrai, La Mort le roi Artu, crusade history, and Georges Duby's Guerriers et paysans.

Mr. Haidu

115C. Comic Structure and Social Class. Medieval comedy, to be studied in relation to class structures and their evolution in the Middle Ages, takes a number of forms. Often obscene in the fabliaux, it can turn parodic in the Roman de Renart, simultaneously satiric, fantastic, and religious in the bourgeois drama of Arras, and utterly charming in the unclassifiable Aucassin et Nicolette.

Mr. Haidu

116A-116B-116C. Renaissance. (Formerly numbered 116A-116D.) Lecture, three hours:

116A. La Pléiade and 16th-Century Poetry. Study of the linguistic and poetic "revolution" brought about by Deffence et Illustration (1549), including texts by Marot, Scève, Labé, Du Bellay, and Ronsard.

Mr. Carron

116B. The Novel and Other Early 16th-Century Prose. Emphasis on Rabelais, with other texts by Marguerite de Navarre and Jean Calvin.

Mr. Carron

116C. Late French Humanism. Emphasis on Montaigne's Essais, with other texts from the Religious Wars period.

Mr. Carron

117A-117B-117C. 17th Century. (Formerly numbered 117A-117D.) Lecture, three hours:

117A. Theater. Study of French comedy and/or tragedy through representative works, including those by Corneille, Molière, and Racine.

Ms. Melzer, Ms. Stefanovska

117B. Prose. Study of 17th-century philosophers, moralists, and/or novelists such as Pascal, La Rochefoucault, La Bruyère, La Fayette, and La Fontaine.

Ms. Melzer, Ms. Stefanovska

117C. Culture and Society. (Formerly numbered 117D.) Study of 17th-century political, social, religious, and courtly aspects, including libertine and salons milieux, la Fronde, and Versailles.

Ms. Melzer, Ms. Stefanovska

118A-118B-118C. 18th Century. Lecture, three hours:

118A. Satire. Readings include Montesquieu's Lettres persannes, Diderot's Neveu de Rameau and Rêve de d'Alembert, and Voltaire's Contes.

Mr. Coleman, Mr. Werner

118B. The Novel. Readings include Prévost's Manon Lescaut, Diderot's La Religieuse and Jacques le fataliste, excerpts from Rousseau's Julie, and Laclous' Les Liaisons dangereuses.

Mr. Coleman, Mr. Werner

118C. Theater. Readings include selected plays of Marivaux and Beaumarchais, as well as selections from theoretical writings of Diderot and Rousseau.

Mr. Coleman, Mr. Werner

119A-119D. 19th Century. Lecture, three hours:

119A. Romanticism. Readings of representative poets, novelists, and playwrights of the Romantic era such as Chateaubriand, Lamartine, Hugo, Vigny, Balzac, and Stendhal.

Ms. Apter, Mr. Gans

119B. Generation of 1848. Readings of representative writers of the 1840s and the Second Empire such as Baudelaire, Nerval, Balzac, Flaubert, and Mérimée. May also include the théâtre à thèse and Parnassian poetry.

Ms. Apter, Mr. Gans

119C. Naturalism and Symbolism. Study of naturalism in the novel and drama as represented by Zola, Maupassant, and Becque, and of symbolism in the poetry of Baudelaire, Verlaine, Rimbaud, and Mallarmé.

Ms. Apter, Mr. Gans

119D. Turn of the Century. Study of genres and trends from 1885 through World War I, with emphasis on prose writers such as Huysmans, Laforgue, Barrès, Alain-Fournier, Jarry, Roussel, France, and Romain-Rolland.

Ms. Apter, Mr. Gans

120A-120D. 20th Century. Lecture, three hours:

120A. Early 20th-Century Writers. Readings of works by Claudel, Apollinaire, Valéry, Gide, and Proust.

Ms. Kao, Ms. Loselle

120B. Literature from 1918 to 1945. Study of works by surrealists and other major writers such as Céline, Malraux, Giraudoux, and Anouilh.

Ms. Kao, Ms. Loselle

120C. Post-World War II Literature. Study of works by existentialists and other major writers such as Robbe-Grillet, Beckett, Genet, Ponge, and Duras.

Ms. Kao, Ms. Loselle

120D. Post-May 1968 Literature. Study of representative works from the "revolution" of 1968 to the present.

Ms. Kao, Ms. Loselle

121A-121B. Contemporary Francophone Literature. Lecture, three hours:

121A. French-African Literature. Survey of literary works of French expression north and south of the Sahara from World War II to the present.

121B. Quebec Literature. Survey of modern Québécois literary works.

Mr. Coleman

124. The Short Story. Lecture, three hours. Survey of short fiction forms in France and the French-speaking world.

Mr. Coleman

125. Evolution of French Comedy. Lecture, three hours. Study of history and evolution of comedy from the Middle Ages to the theater of the absurd.

Ms. Melzer

130A-130B-130C. History of French Civilization and Institutions. Prerequisites: courses 6, 12:

130A. France from Prehistoric Times to the End of the Middle Ages. Lecture, three hours. Fourth hour may be required for viewing films and other laboratory activities.

130B. From the Renaissance to the End of the "Ancien Régime." Lecture, three hours. Fourth hour may be required for viewing films and other laboratory activities.

130C. From the End of the "Ancien Régime" to 1918. Lecture, three hours. Fourth hour may be required for viewing films and other laboratory activities.

132. Contemporary France. Lecture, three hours. Social, cultural, and political institutions and/or movements in 20th-century France.

140. Women's Studies in French Literature. (Formerly numbered 158.) Lecture, three hours. Exploration of a selected aspect of the situation of women in French literature as author, character, symbol, etc.

141. Cinema and Literature in France. (Formerly numbered 138.) Lecture, three hours (additional hours may be required for viewing films and other laboratory activities). Study of interaction between cinema and literature in its generic, thematic, and sociocultural aspects.

142. Poetry and Music. Lecture, three hours. Interdisciplinary study of relation between music and literature, with emphasis on the setting of poetical texts to music, from the troubadours to modern times.

M143. Rhetoric of Rule. (Same as Communication Studies M117.) Lecture, three hours. Exploration of how and why power is symbolically constructed by comparing Louis XIV's and President Clinton's attempts to manipulate their image in the "media" of their respective cultures.

Ms. Melzer

Courses 150 through 156 may be repeated once for credit with consent of major adviser.

150. Studies in Medieval Literature.

151. Studies in 16th-Century Literature.

152. Studies in 17th-Century Literature.

153. Studies in 18th-Century Literature.

154. Studies in 19th-Century Literature.

155. Studies in 20th-Century Literature.

156. Studies in Contemporary Literature of French Expression.

157. Studies in French Critical Theory and Philosophy. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Advanced study of major concepts in contemporary French thought, with attention to its influence on French literature and culture, and its application to literary and nonliterary texts.

158. Studies in History of Ideas. (Formerly numbered 160.) Lecture, three hours. Specific themes which address a particular problem of French literature, civilization, or ideas. May be repeated for credit with consent of major adviser.

The following courses may not be taken for graduate credit but may be taken as the equivalent of out-of-department electives by undergraduate majors.

162. Modern French Thought in Translation. (Formerly numbered 143.) Lecture, three hours. Reading and discussion of contemporary works in translation.

163. Contemporary French Theater in Translation. (Formerly numbered 142.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour.

164A-164B-164C. The French Novel in Translation. (Formerly numbered 144A-144B-144C.) Lecture, three hours. Texts and authors to be studied announced in advance for each offering.

165. Topics in French Literature in Translation. (Formerly numbered 145.) Lecture, three hours. To be announced each term. May not be taken for major or graduate credit but may be considered as an out-of-department elective for purpose of satisfying major requirements.

170. Honors Program in French. (Formerly numbered 140.) Prerequisites: junior or senior standing in French with 3.5 GPA in major, completion of two honors projects, consent of department. Individual study on a topic leading to an honors thesis of approximately 20 to 25 pages to be written under guidance of a faculty member. Ms. Loselle in charge

199. Special Studies in French (2 to 8 units). Prerequisites: junior or senior standing, consent of instructor, consultation with undergraduate adviser. May be repeated once.

Graduate Courses

201. Literary Research and Composition. Lecture, three hours. Introduction to graduate-level literary research, including writing scholarly papers, compilation and presentation of bibliography, and practical work in computer use of data bank.

202. Historical and Philosophical Background to French Literary Criticism. (Formerly numbered 203A.) Lecture, three hours.

203. Contemporary Theories. (Formerly numbered 203B.) Lecture, three hours. Introductory study of representative texts from the works of major modern theoreticians, which may include works by Althusser, Barthes, Derrida, Foucault, Genette, Greimas, Kristeva, and Lacan.

205. Techniques of Literary Analysis. (Formerly numbered 202.) Lecture, three hours. Practice in close analysis of literary texts, including explication de texte.

210A. Phonology and Morphology from Vulgar Latin to French Classicism. (Formerly numbered 204A.) Lecture, three hours. Evolution of the French language. Required of candidates for Ph.D. in Romance Linguistics and Literature who specialize in philology.

210B. Syntax and Semantics from Vulgar Latin to French Classicism. (Formerly numbered 204B.) Lecture, three hours. Evolution of the French language. Required of candidates for Ph.D. in Romance Linguistics and Literature who specialize in philology.

214. Problematics of Medieval Language and Literature. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite to courses 215A through 215D and 250A through 250C. Introduction to Old French and the problematics of medieval literature. Mr. Haidu

215A-215D. Medieval Literature. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 214:

215A. Lyric Types. Mr. Haidu

215B. Narrative Types. Mr. Haidu

215C. Theater — Comic and Religious. Mr. Haidu

215D. Discursive Texts. Mr. Haidu

216A-216B-216C. Renaissance. (Formerly numbered 216A-216E.) Lecture, three hours:

216A. Early Renaissance French Literature. Selected readings of works from first half of the 16th century, including those by Marot, Rabelais, Marguerite de Navarre, and Scève. Mr. Carron

216B. Poetic "Revolution" of 1549. Readings of works by Ronsard and Du Bellay, with selections from other writers of the 1550s. Mr. Carron

216C. Late Renaissance Literature. Selected readings of works by major writers of the period from 1560 to 1600, including d'Aubigné, Sponde, Chassignet, and Montaigne. Mr. Carron

217A-217D. 17th Century. Lecture, three hours:

217A. Theater. Analysis of representative comedies and/or tragedies, including those by Corneille, Molière, and Racine. Ms. Melzer, Ms. Stefanovska

217B. Prose. Readings of selected works by philosophers, moralists, and/or novelists, including Pascal, La Rochefoucault, La Bruyère, La Fayette, and La Fontaine. Ms. Melzer, Ms. Stefanovska

217C. Poetry. Selected readings of works by major poets, including Racan, Voiture, Saint-Amant, Racine, La Fontaine, and Boileau.

Ms. Melzer, Ms. Stefanovska

217D. Culture and Society. Study of political, social, religious, and courtly aspects, including libertine and salons milieux, la Fronde, and Versailles

Ms. Melzer, Ms. Stefanovska

218A-218B-218C. 18th Century. Lecture, three hours:

218A. Topics in the Early Enlightenment. Selected readings from major works of the period from 1680 to 1747. Mr. Coleman, Mr. Werner

218B. Topics in the Enlightenment. Selected readings from major works of the period from 1748 to 1765. Mr. Coleman, Mr. Werner

218C. Topics in the Late Enlightenment. Selected readings from major works of the period from 1766 to 1791. Mr. Coleman, Mr. Werner

219A-219D. 19th Century. Lecture, three hours:

219A. Topics in Romanticism. Readings in literature of the Romantic period. Ms. Apter, Mr. Gans

219B. Topics in Realism and Naturalism. Readings in realist and naturalist novel and theater. Ms. Apter, Mr. Gans

219C. Topics in Symbolism. Readings in symbolist poetry and prose. Ms. Apter, Mr. Gans

219D. Poetry. Study of development of French poetry throughout the 19th century. Ms. Apter, Mr. Gans

220A-220D. 20th Century. Lecture, three hours:

220A. Turn of the Century. Readings of works by post-symbolist writers, as well as Valéry, Gide, and Proust. Ms. Kao, Ms. Loselle

220B. Literature from 1918 to 1945. Readings of works by surrealist writers, as well as Céline, Malraux, and Anouilh. Ms. Kao, Ms. Loselle

220C. Post-World War II Literature. Readings of works by existentialist writers, as well as Robbe-Grillet, Beckett, and Ponge. Ms. Kao, Ms. Loselle

220D. Cinema and Literature. Comparative study of interrelations between cinematic and literary forms.

221A-221B-221C. French-African Literature. Lecture, three hours:

221A. Introduction to Study of French-African Literatures. In-depth survey of French-African literatures prior to independence.

221B. French-African Literature of Madagascar and Bantu Africa. Readings and analysis of major works since independence.

221C. French-African Literature of Berbero-Sudanese and Arabo-Islamic Africa. Readings and analysis of major works since independence.

222. Quebec Literature. Lecture, three hours. Study of selected poems, novels, and plays in their cultural context. Mr. Coleman

241. Introduction to Generative Anthropology. (Formerly numbered 261.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Discussion of principles of generative anthropology and their application to study of literary texts and related cultural phenomena. Mr. Gans

242. Introduction to Study of Narrative. Lecture, three hours. First survey of modern French methodology for critical analysis and interpretation of narrative, with examples from all periods of French literature. Mr. Haidu

Seminars 250A through 260B may be repeated for credit.

250A. Major Medieval Texts. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: course 214. Intensive study of individual texts from multiple perspectives, such as La Chanson de Roland, a romance of Chrétien de Troyes, Le Roman de la rose, or François Villon's Grand Testament. Mr. Haidu

250B. Structures of Medieval Literature. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: course 214. Advanced study of a variety of texts in terms of textual and historical structures. Mr. Haidu

250C. Problems in Medieval Literature. Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: course 214. Exploratory study of a theoretical problem, such as subjectivity and representation in medieval literature, minor or nonclassified texts, individuality and convention, or opposition of religion and secularism. Mr. Haidu

251A-251B. Studies in the Renaissance.

Mr. Carron

252A-252B. Studies in the Baroque.

Mr. Carron, Ms. Melzer

253A-253B. Studies in the 17th Century.

Ms. Melzer, Ms. Stefanovska

254A-254B. Studies in the 18th Century.

Mr. Coleman, Mr. Werner

255A-255B. Studies in the 19th Century.

Ms. Apter, Mr. Gans

256A-256B. Studies in Contemporary Literature.

Ms. Kao, Ms. Loselle

257A-257B. Studies in French-African Literature.

258A-258B. Studies in Literary Criticism.

259A-259B. Studies in Philosophy and Literature.

260A-260B. Studies in History of Ideas. Particular problems in French literature and ideas.

370. Teaching French in Secondary School. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Required of all candidates for general secondary instructional credential in French. Ms. Dufresne, Ms. Jansma

375. Teaching Apprentice Practicum (1 to 4 units). Prerequisite: apprentice personnel employment as a teaching assistant, associate, or fellow. Teaching apprenticeship under active guidance and supervision of a regular faculty member responsible for curriculum and instruction at the University. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

495. Teaching French at College Level. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: graduate standing. Theory and practice of language teaching. S/U grading. Ms. Dufresne, Ms. Jansma

596. Directed Individual Studies or Research (2 to 4 units).

597. Preparation for M.A. Comprehensive Examination or Ph.D. Qualifying Examinations (2 to 8 units). May be repeated for a maximum of 16 units. S/U grading.

598. Research for and Preparation of M.A. Thesis (2 to 4 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. A maximum of four units may be applied toward M.A. degree requirements. S/U grading.

599. Research for and Preparation of Ph.D. Dissertation (2 to 8 units). S/U grading.

Scope and Objectives

Geography is concerned primarily with interpreting and explaining the occurrence, distribution, and interrelationships of the physical and social elements which can be seen in the landscape. The geographer concentrates on two essential questions: where are things located? and why are they located where they are? The answer to the former is largely descriptive, but the answer to the latter involves theory and analysis. The geographer's challenge is to provide continuing interpretation of the constantly changing physical and human landscapes on the Earth's surface.

The research and teaching interests of the faculty, ranked sixth nationally by the Conference Board of the Associated Research Councils, cover major areas of geographical knowledge and underlie both the undergraduate and graduate instructional programs. These areas of interest may be broadly grouped into urban and regional development studies, spatial demography and social processes in the city, culture and environment in the modern world, physical geography, and biogeography.

Geography is an especially attractive major for liberal arts students. Its body of theory and its methodologies provide ideas and techniques applicable to a wide range of questions about our environment; it also provides both the regional and world perspectives required of responsible citizens.

The department offers two undergraduate majors that lead to the Bachelor of Arts degree: (1) the major in geography and (2) the major in geography/environmental studies. The majors prepare students for employment opportunities in both the public and private sectors (in environmental analysis, assessment, and management, map making and remote sensing, regional analysis, economic and urban spatial analysis, and teaching) and for graduate study in law, management, urban and regional planning, education, other biophysical and social sciences, and applied programs, as well as in geography.

Producing geographers of high quality is the principal goal of the graduate program, designed primarily for students pursuing the Ph.D. degree. The Master of Arts degree, which involves coursework and a thesis, serves as an essential building-block of the doctoral program. The doctorate is awarded to those students who have achieved the level of geographical knowledge and training required of a professional geographer. The degree recognizes the ability of students to make scholarly contributions in their fields of specialization and to undertake advanced research in those areas.

Bachelor of Arts in Geography

Geography majors are encouraged to consult with the undergraduate adviser for the planning of a program suitable to their particular and individual objectives.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Geography 1, 2, 3, 4, 40. All courses must be taken for a letter grade.

The Major

Required: Ten upper division geography courses taken for a letter grade, which must include (1) five courses from one of the "Concentrations for the Major" listed below, (2) three additional courses in at least two different concentrations, (3) one regional course, and (4) one procedures course.

Concentrations for the Major

By the end of your junior year and no later than the beginning of your senior year, you are required to declare your specific concentration by filing a statement with the undergraduate adviser. The purpose of the concentration requirement is to expose you to systematic in-depth work within a specific area of geography. Completion of a concentration requires five upper division geography courses. You must take a concentration's required course(s), if any, before declaring that concentration. You must select one of the following concentrations and meet its course requirements:

(1) Urban and Regional Development Studies

Five of the following: 135, 148, 150, 155, 157, 159A

(2) Spatial Demography and Social Processes in the City

Required: 142
 Four of the following: 143, 144, M145, M146A, M146B, M147, 150, 156, 159B

(3) Culture and Environment in the Modern World

Five of the following: 130, 133, 134, 135, 136, 140, 151, 159C

(4) Physical Geography

Required: 100, 100A, 104, 105, 105A
 Two of the following: 101, 103, 106, 107, 113, 159D

(5) Biogeography

Five of the following: 108, 111, 112, 117, 118, 122, 123, 159E, 163

Foreign Language/Mathematics Requirement

Every geography major is required to pass five quarter courses in foreign language (in no more than two languages) or mathematics, in any combination. In foreign language, the department accepts UCLA foreign language departmental proficiency examination scores as evidence of foreign language competency. All students who entered UCLA as a geography major and/or declared the geography major during Fall Quarter 1988 and thereafter may not apply high school foreign language courses toward this requirement. In mathematics, only Mathematics 2, 3A, 3B, 3C, 5, 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, or equivalent are acceptable. A grade of Passed or C (or better) is required in all courses intended to satisfy this requirement.

Allied Fields

You must develop some competence in an allied field. This requirement consists of at least two upper division courses selected from at least one of the following disciplines: Afro-American studies, anthropology, art history, Asian American studies, atmospheric sciences, biology, chemistry, Chicana and Chicano studies, communication studies, Earth and space sciences, economics, folklore, history, management, philosophy, physics, political science, psychology, public health, sociology, women's studies. Urban Planning 187 and M190 are also acceptable. Other disciplines require departmental consent.

Honors Program

Honors in the geography major may be obtained through procedures described under Geography 199HA-199HB.

Bachelor of Arts in Geography/Environmental Studies

The major in geography/environmental studies develops and deepens students' understanding of environmental issues; it explores problem-solving approaches from an interdisciplinary viewpoint and from the analysis of social, physical, and biotic environmental systems. The major's uniqueness lies in its emphasis on social science perspectives of human impacts on natural systems, as well as of implications of global change on local and regional human systems.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Biology 2 or 5, Geography 5, 40, three courses from 1, 2, 3, 4. All courses must be taken for a letter grade. Recommended: Biology 6, 21, Chemistry and Biochemistry 2 or 11A, Mathematics 3A, 3B, Philosophy 6, Political Science 20. Students considering graduate work are strongly advised to include Chemistry and Biochemistry 11A, 11B, Mathematics 31A, 31B, and 32A in their program.

The Major

Required: Ten upper division geography courses taken for a letter grade which must include (1) five courses from the environmental studies cluster (Geography 107, 109, 110, 114, M115, 116, 120, 121, 124, 125, 126, M128, 129, 131, 134, 135, 136), (2) three courses in at least two geography concentrations, (3) one regional course, and (4) one procedures course. A minimum of two upper division courses must be taken as electives in other social sciences departments (Anthropology, Economics, History, Political Science, Sociology), the Urban Planning Program (Graduate School of Architecture and Urban Planning), or the School of Public Health.

Foreign Language/Mathematics Requirement

Every geography/environmental studies major is required to pass five quarter courses in foreign language (in no more than two languages) or mathematics, in any combination. In foreign language, the department accepts UCLA foreign language departmental proficiency examination scores as evidence of foreign language competency. All students who entered UCLA as a geography/environmental studies major and/or declared the geography/environmental studies major during Fall Quarter 1988 and thereafter may not apply high school foreign language courses toward this requirement. In mathematics, only Mathematics 2, 3A, 3B, 3C, 5, 31A, 31B, 32A, 32B, 33A, or equivalent are acceptable. A grade of Passed or C (or better) is required in all courses intended to satisfy this requirement.

Honors Program

Honors in the geography/environmental studies major may be obtained through procedures described under Geography 199HA-199HB.

Specialization in Computing

Majors in geography and geography/environmental studies may select a specialization in computing by (1) satisfying all the requirements for a bachelor's degree in the specified major, (2) completing Program in Computing 10A, 10B, 30, 60, and Mathematics 61 with a minimum grade of C in each course (Mathematics 32A and 32B are also highly recommended), and (3) completing at least two courses from Geography 104, 167, 168, 171. You graduate with a bachelor's degree in your major and a specialization in computing.

Graduate Study

Admission

Information, graduate brochures, and admission forms may be obtained by writing to the Graduate Adviser, Department of Geography, 1255 Bunche Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1524.

Application may be made for admission to any term. You must submit an official application, a complete set of transcripts of prior university coursework, the results of the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) General Test, and three letters of evaluation. Normally you should have (1) completed the undergraduate major in geography or a related field, (2) received a bachelor's degree, (3) attained at least a 3.3 grade-point average in courses taken in your junior and senior years and in the major for admission to the M.A. program, or a 3.5 GPA in graduate courses if you enter with an M.A., (4) attained a high GRE score (normally well above 1,200) in the combined verbal and quantitative sections, and (5) strong letters evaluating past academic and/or professional performance and indicating potential for high achievement in graduate studies. Exceptions to the guidelines may be made for students whose records indicate unusual promise.

Admission to the Ph.D. program usually requires an M.A. or M.S. degree. You must provide clear evidence of ability to conduct substantive research and to articulate ideas clearly in writing. In addition, a faculty member must be willing to serve as your interim adviser. Under rare circumstances, you may proceed directly toward the Ph.D. degree without taking a master's degree. You must have completed one year in the M.A. program, have three department faculty members review your dossier and unanimously recommend such a course of action, and pass a four-hour qualifying examination.

The Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) is normally required of all international applicants whose native language is not English.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

Students commonly specialize in one or more of the following areas of geographical knowledge: environmental studies, geomorphology, climatology, biogeography, cartography, and economic, social, cultural/historical, or urban geography. At the M.A. level students emphasize at least one of these specialized areas. The written qualifying examinations for the Ph.D. include one paper in each of three of the above fields, as selected by you in consultation with your adviser. However, because geographical knowledge and its associated research questions frequently transcend disciplinary and interdisciplinary boundaries, you are expected to refine and deepen your research interests further, in consultation with knowledgeable faculty members, within, across, and beyond these organized research and teaching areas.

Foreign Language Requirement

There is no foreign language requirement for either the M.A. or Ph.D. degree.

Spring Quarter Review

Every Spring Quarter faculty members hold a review of all graduate students in the department to assess each student's progress toward the degree and to provide each student with that appraisal. Contact the graduate adviser for further details on the review.

Individual Studies/Teaching Courses

Contact the graduate adviser for details on the special rules governing enrollment in and application toward the degree of Geography 199, 596, 597, 598, and 599.

Courses 375 and 495 may not be applied toward the minimum course requirement for either the M.A. or Ph.D. degree.

Master of Arts Degree

Course Requirements

You must complete at least six courses in addition to the three required core courses (Geography 298A, 298B, 298C), for a minimum of 36 units. The core courses must be completed within two years and with a grade of B- or better in each (if you enter with a geography major, you should complete them in your first year). Four (16 units) of the six noncore courses must be 200-series (graduate) courses; the remaining two may be 500-series or 100-series courses. Your program must have the approval of the faculty mentor.

Two 500-series courses may be applied toward the minimum course requirement for the M.A. degree but not toward the minimum graduate course requirement.

Thesis Plan

You must present a thesis, based in whole or in part on original investigation. Selection of a thesis topic, creation of a scientific design, and conduct of the investigation proceed initially under the supervision of your M.A. committee. The thesis proposal should include the exact nature of the problem to be researched, an outline of the subject matter, the proposed methods of research, the degree of originality involved, and the anticipated time of completion of the study. You must carry out the entire project in close consultation with all members of your thesis committee. Your M.A. degree requirements must be completed within five calendar years of admission to graduate standing at UCLA.

Ph.D. Degree

Course Requirements

You must successfully complete, within two years and with a grade of B- or better in each, the required core courses (Geography 298A, 298B, 298C) if these have not already been taken at the M.A. level. If you enter with a geography degree, you should complete them in your first year. You are also required to take at least three graduate geography courses in addition to your M.A. coursework (excluding 298A, 298B, 298C, 375, 495, and the 500 series) and three upper division or graduate courses in one or two fields (outside of geography) allied to your major research area or interdisciplinary specialization, subject to approval of your guidance committee. The allied field requirement must be met before you can take the oral qualifying examination. Your program of coursework must be approved by your guidance committee and the graduate adviser each term.

Qualifying Examinations

You must take the written qualifying examination, which consists of five written papers and is administered by your guidance committee, no later than your sixth term in the Ph.D. program (exceptions may be made in case you are entering from disciplines outside geography). Three papers pertain to the three major fields in which you are specializing; one general paper addresses the major issues, developments, debates, etc., in the field at large; and one paper involves a field problem. The examination may be taken over a period of no more than two weeks. In case of failure, you may make one further attempt, but no sooner than three months nor longer than one year after the first examination. Preparation of your dissertation proposal follows successful completion of the written qualifying examination.

The University Oral Qualifying Examination, conducted by your official doctoral committee, focuses on your dissertation proposal. Once you have successfully completed the oral qualifying examination, you are eligible for advancement to candidacy. In instances of failure, the oral examination may be repeated once.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Dissertation/Final Oral Examination

The dissertation is the ultimate focus of your Ph.D. program and should demonstrate your ability to conduct an independent investigation of high quality in a selected field of study. The dissertation should be designed and executed in such a way as to make a significant original contribution to geographic research, a contribution that is worthy of publication, in part or as a whole, in a reputable scientific medium.

A final oral defense of the dissertation may be required by the dissertation committee. Your Ph.D. degree requirements must be completed within seven calendar years of admission to graduate standing at UCLA.

Lower Division Courses

Contact the department office to learn of additional offerings, seminar topics, and specific instructors for the term you wish to enroll in courses in geography.

1. Physical Environment. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Study of Earth's physical environment, with particular reference to the nature and distribution of landforms and climate.

2. Biogeography. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Enforced requisite: course 1. Study of Earth's biosphere, with particular reference to evolution and distribution of plants, animals, and soils.

3. Cultural Geography. Lecture, three hours; discussion, 90 minutes. Broad examination of basic cultural variables in human occupation of Earth's surface. Ecological, spatial, and historical approaches.

4. Introduction to Economic Geography. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, one hour. Introduction to basic concepts used in modern urban and economic geography. Emphasis on giving better understanding of effects of location on human behavior. Discussion and practical exercises on analysis of problems in the Los Angeles urban environment.

5. People and the Earth's Ecosystems. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Examination of historical and contemporary roles of man as a major agent of biological change in Earth's ecosystems.

40. Geographical Statistics. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, 90 minutes. Enforced requisites or corequisites: courses 1, 4. Satisfies statistics requirement for geography major. Presentation and interpretation of data, descriptive statistics and measures of spatial patterns, introduction to statistical inference and measures of association. Ms. Fan, Mr. Rigby

88A-88Z. Lower Division Seminars: Geography. (Formerly numbered 88.) Discussion, three hours; reading period, one hour. Seminars designed to explore various themes and issues pertinent to environment and people. Seminar topics advertised in department during previous term. P/NP or letter grading.

Upper Division Courses

100. Principles of Geomorphology. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 1 or consent of instructor. Corequisite: course 100A. Study of processes that shape the world's landforms, with emphasis on weathering, mass movement and fluvial erosion, transport, deposition; energy and material transfers; space and time considerations. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Orme

100A. Principles of Geomorphology: Field and Laboratory (2 units). Laboratory/fieldwork, six hours. Corequisite: course 100. Field and laboratory investigations of weathering, mass movement, fluvial erosion, transport, deposition; related geomorphic phenomena. Mr. Orme

101. Coastal Geomorphology. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 1. Study of origin and development of coastal landforms, emphasizing past and present changes, hydrodynamic processes, sediment transfers, and such features as beaches, estuaries, lagoons, deltas, wetlands, dunes, seacliffs, and coral reefs, together with coastal zone management. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Orme

101A. Coastal Geomorphology: Field and Laboratory (2 units). Laboratory/fieldwork, six hours. Corequisite: course 101. Field and laboratory investigations of coastal landforms, emphasizing past and present changes, hydrodynamic processes, sediment transfers, and such features as beaches, estuaries, lagoons, deltas, wetlands, dunes, and seacliffs, together with coastal zone management. Mr. Orme

103. Paleoclimatology and Ice-Age Environments. (Not the same as course 103 prior to Fall Quarter 1991.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 1 or consent of instructor. Study of past climates and their environmental impact, with emphasis on the last three million years, including evidence for glacial and interglacial oscillations, historic changes, paleogeographic reconstruction, external and internal forcing mechanisms, and human implications. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Orme

104. Climatology. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Examination of the many relations between climate and the world of man. Application of basic energy budget concepts to the microclimates of relevance to ecosystems of agriculture, animals, man, and urban places. Mr. Feddema, Ms. Raphael

105. Hydrology. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 1 or equivalent. Corequisite: course 105A. Role of water in geographic systems: hydrologic phenomena in relation to climate, landforms, soils, vegetation, and cultural processes and impacts on the landscape. Field projects required. Mr. Trimble

105A. Hydrology: Field and Laboratory (2 units). Laboratory/fieldwork, six hours. Corequisite: course 105. Field and laboratory investigations into role of water in geographic systems: hydrologic phenomena in relation to climate, landforms, soils, vegetation, and cultural processes and impacts on the landscape. Students solve applied hydrology problems in lab and make hydrologic measurements in the field. Mr. Trimble

106. Soils. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: course 1 or equivalent and Chemistry 11A, or consent of instructor. Corequisite: course 106A. Study of origins, evolution, properties, and utilization of soils, with special emphasis on world's major soil groups.

106A. Soils: Laboratory (2 units). Laboratory/fieldwork, six hours. Corequisite: course 106. Study of natural development of soils, physical and chemical properties of soil, and uses of soil. Analysis of pH, moisture, texture, nutrients, and organics. Includes one-day field trip.

107. Soil and Water Conservation. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 105 or Civil Engineering 150 or equivalent. Recommended: courses 100, 106, 160. Systematic study of processes of and hazards posed by erosion, sedimentation, and pollution and techniques needed to conserve soil and maintain environmental quality. Scope includes agriculture, forest engineering, mining, and other rural uses of land. Mr. Trimble

108. World Vegetation. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 2, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Characteristics, distribution, environmental and cultural relationships of world's principal vegetation patterns.

109. Environmental Systems. (Not the same as course 109 prior to Fall Quarter 1991.) Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: course 5, three courses from 1, 2, 3, 4. Introduction to analysis of interactive environmental systems, including examples of physicoecological and socioeconomic systems affected by natural and anthropogenic disturbance. Intended to demonstrate utility of systems approach for environmental problem solving. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Orme, Mr. Rigby, Mr. Walter (F)

110. Population and Natural Resources. (Not the same as course 110 prior to Fall Quarter 1991.) Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Recommended (but not prerequisite): course 142. Examination of debate about environmental change and ability of the planet to maintain a growing population. Introduction and evaluation of basic demographic processes in context of food production, energy use, and environmental degradation. Discussion of major debates about use of resources in context of increasing population in developing countries and decreasing population in Western countries. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Clark, Ms. Fan (W)

111. Forest Ecosystems. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour; field trips. Prerequisites: courses 2, 40, Biology 5, 6, or equivalent. Evaluation of ecological principles as they apply to forests. Emphasis on constraints of physical environment, biotic interactions, succession, disturbances, and long-term environmental change. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Savage

112. Analytical Animal Geography. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1, 2, 40 (or Statistics 50). Analysis of processes of expanding and contracting distribution areas. Focus on island biogeography and its implications for biodiversity trends in natural and anthropogenic environments. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Walter

113. Clastic Sedimentation Processes in Geomorphology. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 1, 100, and 105, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Recommended: courses 101, 103, 107, or equivalent. Study of clastic sedimentation transport and deposition processes in geomorphology. Topics include basic fluid mechanics and sediment transport; tectonic framework of sedimentation; general overview of depositional environments; and more detailed discussion of selected environments.

114. Ideas of Nature and Environmental Values. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. History of ideas of nature and the environment. Relationship of those ideas to contemporary ethical and political concerns about the environment and the place of humans within it. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Curry

M115. Environmentalism: Past, Present, and Future (4 to 6 units). (Same as Urban Planning CM189.) Discussion, three hours; optional field study, five to 10 hours. Exploration of history, politics, and theories of environmental movements, dynamics of race, class, and gender in relation to environmental agendas, and potential role of environmentalism in reshaping our society. Readings, discussion, and research papers. Offered annually as a graduate research seminar and biannually as an undergraduate upper division lecture and field studies program. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Gottlieb

116. Origins and Histories of Crop Plants. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1, 2, and Biology 2, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Geographic patterns of domestication and diffusion of useful plants from antiquity to the present, based on detailed case histories of selected species.

117. Animal Geography: Anthropogenic Factors. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1, 2, 5, and Biology 2 or equivalent. Study of human cultural factors influencing animal distributions; roles of animals in human societies; origins and diffusion of domesticated animals. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Bennett, Mr. Walter

118. Medical Geography. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 5 or consent of instructor. Examination of patterns of population/place/disease interactions and some effects of change and development on disease etiology and problems of health care. Mr. Matthews

119. Agricultural and Pastoral Ecosystems. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1, 2, 5, 116, and 112 or 117, or equivalent. Recommended: courses 120, 121. Students who do not meet prerequisites should not attempt this course. Geographical, ecological, and historical analysis of world's agricultural and pastoral systems. Emphasis on energy flows, nutrient cycles, and ecological and social problems associated with the various systems.

120. Conservation of Resources: North America. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 2, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Analysis of basic principles and problems associated with conservation of natural resources in the U.S. and Canada. Mr. Bennett, Mr. McKnight, Mr. Trimble

121. Conservation of Resources: Underdeveloped World. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1, 2, 120, or equivalent, upper division standing. Analysis of principles and problems of conservation of natural resources of the underdeveloped world. Mr. Bennett

122. Wildlife Conservation in Eastern Africa. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1, 2, 5. Analysis of tropical ecosystems of eastern Africa, including wildlife communities, vegetation, climate, and human impact. Discussion of national park systems and their natural and anthropogenic ecological dynamics. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Walter

123. Bioresource Management. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 2, 5. Recommended: course 40. Theory and practice of management and conservation of bioresources. Introduction to wildlife management, endangered species conservation, and design and maintenance of National Parks and ecological reserves. Mr. Walter

124. Environmental Impact Analysis. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 40, 123, two environmental studies cluster courses. Introduction to interdisciplinary analysis of local and regional impacts on environmental systems. Evaluation of state and federal concepts for analysis of environmental impact. P/NP or letter grading.

125. Health and the Global Environment. (Not the same as course 125 prior to Fall Quarter 1991.) Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Impact of the environment and lifestyle on individual health examined from a geographical perspective, with examples from both developed and developing countries. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Matthews (Sp)

126. Geography of Extinction. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: course 5, upper division standing. Geographic and taxonomic survey and analysis of biotic extinctions over the past 15,000 years. Identification of extinction factors and pathways through case studies of extinct and endangered species and communities. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Walter

M127. Soils, Plants, and Society. (Same as Biology M127.) Lecture, three hours; field trip. Prerequisites: Chemistry 11A, 11B, and 11C, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. General treatment of soil development and morphology and physical and chemical properties of soils as they relate to plant growth and distribution; soil resources, management, conservation, and cultural aspects. Use of soil profiles examined on field trip to explain developmental phenomena.

M128. Global Environment: Problems and Issues. (Formerly numbered 128.) (Same as Urban Planning CM128.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 5. Analysis of selected environmental problems and issues associated with human-induced ecological disturbances. In-depth evaluation of key problem factors and processes using a multidisciplinary approach. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Carney, Ms. Savage

129. Seminar: Environmental Studies. Lecture, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisites: three environmental studies cluster courses, senior standing. Qualitative/quantitative analysis of problems associated with rational protection and use of selected environmental systems (urban, rural, forest, desert, coastal, water, soil, or others).

130. Geographical Discovery and Exploration. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Survey of history of exploration, from earliest times to modern, with emphasis on period from Marco Polo to the present. Mr. Thrower

131. Geography of Deforestation. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Primary examination of landscape change but also introduction of forces tending to exploit and conserve forests. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Savage (Sp)

133. Cultural Geography of the Modern World. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 3 or equivalent. Evolutionary and structural approach to sociocultural geography of the modern world system, with particular emphasis on structure and functioning of its core, semi-periphery, and periphery. Mr. Hale

134. Space, Place, and Nature in Western Thought. Lecture, three hours. History of development of basic ideas of geography — space, place, and nature — in Western thought. Relationship between those ideas and conceptions of science, knowledge, and inquiry. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Curry, Mr. Entrikin

135. African Ecology and Development. (Not the same as course 135 prior to Fall Quarter 1991.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Overview of contemporary ecological and development issues in sub-Saharan Africa. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Carney

136. Technology, Nature, and the American Landscape. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Study of evolution of cultural landscapes of the area that is now the U.S. Examination of past geographies and of geographical change through time. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Curry

140. Political Geography. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Spatiality of political activity, spatial constitution of political power, control over space as central component to political struggles. Studies at local, national, state, and global scales. P/NP or letter grading.

Mr. Hale

142. Population Geography. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Study of social and behavioral perspectives influencing people in their patterns of demographic change, migration, and mobility, with special emphasis on spatial relationships and selected case studies. Mr. Clark, Ms. Fan

143. Geography of Health Care. Lecture, three hours. Examination of geography of health care delivery and planning, focusing on factors which influence accessibility and utilization of health services by consumers. Spatial aspects of organization of health care influence who gets care where. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Matthews

144. Ethnicity in the American City. Lecture, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisite: course 4. Designed to encourage and facilitate critical thinking about geographical aspects of ethnicity in contemporary America, with focus specifically on nonwhite ethnic minorities (blacks, Hispanics, Asian Americans, and Native Americans). Use of a comparative perspective to explain changing distribution, social, economic, and political behavior, and adjustment problems these groups face in the contemporary American city. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Fan

M145. Urban Poverty and Public Policy in the U.S. (Not the same as course 145 prior to Fall Quarter 1991.) (Same as Sociology M144.) Historical overview of urban poverty and social welfare programs; ongoing debates about causes and consequences of poverty. Ms. Ortiz (F)

M146A-M146B. Contemporary Issues in Urban Poverty Research. (Not the same as course 146 prior to Fall Quarter 1991.) (Same as Sociology M196A-M196B.) Prerequisite: course 150. Two-term research seminar designed to engage students in ongoing faculty research projects focusing on models of urban poverty and underclass behavior. Mr. Oliver, Ms. Ortiz

M147. Urban Poverty and Public Policy in the U.S. (Field Component). (Same as Sociology M107.) Prerequisite: course M145. Corequisite: one course from 150 or 159A through 159E. Supplements and enriches students' academic understanding of urban poverty and the underclass by personal exposure and direct observation in a field setting. Students required to develop a plan of service in a local social service agency and observe policy formulation and implementation. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Oliver, Ms. Ortiz

148. Economic Geography. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 4 or consent of instructor. Geographical aspects of economic production and growth. General theory of the space-economy. Land-use processes. Location of industry. Regional development. Mr. Scott

M149. Transportation Geography. (Formerly numbered 149.) (Same as Urban Planning M149.) Prerequisite: course 3 or 4 or upper division standing. Study of geographical aspects of transportation, focusing on characteristics and functions of the various modes and on complexities of intra-urban transport.

150. Urban Geography. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Analysis of development, functions, spatial patterns, and geographic problems of American cities. Mr. Clark, Mr. Scott

151. Historical Geography of Cities. Prerequisites: courses 3 and 4, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Survey of diffusion and growth of cities in Western civilization. Development of city systems and evolution of urban internal spatial structure.

155. Industrial Location and Regional Development. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: course 4. Reexamination of industrial local theory in light of contemporary theories of industrial organization and local labor markets. Consideration of empirical patterns of industrialization and regional growth, with special reference to Frostbelt/Sunbelt shifts and off-shore relocation. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Scott

156. Metropolitan Los Angeles. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Study of origins, growth processes, internal structure and pattern, interactions, environmental and spatial problems of the Los Angeles metropolitan area. Mr. Clark

157. Models of Regional Growth and Change. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 4. Recommended: course 40. Examination of empirical and theoretical issues of regional growth and change. Introduction to supply and demand-based models of regional development. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Rigby

159A-159E. Problems in Geography. (Formerly numbered 159.) Discussion, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: completion of three courses in a concentration, senior standing. Seminar course in which students carry out intensive research projects developed from courses within a concentration. P/NP or letter grading.

Procedures

160. Field and Laboratory Analysis in Geomorphology. Laboratory/fieldwork, eight hours. Prerequisites: course 100 and two courses from 101, 103, 105, 106, 107. Limited to geography and environmental studies majors, with enrollment priority to seniors, then to juniors. Students must pre enroll in department during prior term. Examination of field and laboratory procedures and intellectual concepts used in observation, measurement, analysis, and interpretation of landforms, constituent materials, and relevant processes. Mr. Orme, Mr. Trimble

163. Field Analysis in Biogeography. Fieldwork, eight hours. Prerequisites: courses 2, 5, 110, 112. Examination of field procedures and intellectual concepts used in observation, measurement, analysis, and interpretation of phenomena pertinent to biogeography and interrelated human influences. P/NP or letter grading. Ms. Savage, Mr. Walter

167. Cartography (6 units). Lecture, two hours; laboratory, six hours; independent study, three hours. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Survey of the field of cartography. Theory and construction of map projections, compilation procedures, principles of generalization, symbolization, terrain representation, lettering, drafting and scribing, and map reproduction methods. Mr. Matthews

168. Computer Cartography. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, two hours; independent study, two hours. Prerequisites: Program in Computing 3 or 10A, consent of instructor. Recommended: course 167. Theory and methods of mapping quantitative information with a computer. Problems of acquiring and processing machine-readable map data and representing them as point symbols and surfaces. Mr. Matthews

169. The Earth from Above. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1, 3, and 4, or consent of instructor. Interface between cartography and remote sensing. By means of a wide variety of imagery from maps and satellite photos, different landscapes analyzed and explained. Mr. Thrower

170. Geographical Information Systems and Spatial Analysis. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, two hours. Prerequisites: courses 40, and 167 or 168. Geographic information systems (GIS) have grown out of a number of technologies and application fields concerned with geographic location of their objects of study. Review of development and present applications of GIS technology, detailing collection, input, manipulation, and analysis of data in GIS. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Matthews (Sp)

171. Quantitative Analysis. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, one hour. Prerequisite: course 40 or consent of instructor. Introduction to methods of measurement and interpretation of geographic distributions and associations. Mr. Matthews, Mr. Rigby

M178. Dating Techniques in Environmental Sciences and Archaeology. (Same as Anthropology M116Q.) Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Introduction to scientific dating methods such as radiocarbon dating, radiation damage methods, biological dating techniques, and magnetic dating, and applications in environmental sciences, archaeology, and physical anthropology. Mr. Berger

Regions

180. North America. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Delimitation and analysis of principal geographic regions of the U.S. and Canada. Mr. McKnight

181. Mexico, Central America, Caribbean. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: upper division standing. Study of geographic factors, physical and cultural, that are basic to understanding the historical development of Middle America and the contemporary economic and cultural geography of Mexico and countries of Central America and the West Indies. P/NP or letter grading. Mr. Bennett

182A. Spanish South America. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Study of geographic factors, physical and cultural, that are basic to understanding the historical development of Spanish South America and the contemporary economic and cultural geography of the individual Spanish-speaking countries. Mr. Bennett

182B. Brazil. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Study of geographic factors, physical and cultural, that are basic to understanding the historical development of Portuguese South America and the contemporary economic and cultural geography of Brazil. Mr. Bennett

183. Europe. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Study of geographic conditions and their relation to economic, social, and political problems in Europe.

184. Soviet Union. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Study of geographic conditions and their relation to economic, social, and political problems in the Soviet Union.

185. South and Southeast Asia. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Regional synthesis with varying emphasis on the people of South or Southeast Asia in their physical, biotic, and cultural environment and its dynamic transformation.

186. Contemporary China. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Systematic geographic analysis of elements of landscape, resources, population, and socioeconomic characteristics of the People's Republic of China. Dynamics that have led to China's major role in the East Asian and international scene, with special attention to China-Japan and Sino-American relations and their geographic bases. Ms. Fan

187. Middle East. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Analysis of economic, social, and political geography of the area extending from Iran to Morocco and from Turkey to Sudan. Emphasis on geographical themes and problems during historical and modern times. Mr. Hale

188. Northern Africa. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Analysis of economic, social, and political geography of the area including Mediterranean Africa, Sahara, Sudanic belt, and eastern Horn. Emphasis on geographical themes and problems during historical and modern times. Mr. Hale

189. Middle and Southern Africa. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Regions of Africa south of the Sahara (middle and southern Africa) in terms of physical features, human settlement, economic production, and political patterns. Mr. Hale

190. Australasia. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Regional synthesis of physical and cultural features which characterize Australia, New Zealand, and the islands of the South Pacific. Mr. McKnight

191. California. Prerequisites: courses 1 and 3, or equivalent, or upper division standing. Systematic and regional treatment of geography of California, including physical, cultural, and economic aspects and detailed studies of the various regions. Mr. McKnight

Special Studies

199. Special Studies (2 to 8 units). Hours to be arranged. Prerequisites: junior standing with a B average in the major or senior standing, consent of instructor.

199HA-199HB. Honors in Geography I, II. Hours to be arranged. Prerequisites: 3.25 GPA overall, at least five upper division geography courses with a 3.5 GPA. 199HA. Independent study course taught by team of two faculty members who assist student with bibliographic research and/or field research on a topic of mutual interest to student and the faculty members. Successful completion of course 199HA entails preparation of a detailed bibliography and outline (to be evaluated by the two faculty members) for writing of a substantial paper during course 199HB. If that work is determined to be of A quality, student is allowed to continue in honors program. If that work is graded B or below, credit is awarded, but student is not permitted to continue in honors program. 199HB. Devoted to writing of substantial paper researched and outlined in course 199HA. It also is evaluated by the two faculty members. If paper is determined to be of A quality, student graduates with honors in geography. If paper is graded B or below, credit is awarded, but student does not receive honors.

199I. Independent Studies for Internships (2 to 4 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Independent studies course to be supervised jointly by Field Studies Office and faculty adviser. Further supervision to be provided by placement for which student is doing internship. May not be applied toward major requirements. P/NP grading.

Graduate Courses

Environment

200. History and Paradigms of Geomorphology. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, eight hours. Prerequisites: course 100, two courses from 101, 103, 105, 106, 107. Analysis of geomorphic theories since the scientific revolution, with emphasis on catastrophism, uniformitarianism, glacial theories, isostasy and eustasy, evolution and cyclicity, thermodynamics and mechanics, quantification, and current paradigms. View of each theme in its contemporary milieu. Mr. Orme

201. Coastal Geomorphology Seminar. Discussion, three hours; reading period, five hours; fieldwork. Prerequisites: courses 100, 101. Discussion of selected topics pertaining to geomorphic processes and responses observable in the coastal zone. May be repeated for credit. Mr. Orme

202. Fluvial Geomorphology Seminar. Discussion, three hours; reading period, five hours; fieldwork. Prerequisites: courses 100 and 105, or Civil Engineering 150. Discussion of selected topics pertaining to action of running water in shaping the physical landscape. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Trimble

203. Glacial Geomorphology Seminar. Discussion, three hours; reading period, five hours; fieldwork. Prerequisites: courses 100, 103. Discussion of selected topics pertaining to action of snow and ice in arctic and alpine environments. May be repeated for credit.

204A-204B-204C. Advanced Climatology. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, one hour. Prerequisites: course 104, first year of calculus, and acquaintance with FORTRAN IV, or consent of instructor. Courses must be taken in sequence. Introduction to tools and concepts of environmental physics of relevance to natural and man-made landscapes. Such basic intellectual, mathematical, and computer programming tools are of special concern to physical geographers, ecologists, and architects.

Mr. Feddema, Ms. Raphael

205. Seminar: Climatology. Discussion, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 204A-204B-204C or equivalent, consent of instructor. Selected topics. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Feddema, Ms. Raphael

208. Advanced Biogeography: Plants. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: courses 108 and 110 or 116, or equivalent, or consent of instructor. Intensive review and analysis of physical and cultural factors influencing plant distributions.

Ms. Savage

212. Advanced Biogeography: Animals. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 112 or 117 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Intensive review and analysis of biophysical and cultural factors influencing animal distributions.

Mr. Bennett, Mr. Walter

213. Seminar: Biogeography. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisites: course 208 or 212 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Related research projects growing out of course 208 or 212. May be repeated for credit.

215. Quaternary Studies: Physical Aspects. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours; fieldwork, three hours. Prerequisite: at least one course from 200 through 205 or an appropriate graduate course in atmospheric sciences or Earth and space sciences. Analysis of the changing physical environment of the Quaternary period. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Orme

217. Quaternary Studies: Ecological Aspects. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisites: courses 202 or 204A-204B-204C or 208 or 212 or an appropriate graduate course in anthropology, botany, Earth and space sciences, or zoology, or consent of instructor. Analysis of ecological aspects of environmental change during the Quaternary period. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Orme

218. Advanced Medical Geography. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 118 or consent of instructor. In-depth study of selected topics in medical geography and intense review of recent research.

Mr. Matthews

223. Seminar: Humid Tropics. Lecture, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisite: graduate standing. Selected topics. Biophysical and cultural complexes of the humid tropics, with emphasis on problems related to human settlement and livelihood. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Bennett

227. Water Quality Management. Discussion, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Discussion of basic technical, regional planning, and public policy issues in water quality management.

229. Seminar: People and Environment. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisite: course M128 or equivalent. Analysis of man's perception of the environment throughout history and in different parts of the world and its impact on past, present, and future ecosystems.

Human Geography

232. Advanced Cultural Geography. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 133 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Lectures and discussions around specific aspects of development of cultural landscape in different geographic environments.

Mr. Hale

233. Seminar: Cultural Geography. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisites: course 232 or 236 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Discussions on particular topics in cultural geography. Content may vary from year to year. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Entrikin, Mr. Hale

234. Environment and Subsistence in Indigenous Cultures. Seminar, three hours. Discussion on resource management strategies and environmental issues in indigenous cultures. Topics vary from year to year.

Ms. Carney, Ms. Savage

236. Advanced Historical Geography of the U.S. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. Prerequisites: course 136, consent of instructor. Some major themes in American historical geography.

237. Seminar: Historical Geography. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisites: course 236, consent of instructor. Theory and practice of historical geography in North America and Europe. May be repeated for credit.

240. Advanced Political Geography. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 140 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Intensive study of theories and principles of political geography and German geopolitics. Selected regions used as specific examples of differing techniques of study in geopolitics.

241. Seminar: Political Geography. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisites: course 240 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Related research projects growing out of course 240. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Hale

242. Advanced Population Geography. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: course 142 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Study of population dynamics and migration, spatial variation in population composition, and population resource problems, diffusion, and epidemiology.

Ms. Fan

248. Location and Space Economy. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. Methods of locational analysis as applied to problems of regional growth and development. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Scott

249. Seminar: Economic Geography. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisites: course 248 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Related research projects growing out of course 248. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Scott

250. Urban Systems. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. General study of hierarchy of urban places, including diffusion within urban hierarchy and theories to account for location and size distribution of cities. S/U or letter grading.

251. Seminar: Urban Geography. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisites: course 250 or equivalent, consent of instructor. Related research projects growing out of course 250. May be repeated for credit.

252. Location and Social Structure within the City. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. Study of links between urban social and urban spatial structure, emphasizing urban residential land use, social areas of the city, and accessibility and urban form. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Scott

254. Migration and Residential Mobility. Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Description and modeling of national, regional, and intra-urban migration.

Mr. Clark

Procedures

260. Advanced Field and Laboratory Analysis in Geomorphology. Laboratory/fieldwork, 10 hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing, two courses from 200, 201, 202, 203, 215. Examination of advanced field and laboratory procedures used in contemporary geomorphic research, with emphasis on scientific design, instrumentation, and data evaluation.

Mr. Orme, Mr. Trimble

261. Advanced Field Analysis: Cultural Geography (8 units). Fieldwork, once a week from 8 to 5. Prerequisites: one or more courses from 232, 233, 250, 251. Field methods and analysis applied to the cultural landscape, especially in Southern California, with particular reference to settlement, agriculture, and environmental modification.

262. Advanced Field Analysis: Biogeography (8 units). Fieldwork, 10 hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Observation, measurement, and analysis of biogeographic phenomena, including identification and evaluation of biotic populations and communities and their modifications resulting from the impact of human activity.

265. Geographical Bibliography. Lecture, one hour; discussion, two hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Survey of the literature of geography, with special reference to periodicals. Intended for beginning graduate students.

267. Advanced Cartography. Laboratory, three hours; independent study, two hours. Prerequisite: course 167 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Advanced work in theory and practical application of modern cartographic principles. Special emphasis on terrain representation, quantitative and computer mapping, scribing, color separation, and reproduction of maps.

268. Geographic Information Systems. Lecture, two hours; laboratory, two hours. Prerequisites: courses 167, 168, and 171, or consent of instructor. Recommended: Earth and Space Sciences 150. Encoding, storage, analysis, and display of spatial data in digital format using geographic information systems. Emphasis on geographic data (including remote sensing imagery and digital terrain models), raster and vector data structures, and spatial analysis/spatial modeling using GIS.

Mr. Matthews

269. Remote Sensing of Environment. Laboratory, three hours; independent study, two hours. Prerequisite: course 167 or equivalent or consent of instructor. Study of aerial photographs and other remote sensing images as tools for geographical research. Particular attention to analysis of landscapes and interpretation of interrelationships of individual features in their physical and cultural complex.

M270A-M270B-M270C. Seminars: Climate Dynamics (2 to 4 units each). (Same as Atmospheric Sciences M272A-M272B-M272C and Earth and Space Sciences M270A-M270B-M270C.) Lecture, two hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Archaeological, geochemical, micropaleontological, and stratigraphic evidence for climate change throughout the geological past. Rheology and dynamics of climatic subsystems: atmosphere and oceans, ice sheets and marine ice, lithosphere and mantle. Climate of other planets. Modeling, simulation, and prediction of modern climate on monthly, seasonal, and interannual time scale. May be repeated for credit. S/U or letter grading.

Mr. Berger, Mr. Ghil, Mr. Schubert (F,W,Sp)

M272. Spatial Statistics. (Same as Urban Planning M215.) Lecture, two hours; discussion, one hour; laboratory, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Specific techniques useful in analysis of spatial data and modeling of spatial distributions.

Ms. Fan

273. Seminar: Model Building for Spatial Analysis. Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Discussions of philosophy and methodology of model building, with emphasis on problems unique to models of spatial structure. Individual research topics. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Clark

M278. Dating Techniques in Environmental Sciences and Archaeology. (Same as Anthropology M216.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Colloquium devoted to topics in dating techniques in environmental sciences, archaeology, and biological anthropology, as well as laboratory instruction and experimental work. May be repeated for credit.

Mr. Berger

Regions

Courses 280 through 291 may be repeated for credit (lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours).

280. North America. Prerequisite: course 180 or consent of instructor.

Mr. McKnight

281. Middle America. Prerequisites: course 181, consent of instructor.

Mr. Bennett

282. South America. Prerequisites: course 182A or 182B, consent of instructor.

Mr. Bennett

283. Europe. Prerequisites: course 183, consent of instructor.

284. Soviet Union. Prerequisites: course 184, consent of instructor.

285. South and Southeast Asia. Prerequisites: course 185, consent of instructor.

286. Eastern Asia. Prerequisites: course 186, consent of instructor.

287. Middle East. Prerequisites: course 187, consent of instructor.

Mr. Hale

288. Northern Africa. Prerequisites: course 188, consent of instructor.

Mr. Hale

289. Middle and Southern Africa. Prerequisites: course 189, consent of instructor.

290. Australasia. Prerequisites: course 190, consent of instructor.

Mr. McKnight

291. Arid Lands. Prerequisites: courses 104, 106, 108, 116, 120, 148, or equivalent, consent of instructor. Investigation of physical and cultural complexes of the world's arid regions. Salient factors include climate, landforms, water, soils, natural vegetation, and various aspects of human occupation, including future possibilities for human utilization.

292. Advanced Regional Geography: Selected Regions. Lecture, three hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: appropriate upper division regional course. Lecture series devoted to a specific region at discretion of instructor. May be repeated for credit.

Seminar

295. Seminar: Geographic Thought. Discussion, three hours; reading period, two hours. Prerequisites: graduate standing, consent of instructor. Discussion and study of topics significant to growth of modern philosophy of geography.

Mr. Entrikin

Core Courses

298A. Philosophical Issues in Geographical Inquiry. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Discussion of geographical research within context of philosophical debates concerning the nature of scientific inquiry.

Mr. Entrikin

298B. History of Modern Geography. Lecture, three hours; reading period, one hour. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Evolution of the field of geography in the 19th and 20th centuries, with emphasis on professionalization of geography and its emergence as a modern academic discipline.

Mr. Curry

298C. Statistical Methods for Geographic Research. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Prerequisite: course 171 or equivalent. Use of linear models, discriminant functions, and factor analysis to analyze problems in geography.

Mr. Clark, Mr. Rigby

Special Studies

375. Teaching Apprentice Practicum (1 to 4 units). Prerequisite: apprentice personnel employment as a teaching assistant, associate, or fellow. Teaching apprenticeship under active guidance and supervision of a regular faculty member responsible for curriculum and instruction at the University. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

495. Teaching College Geography (2 units). Discussion, one hour; laboratory, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Classroom practice in teaching, with individual and group instruction on related educational methods, materials, and evaluation. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

596. Directed Individual Study or Research (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

597. Preparation for Ph.D. Qualifying Examinations (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Independent study. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

598. Research for and Preparation of M.A. Thesis (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Independent study. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

599. Research for and Preparation of Ph.D. Dissertation (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Independent study.

languages and literatures, including philology, linguistics, and folklore. This broad range of studies offers training in specialized fields, in addition to providing strong background in the literary and cultural traditions. The courses of instruction are designed to enable students to become effective teachers and productive scholars in either German or Germanic languages and literatures, including Germanic folklore, Hungarian, and Finnish.

Undergraduate majors in both German and Scandinavian languages lead to Bachelor of Arts degrees. The graduate program offers Master of Arts degrees in Germanic Languages and in Scandinavian and a Ph.D. in Germanic Languages, with a variety of specialized fields available. The department also offers courses in Afrikaans, Dutch, Hungarian, Old Norse studies, and Yiddish.

Bachelor of Arts in German

Three plans are offered by the department:

Plan A (Language and Literature)

Plan A is comprised of lower division courses in the German language and upper division courses in German language, linguistics, literature, civilization, and folklore. While the nucleus of the undergraduate program consists of training in language and literature, students majoring in German will be prepared for a wide range of graduate studies and activities in related fields.

Preparation for the Major: German 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, or equivalent. Students who have completed two semesters of college-level German language courses should enroll in course 4. Placement examinations may be given in instances where the proper level is difficult to determine. Native speakers of German must consult the undergraduate adviser. For additional information, all students are encouraged to contact the undergraduate adviser.

The Major: Fifteen upper division German courses as follows: Group I (language) — two courses from German 103, 108A, 108B, 128; Group II (linguistics/philology) — course 129 or 137; Group III (approaches to literature) — course 101A, 101B, or 101C; Group IV (literary history) — four courses from 104, 105, 106, 107, 122, 123, 124, 126, 127; Group V (cultural history) — two courses from 100A, 100B, 100C, 121B, 121C, 121D, 134; Group VI (special topics) — two courses from 121A, 121E, 130, 132; three departmental electives (any of the above courses not taken to satisfy a group requirement). Native speakers of German should consult the undergraduate adviser before enrolling in course 108A, 108B, or 128. German majors, especially those who wish to pursue graduate studies in German, are encouraged to enroll in courses in German history and philosophy in those respective departments and are strongly urged to acquire reading knowledge of French.

Scope and Objectives

The Department of Germanic Languages offers an extraordinary scope of Germanic lan-

Plan B (German Studies/German Studies with European Studies Emphasis)

Plan B is comprised of lower division courses in the German language and upper division courses in German language, linguistics, literature, folklore, and one allied field such as history, musicology, or philosophy. If your allied field is in art history or political science, where not enough courses with a German focus are offered, the emphasis will be on European studies. While the majority of courses are in language and literature, students majoring in Plan B will be prepared for a wide range of graduate studies, including the allied field, with emphasis on interdisciplinary studies.

Preparation for the Major: German 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, or equivalent, 100A, 100B, 100C, 108A-108B. Students who have completed two semesters of college-level German language courses should enroll in German 4. Placement examinations may be given in instances where the proper level is difficult to determine. Native speakers of German must consult the undergraduate adviser. Lower division history courses or seminars may serve as equivalents for German 100A, 100B, or 100C. For additional information, all students are encouraged to contact the undergraduate adviser. All German studies allied fields and those with a European studies emphasis should be identified and confirmed by the undergraduate adviser in writing before the major is declared.

The Major: Eight upper division German courses (Group I — two courses from German 102, 128, 129, 137; Group II — two courses from 103, 105, 106, 107, 130; Group III — two courses from 121A, 121B, 121C, 121E, 134; Group IV — two courses from 122, 123, 124, 126, 127, 132) and five upper division allied field courses selected from History 125B through 125F, 126A through 126E, 129A through 129D, 135A, 135B, 191E through 191G OR Musicology 122, 126A, 126B, 126C, C127A through C127F, 133, 134, 135A, 135B, 135C, 188A through 188F, 189 OR Philosophy 100C, C110, C111, 115, 116, 117, 177A, 177B, 178, 189. For the European studies emphasis, the five upper division allied field courses should be selected from Art History 105A through 105F, 109B, 109C, 110A through 110D OR Political Science 116, 123A, 123B, 127A, 127B, 129, 153, 153A, 154, 155, 158A, 158B OR from allied fields such as Dutch, English, French, Hungarian, Spanish, Yiddish, etc. Plan B majors who wish to pursue graduate studies are strongly urged to acquire reading knowledge of French. A term or more of study/work-study/internship experience in a German-speaking country or the country of your European studies emphasis is highly recommended.

Plan C (Germanic Languages)

Plan C is intended for students primarily interested in Germanic languages and linguistics and is designed for those who wish to pursue graduate work in Germanic, general, applied, historical, or Indo-European linguistics. Students who wish to pursue graduate work in German literature should select Plan A rather than this plan.

Preparation for the Major: German 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, Linguistics 20, and five terms of a second Germanic language OR three terms of a second Germanic language and two or three terms of a third. Relevant languages include any Germanic language (two terms of Hungarian may be applied by petition to the undergraduate adviser). Students who have completed two semesters of college-level German language courses should enroll in course 4. Placement examinations may be given in instances where the proper level is difficult to determine. Native speakers of German must consult the undergraduate adviser. For additional information, all students are encouraged to contact the undergraduate adviser.

The Major: Thirteen upper division courses, including German 108A-108B, 129, 137, C138, four German literature or linguistics elective courses, and four linguistics elective courses from another department (e.g., Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, 127, 170; courses in departments other than Linguistics may be applied by petition to the undergraduate adviser).

Honors Program

To qualify for graduation with departmental honors, you must earn a cumulative grade-point average of 3.6 or better in upper division German courses and a 3.3 overall GPA, and complete German 195 with a grade of A. Contact the departmental honors adviser for procedures, special arrangements, possible exceptions, and other information.

Instructional Credential in German

Students desiring the general secondary instructional credential in German should consult the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies, 1009 Moore Hall (310-825-8328), and the Department of Germanic Languages.

Graduate Study

The Department of Germanic Languages offers the advanced degree candidate a scope and variety of studies unique among departments of German in the U.S. The department provides programs of study leading to the M.A. and Ph.D. in Germanic Languages and the M.A. in Scandinavian, with specialized fields in all areas of German literature, Germanic philology and linguistics, Germanic folklore, Scandinavian literature and philology, Netherlandic languages and literatures, Old Norse studies, and Yiddish studies. This wide range of studies within the Germanic languages and cultures enables the Ph.D. candidate to acquire competence in several specialized fields.

For brochures and other information, contact the Department of Germanic Languages, 2326 Murphy Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1539.

Master of Arts in Germanic Languages

Admission

A bachelor's degree in German, Germanic linguistics, or linguistics with a minor in German with a minimum grade-point average of 3.0 from an accredited U.S. institution or the equivalent is required. Candidates deficient in their undergraduate preparation may be admitted but are required to take remedial courses, as recommended by the graduate adviser. A placement examination in German language or literature may be required. Three letters of recommendation are also required.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

There are four M.A. plans that differ with respect to the course requirements and the comprehensive examinations. Plan A is for students who plan to terminate their studies with the M.A. and an instructional credential. Plan B is for students whose main interests are literary and linguistic rather than pedagogical who plan to proceed toward the Ph.D. Plan C is for students with main interests in German studies who plan to terminate their studies with the M.A. And Plan D is for students whose main interests are in Germanic linguistics who plan to proceed toward the Ph.D.

Foreign Language Requirement

Before advancement to candidacy for the M.A., you must pass the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) reading examination in French with a score of 500 or better. The test is administered through UCLA Extension at the beginning of each term, including the summer.

For Plan D, requirements also include either five terms of a second Germanic language or, in exceptional cases and with approval of the relevant instructors, three terms of a second Germanic language and two terms of a third. Relevant languages include any Germanic language and, by petition, Hungarian.

Course Requirements

Plan A requires a minimum of nine upper division and graduate courses, of which at least five courses must be graduate level (200 or 500 series). German 128, 129 (or equivalent), and 370 are required. Undergraduate credit for these courses (or equivalent) is applicable in satisfaction of these requirements.

Plan B requires a minimum of nine upper division and graduate courses, of which at least six courses must be graduate level (200 or 500 series). One seminar must be included.

Plan C requires a minimum of nine upper division and graduate courses (at least six must be graduate courses), with six in your major field (German) and three in your allied field (history, musicology, philosophy, political science, etc.). All allied field courses must be in the 200 series. One major field and one allied field seminar must be included.

Plan D requires a minimum of nine upper division and graduate courses beyond the language requirements, of which at least six courses must be graduate level (200 or 500 series) and of which up to four courses may be from other departments in a relevant area (e.g., linguistics, applied linguistics, Indo-European linguistics, Romance linguistics, etc.). German 217, C238, and one seminar must be included. Half of your coursework should be in synchronic linguistics and half in diachronic linguistics. All coursework must be approved in advance by the graduate adviser.

Course 596 may be taken twice; course 597 may be taken once before the M.A. degree; course 598 may be taken three times. However, only one 500-series course may be applied toward the M.A. course requirements.

Graduate students are expected to attend and participate in departmental lectures and colloquia.

Thesis Plan

If you choose this plan, a thesis committee is established no later than the end of your fourth term of graduate study to evaluate the proposal for the thesis. After acceptance of the thesis you must pass a two-hour oral examination (for Plan D only, a two-hour written examination) in the field of the thesis, as well as in the fields listed below under the comprehensive examination plan.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

Examinations are offered each term, beginning with the written part during the fifth week of each term. Under exceptional circumstances the chair of the department will receive petitions for M.A. examinations during the summer recess.

For Plans A and B, one examination committee is appointed for each term. The members of the committee administer the written and oral examinations. The comprehensive examination plan consists of (1) one 10-day take-home examination project covering one of eight areas of study, (2) one four-hour written examination covering three of the eight areas of study, and (3) a one-hour oral examination. Complete examination details are available from the department.

For Plan D, the M.A. examination consists of three written examinations of two hours each, followed by a one-hour oral examination. To continue toward the Ph.D., you must receive a pass with the recommendation to continue.

After you have taken the written examinations, the M.A. committee decides whether you may proceed to the oral examination. If you fail the oral examination, the M.A. committee decides whether you must repeat the entire examination or only the oral portion.

For Plan C, you must submit two research papers (approximately 10,000 words in your major field and 7,500 in your allied field) at the beginning of your sixth term of full-time study. To continue toward the Ph.D. in Germanic Languages, you must receive a pass on either the Plan B or Plan D examinations with the recommendation to continue.

If you apply for an M.A. under Plan B or D (to proceed toward the Ph.D.) and are awarded a terminal M.A., you may repeat the examinations if you choose not to have the M.A. degree officially awarded before the reexamination.

Ph.D. in Germanic Languages

Admission

An M.A. degree in German from an accredited U.S. institution or equivalent (e.g., Staatsexamen in German) is required. In case of significant deficiencies in prior training, the graduate advisers make appropriate study or course recommendations. All deficiencies must be removed prior to application for admission to candidacy for the qualifying examinations. Applicants without an M.A. in German (e.g., with an M.A. in Comparative Literature or in Linguistics) are required to pass the written part of the M.A. comprehensive examination before beginning doctoral work in the department. Applicants with an M.A. in Scandinavian who wish to major in Scandinavian literature and philology must take a formal minor in German. Three letters of recommendation are also required.

Major and Minor Fields of Study

The department offers two Ph.D. programs. The first program requires a major and a minor field in order to give students the broadest possible education and preparation for professional flexibility in research and teaching. The second program does not require a minor and is designed to enable students to complete their studies toward the Ph.D. more expeditiously.

If you select the first program, you must, as soon as possible after admission, declare your major and minor fields. The field in which you plan to present a dissertation is your major field and is selected from the four fields in which the degree is offered: (1) German literature, (2) Germanic philology and linguistics, (3) Scandinavian literature and philology, or (4) Germanic folklore.

If you select German literature as your major field, you must choose one of the following: (1) German literature before 1700 or (2) German literature from 1700 to the present.

The minor field may be selected from the following options: (1) German literature before 1600; (2) German literature from 1600 through Romanticism; (3) German literature from Romanticism to the present; (4) German philology and linguistics; (5) modern Scandinavian literature; (6) Germanic folklore; (7) Yiddish; (8) Dutch and Afrikaans; (9) Old Norse studies. If your major field is German literature, you may not choose options 1 through 3. As a special option, you may select an extra-departmental minor which must be individually endorsed by a majority of the departmental faculty members on the basis of your dissertation plans.

The second Ph.D. program allows specialization in either of the following two areas: (1) modern German literature (1600 to the present) or (2) Germanics — older German literature (to 1600), Germanic philology and linguistics (including Old Norse and Dutch linguistics), Germanic folklore. If you select the latter area, you are expected to choose two of these three fields, with special emphasis on one.

Foreign Language Requirement

In addition to French, a second language examination is required either in a modern Scandinavian language or in Dutch and Afrikaans or in Latin or in Yiddish (substitution of another language may be approved by petition).

Course Requirements

There are no course requirements per se for the Ph.D. However, the following rules apply: (1) you must successfully complete at least three seminars in residence before taking the qualifying examinations for the Ph.D.; (2) specific course requirements may be assigned to new students by the graduate adviser.

Qualifying Examinations

The written examinations consist of three parts for the first Ph.D. program and two parts for the second program: (1) first half of major field (three hours); (2) second half of major field (three hours); (3) minor field (three hours).

You may take the written examinations in the major or minor field any time after admission to the doctoral program and fulfillment of all prerequisite requirements. The major field examinations are given within a period of seven school days and completed no later than four weeks before instruction ends in a given term.

Written examinations may be repeated in case of failure. Repetition of the major examination includes both parts of the major field. When you have completed the written examinations successfully, the chair of the guidance committee schedules the University Oral Qualifying Examination to be administered by the doctoral committee as soon as possible after completion of the written examinations.

Advancement to candidacy takes place when you have (1) passed the graduate reading examination in French, (2) passed a departmental reading examination either in a modern Scandinavian language or in Dutch and Afrikaans or in Latin or in Yiddish (or an approved substitute language), (3) successfully completed three seminars, and (4) passed the qualifying examinations. When you pass the oral examination, you advance to candidacy and proceed to the writing of the dissertation.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

After your completed dissertation is accepted by the certifying members of the doctoral committee, you may be required to defend the dissertation in a final oral examination.

German

Lower Division Courses

No credit is allowed for completing a less advanced course after successful completion of a more advanced course in grammar and/or composition. Students with demonstrated preparation may be permitted to transfer to a more advanced course with consent of the instructor.

1. Elementary German. Lecture, five hours; laboratory, one hour. Mr. Voge

1G. Elementary German for Graduate Students. Preparation for Graduate Division foreign language reading requirement. May not be applied toward degree requirements. S/U grading.

2. Elementary German. Lecture, five hours; laboratory, one hour. Enforced requisite: course 1. Mr. Voge

2G. Elementary German for Graduate Students. Preparation for Graduate Division foreign language reading requirement. May not be applied toward degree requirements. S/U grading.

3. Elementary German. Lecture, five hours; laboratory, one hour. Enforced requisite: course 2. Mr. Voge

4. Intermediate German. Lecture, five hours. Enforced requisite: course 3. Mr. Voge

5. Intermediate German. Enforced requisite: course 4. Mr. Voge

6. Intermediate German. Enforced requisite: course 5. Mr. Voge

8. Elementary German: Intensive (12 units). Lecture, 15 hours; laboratory, five hours; outside study, 16 hours. Intensive basic course in German equivalent to courses 1, 2, and 3. P/NP or letter grading. (Sum)

12. German Conversation (2 units). Enforced requisite: course 1. Use of German language teaching films; students have opportunity to practice spoken German in small groups. Mr. Voge

14. Intermediate Conversation (2 units). Enforced requisite: course 3. Students have opportunity to practice spoken German in small groups. Mr. Voge

50A-50B. Masterworks of German Literature in Translation. Lecture, three hours. May not be applied toward completion of the major in German:

50A. Medieval Period through Classicism. Study and analysis of selected masterworks in English translation, including works from the earliest period, such as the heroic and courtly epic, to authors such as Grimelshausen, Lessing, Schiller, and Goethe.

50B. Romanticism to the Present. Study and analysis of selected masterworks in English translation, including authors such as E.T.A. Hoffmann, Heine, Fontane, Rilke, Kafka, Brecht, Thomas Mann, Hesse, Grass, Böll, and Christa Wolf. Ms. Komar

51. Masterworks of Germanic or East Central European Literatures in English Translation. Lecture, three hours. Study and analysis of masterworks of Germanic or East Central European literatures (Dutch and Afrikaans, Hungarian, Old Norse, or Yiddish). Examination of one particular literature per term.

88. Lower Division Seminar. Discussion, three hours. Course of variable content limited to topics of current interest and offered whenever a staff member is available.

Upper Division Courses

Prerequisite for all upper division courses (except 100A, 100B, 100C, 119A through M119H, 121A, 121B, 121C) is course 6 or equivalent or consent of instructor.

Courses in the German 119 literature series may not be applied toward completion of the major in German.

Courses Open to Majors and Nonmajors; No Credit to Graduate Students in German

100A. German Civilization and Culture before 1700. Lectures, discussions, and readings in English; knowledge of German not required. Study of development of German civilization and institutions from earliest times to 1700. Study of German culture as represented in its literature, art, music, and architecture.

100B. Modern German Civilization and Culture from 1700 to 1919. Lectures, discussions, and readings in English; knowledge of German not required. Study of development of German civilization and institutions from 1700 to 1919. Study of German culture as represented in its literature, art, music, and architecture. ## Scandinavian Section

Professors

James R. Massengale, Ph.D.
Mary Kay Norseng, Ph.D., Vice Chair
Ross P. Shideler, Ph.D. (Distinguished Teaching Award)
Kenneth G. Chapman, Ph.D., Emeritus

Jules L. Zentner, Ph.D.

Scope and Objectives

Scandinavia consists of five Northern European countries: Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, and Sweden. These countries form a geographic bridge between the American and European continents and a political bridge between Western and Eastern Europe. For all students of literature, language, the arts, and the social and physical sciences, Scandinavian is of particular interest.

The modern Scandinavian program educates students about Scandinavia through the study of its languages and literatures. The Scandinavian Section offers both undergraduate and graduate degrees in the languages and literatures of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish are mutually understandable languages, giving the student of one access to the literatures and cultures of the other two. Both undergraduate and graduate majors are expected to concentrate on one Scandinavian language, though they study the literatures of the other language areas.

Bachelor of Arts in Scandinavian Languages

Preparation for the Major

Required: Scandinavian 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, or 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, or 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, or equivalent.

The Major

Required: Twelve upper division Scandinavian courses, including 105 or 110 or 115, 141, 142, 143. As an option, three upper division courses in a related field may be taken if approved in advance by the undergraduate adviser. It is recommended that students who plan to do graduate work in Scandinavian take German 1 through 6.

Master of Arts in Scandinavian

Admission

In addition to the University minimum requirements, prospective students in the M.A. program in Scandinavian must have an undergraduate major in Scandinavian languages or equivalent. If you are deficient in the undergraduate major, you must complete it by taking the appropriate courses as recommended by the graduate adviser. A placement examination in the Scandinavian languages, as well as in German, may be required.

Three letters of recommendation are required by the Graduate Division.

For a brochure describing the program and requirements, write to the Scandinavian Section, 2326 Murphy Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1537.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

There are no specifically designated major fields or subdisciplines in the M.A. program, but students emphasize one modern language and literature area in Danish, Norwegian, or Swedish.

Foreign Language Requirement

Reading knowledge of French or German is required (in addition, of course, to knowledge of the Scandinavian languages). You must pass the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) reading examination in French or German with a score of 500 or better or must pass at least one upper division course in French or German.

Course Requirements

A total of 12 courses is required for the M.A. degree. These include a minimum of nine upper division and graduate courses in Scandinavian languages, at least five of which must be graduate courses. Three upper division or graduate-level courses may be taken in a related field of study to be determined in consultation with the graduate adviser; at least one of these must be at the graduate level. Comparative Literature 200 or English 201A or an equivalent course in methodology is required as one of the 12 courses.

Three 596 courses (12 units) may be applied toward the total course requirement, but only one (four units) may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

A comprehensive examination, based on the required coursework and a reading list, is required of all candidates for the M.A. degree. The examination is given whenever you have completed the course requirements and, in consultation with the graduate adviser, your general and reading list preparation is deemed adequate.

The comprehensive examination is both written and oral; students who fail may be reexamined once without petitioning.

For the Ph.D. degree in Germanic Languages with Scandinavian literature as a major or minor field, see the "Ph.D. in Germanic Languages."

Lower Division Courses

No credit is allowed for completing a less advanced course after successful completion of a more advanced course in grammar and/or composition. Students with demonstrated preparation may be permitted a more advanced program by the section or may be transferred to a more advanced course with consent of the instructor.

Native speakers of Norwegian, Swedish, or Danish may not enroll in any language course (including courses 105, 110, 115) in the Scandinavian Section, except by petition in writing to the section. Non-Scandinavian students with knowledge of one of these Scandinavian languages may not take courses in the others except by petition in writing. Petitions must include a description of the student's linguistic background and the reason for wanting to take the language course in question.

Scope and Objectives

History is the study of the past of our own society and how it emerged out of the traditions that produced it. At the same time, self-knowledge for students of history comes not only from self-discovery, but from a comparison of their own tradition and experience with those of others. It is only by studying the history of other civilizations and cultures that we can hope to gain perspective on our own.

The course offerings in history at UCLA are designed to bring about an understanding of the forces that have shaped the many cultures of this country and the world. UCLA has one of the largest, most distinguished, and most diverse history faculties in the country. Its main emphasis is on the many aspects of social history, but intellectual, cultural, and political history are also strongly represented.

Of all undergraduate majors, history is probably the most flexible and far-reaching. Leading to a Bachelor of Arts degree, it is excellent preparation for a wide variety of careers — law, teaching, business, the communications media, public services, and medicine.

The department offers graduate programs leading to the M.A. and Ph.D. and accepts qualified applicants for either or both degrees. There is also a joint master's program with the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies. Traditionally, the M.A. and Ph.D. in History have led to careers in high school, college, and university teaching. Increasingly, they are also being put to use in government service, international business, museum and archival work, and journalism.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

Preparation for the Major and the Major

The History Department's undergraduate program consists of 16 courses in history (six lower division — the "Preparation for the Major"; 10 upper division — the "Major") and four courses in the social sciences outside the department. The following courses are required in the program:

- (1) History 1A-1B-1C.
- (2) Two courses in U.S. history.
- (3) Two courses in non-Western history from the same area (i.e., Latin America, Asia, Near and Middle East, Africa) or in science and technology. Candidates for the California Standard Instructional Credential may not choose science and technology to fulfill their non-Western requirement.
- (4) History 100A or 101.
- (5) History 197 or 199.
- (6) Four courses in the social sciences outside of history or in other related disciplines as explained below.

The requirements for U.S. and non-Western history may be met with either upper or lower division courses. Normally only six lower division courses in history need to be included in your program, so if you meet the U.S. history requirement at the lower division level, you have to meet the non-Western requirement at the upper division level (or vice versa). If you choose to meet both requirements at the lower division level, you are still required to take 10 upper division courses to fulfill upper division requirements. The department recommends the following lower division courses to meet the U.S. history and non-Western requirements: History 2, 3A, 3B, 3C, 3D, 6A, 6B, 6C, 7A, 7B, 8A, 8B, 8C, 9A, 9C, 9D, 10A, 10B, 11A, 11B. If only one non-Western course is taken in lower division, an appropriate upper division non-Western course must be included in the major.

All history majors are required to take at least four courses in other departments in the social sciences, whether lower or upper division (anthropology, geography, economics, political science, sociology, psychology). These courses may not be taken on a Passed/Not Passed basis. A one-term course from the History 6A-6B-6C sequence may be applied toward this requirement, provided the same course is not used to satisfy any other requirement of the major.

By petition, you may replace up to two social sciences courses with courses in humanities, arts, or natural sciences relevant to your program in history. Courses in communication studies do not fulfill this requirement.

Transfer students with deficiencies in lower division courses may by petition substitute appropriate upper division courses in history for the lower division requirements. See the undergraduate counselor.

There is no language requirement for the major; however, students wishing to enter the honors program or planning to do graduate work in history are urged to pursue language study early in their undergraduate careers.

Advanced Placement Credit in History — The College of Letters and Science allows eight quarter units toward the B.A. for each Advanced Placement Test in History. The History Department applies this credit to the "Preparation for the Major" as follows: AP European History fulfills History 1C; AP American History with a score of 4 or 5 allows eight units of History 7A-7B credit on the history preparation. The excess units may be applied only toward the degree.

Honors Program

The honors program is designed for history majors who are interested in carrying out a year-long independent research project that culminates in an honors thesis. Special honors seminars are also offered during the junior year. A 3.5 departmental grade-point average is normally required for admission, but students with a lower GPA may apply to the honors committee for admission. Application should be made at the beginning of the junior year.

History 101H is required, as are History 199HA-199HB-199HC, which count as three of the 10 required upper division courses. Course 199HA is taken in Spring Quarter of the junior year; honors students then take courses 199HB and 199HC in Fall and Winter Quarters of their senior year under the guidance of the sponsoring professor. A prize is awarded for the outstanding honors thesis.

Instructional Credential in History

For information on the single subject instructional credential in history, consult the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies, 1009 Moore Hall (310-825-8328).

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

For admission to graduate standing in the Department of History, you should normally have completed the undergraduate major or its equivalent, have received a Bachelor of Arts degree or its equivalent from an accredited college or university, and have maintained at least a B + average in upper division work. You also need three letters of recommendation and your score on the General Test of the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) submitted to the department. Students not meeting the grade-point average requirements may be admitted in exceptional cases if their letters of recommendation, GRE score, or other factors indicate unusual promise. Applicants with a year or more of graduate study at other institutions should have attained a GPA of 3.5 or better if they wish to work toward the Ph.D. degree. Admission to the department depends on the number of openings in the field in which you expect to specialize. Applications should be submitted before December 1; notification is made on or before May 1. Except for extraordinary cases, students are expected to begin their graduate work in Fall Quarter. The department has no separate application form in addition to the one used by UCLA Graduate Application Processing. Departmental information is available from Shela Patel, Graduate Adviser, Department of History, 6273 Bunche Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1473.

There is no screening examination. Nonhistory majors may be required to take specified courses, depending on their background and fields of specialization. Because applicants are admitted to pursue graduate work in a specific field, a change of fields after admission requires approval of the relevant field committee.

An annual Guide to Graduate Study in History which explains the requirements and procedures of the graduate program in detail is mailed to all new graduate students who have filed a Statement of Intent to Register (prior to registration). The guide lists faculty, their representative publications, and descriptions of courses offered during the year, and is available from the graduate adviser.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

The comprehensive examination covers one of the following fields: (1) ancient (includes ancient Near East); (2) medieval (includes Byzantine and medieval Jewish history); (3) Europe, 1550 to present (includes British history and the British Empire); (4) Africa; (5) Near East (includes Armenia); (6) India and Southeast Asia; (7) East Asia; (8) Latin America; (9) U.S.; (10) history of science; (11) special fields (students in the history of religions, Russian history, and modern Jewish history are normally examined in one of the above fields, but with consent of the faculty in these fields may petition the graduate guidance and curriculum committee for an M.A. examination in their field of specialization).

Foreign Language Requirement

If you are contemplating graduate work in history, you should begin study of a foreign language as an undergraduate since reading knowledge of one foreign language approved by the department is required. For French, German, Russian, or Spanish, a score of 500 on the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) is required. Students of U.S., Near East, and African history may use departmentally administered translation examinations in French, Spanish, or German in place of the GSFLT. Students of European history must pass departmentally administered examinations in one of these three languages no later than the beginning of the sixth term of full-time study. For other languages, certification is required by the department teaching the language according to that department's standards.

Course Requirements

The department requires a minimum (and preferably a maximum) of nine upper division and graduate courses in history, at least six of which must be graduate courses. No course in the 300 series may be applied toward this requirement, and only one in the 500 series may be applied. For students in U.S. history and European history, a minimum of seven of the nine courses must be at the 200 level. For U.S. history, these seven courses must include at least two two-term seminars and History 245. For European history, the seven courses must include two two-term seminars and course 225. Africanists must take course 275.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

The department follows the comprehensive examination plan. Individual fields specify fulfillment of the examination requirement by (1) a three-hour written examination designed to assess your ability to synthesize a broad field of knowledge or (2) the submission of three essays written for at least two different professors as part of your program of study. At least two of these papers must have been submitted for graduate courses in the 200 series. The U.S. field requires a comprehensive examination in the form of a research paper of approximately 15,000 words, to be submitted at the end of six terms of full-time study. The European field requires a comprehensive examination in the form of a research paper of approximately 15,000 words, to be submitted at the beginning of the sixth term of full-time study.

The medieval M.A. examination is given in May of each academic year. All other field examiners administer the M.A. comprehensive examinations in November, March, and May each year. The committee recommends the following examination results: pass to continue, pass subject to reevaluation, terminal pass, fail. In cases where the M.A. is awarded pass subject to reevaluation, the field M.A. committee reevaluates your progress after an additional three terms of study. Only in exceptional cases are oral examinations required for the M.A. degree.

M.L.I.S./M.A.-History

This concurrent degree program of the Department of History and the Department of Library and Information Science allows you to combine historical study with the tools of the information professional and to obtain two degrees — the M.L.I.S. and the M.A. in History. The best sequence of coursework should be discussed with the advisers from this department and the Department of Library and Information Science.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

Admission requirements for the Ph.D. program are the same as those for the M.A., but applicants for the doctorate are urged to seek an interview or to correspond with a member of the faculty in the field in which they intend to work. Students may be admitted with subject deficiencies, but such deficiencies must be removed by completing courses in addition to the requirements for an advanced degree.

While no examination is required for admission to a Ph.D. program, evaluation examinations are given to determine your continuance to the Ph.D. degree.

An annual Guide to Graduate Study in History which explains the requirements and procedures of the graduate program in detail is mailed to all new graduate students who have filed a Statement of Intent to Register (prior to registration). The guide lists faculty, their representative publications, and descriptions of courses offered during the year and is available from the graduate adviser.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

Ancient Greece; ancient Rome; medieval constitutional and legal; medieval social and economic; medieval ecclesiastical and religious; medieval intellectual and cultural (medieval history specialists may offer no more than two of these fields in medieval history); Byzantine; Russia since 862; Southeast Europe (Balkans); England prior to 1485; England, 1485-1763; England since 1763; the British Empire; and the Near East; the Near East, 500-1500; the Near East since 1500; Armenian; survey of African history; topics in African history (preferably on a regional basis); history of science to 1600; history of science since 1600; Europe, Renaissance/Reformation; Europe, Renaissance to the French Revolution; Europe since 1740; European socioeconomic history; European intellectual and cultural history; psychohistory; China, 900-1800; China since 1800; modern Japan; South Asia; Southeast Asia; Latin America, 1492-1830; Latin America since 1759; history of religions; Jewish history; history of Christianity; comparative history; U.S.: (1) mastery of the general field of U.S. history sufficient to teach a college-level survey course and (2) a specialized field selected from the following: Afro-American, American diplomatic, American West, American Indian, California, history of the South, Civil War and Reconstruction, Colonial, cultural, economic, immigration, intellectual, Jeffersonian and Jacksonian American (1800-1850), labor, Mexican-American, social, the new nation (1763-1800), 20th century, urban, women's history. Both the general and a specialized field must be offered by specialists in U.S. history, and only two fields in U.S. history are permitted. Either field 1 or 2 or both may be selected as minor fields for the Ph.D.

Candidates offering a field in comparative history as a fourth field for the Ph.D. degree should select a topic for comparison which would usually coincide with time-area spans of the other three fields defined for the Ph.D. qualifying examinations.

Candidates in the history of science program must select three of the above fields and either the history of medicine or an allied field.

All candidates may offer for examination an approved allied field outside the Department of History.

Foreign Language Requirement

Foreign language requirements vary according to the major field, although reading knowledge of the prescribed language(s) (one for U.S. history students, at least two for all others) is required. For details, consult the Program Requirements for UCLA Graduate Degrees, 1994-95: Department of History or your graduate adviser.

Course Requirements

You must meet (1) the special requirements for admission listed above and (2) the general requirements set forth under the Graduate Division. A program, extending over the full time of study, must be approved by the department. You are required to complete at least one continuing two- or three-term seminar or, alternatively, a continuing sequence of at least two graduate courses approved by the graduate guidance and curriculum committee, which results in a substantial research paper based at least in part on primary sources. If this requirement is met entirely or in part by a sequence of directed study courses (History 596), you must take the course(s) for a letter grade. Students in U.S. history should complete course 245. Students in European history must complete course 225, and students in African history must complete course 275 unless exempt by special petition. Courses taken to fulfill M.A. degree requirements may also be used to satisfy Ph.D. requirements.

Teaching Experience

The department cannot provide teaching experience for all Ph.D. candidates and cannot therefore require it for the degree. You should, however, be able to demonstrate ability to give instruction in your field.

Qualifying Examinations

Full-time graduate students must schedule the written qualifying examination by the end of the ninth term of graduate work. The written examination includes the major field only, is normally prepared and administered by the chair of your doctoral committee, and is read by the entire committee before you take the oral qualifying examination. The members of the doctoral committee determine whether or not an examination may be repeated (normally only once).

The written examination must be passed and a dissertation prospectus (approved by the doctoral committee chair) must be written before taking the University Oral Qualifying Examination. In the oral examination you are examined in four fields, one of which may be an approved allied field. You should select fields in consultation with your faculty sponsor and must receive the department's approval of all four fields. If you fail the oral qualifying examination, you may repeat it once (normally within a period of six months) with the consent of the doctoral committee.

After passing the oral qualifying examination, you are advanced to candidacy and may begin work on the dissertation.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

If required by the qualifying examination committee, a final oral examination is conducted after completion of the dissertation to cover the field within which the dissertation falls. After approving a dissertation, the chair of the doctoral committee may, with the unanimous consent of the entire committee, recommend a waiver of the final oral examination.

Lower Division Courses

1A-1B-1C. Introduction to Western Civilization. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Broad, historical study of major elements in Western heritage from the world of the Greeks to that of the 20th century, designed to further beginning students' general education, introduce them to ideas, attitudes, and institutions basic to Western civilization, and acquaint them, through reading and critical discussion, with representative contemporary documents and writings of enduring interest. 1A. Ancient Civilizations from Prehistory to ca. A.D. 843; 1B. Circa A.D. 843 to ca. 1715; 1C. Circa 1715 to the Present.

1AH-1BH-1CH. Introduction to Western Civilization (Honors). Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Honors sequence parallel to courses 1A-1B-1C.

2. History of Technology from Antiquity to the 20th Century. Lecture, three hours. Designed for students in natural sciences, social sciences, and the arts. Survey of development of man's ability to understand more fully and to utilize more efficiently the natural environment, stressing technology's changing social, economic, scientific, and cultural relationships.

3A-3B-3C. Introduction to History of Science. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. History majors may not apply these courses on science general education requirements:

3A. Scientific Revolution. Survey of the beginnings of physical sciences involving transformation from Aristotelian to Newtonian cosmology, mechanization of the natural world, rise of experimental science, and origin of scientific societies. Mr. Biagioli

3B. Physical Sciences since the Enlightenment. Broad survey of development of ideas in classical and modern physical science since Newton. Theories of matter, but more specifically chemistry, thermodynamics, electromagnetic theory of light, energy conservation, relativity, and quantum mechanics. Mr. Biagioli

3C. Biological Sciences, 1800-1955. Survey of development of biological sciences from the period of Bichat and Müller to discovery of the double helix.

Mr. R. Frank

3D. Themes in History of Medicine. Lecture, three hours. Not open to freshmen. Limited to 30 students. Examination, through illustrated lectures and focused discussion of primary sources, of five important themes in development of modern medicine: nature of diagnosis, emergence of surgery, epidemics, conception and treatment of insanity, and use of medical technology. Mr. R. Frank

4. Introduction to History of Religions. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Discussion of various systems, ideas, and fashions of thought that have dominated Western approaches to religions of the world since antiquity. Survey of development from classical Greek and early Christian theories to modern history with its discoveries of the religions of India, China, ancient Near East, etc., and the problem of the encounter of various religions in the 19th and 20th centuries.

5A-5B. Survey of British History. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Designed for students wanting general orientation to British history and those in English literature and prelaw. Survey of history of England and (after the union between England and Scotland) Great Britain. 5A. Middle Ages to the Glorious Revolution in 1688; 5B. 1688 to the 20th Century. Ms. McClendon, Mr. Urdank, Mr. Waugh

6A-6B-6C. History of the American Peoples. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Survey of the American peoples from advent of aboriginal society to the present, emphasizing racial and ethnic interaction, industrialization, urbanization, and cultural change. 6A. To 1800; 6B. 1800 to 1900; 6C. 1900 to the Present. Ms. Appleby, Ms. Meyer, Mr. Nash

6BH. History of the American Peoples (Honors). Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. Survey of the American peoples from advent of aboriginal society to the present, emphasizing racial and ethnic interaction, industrialization, urbanization, and cultural change. Mr. Monkkonen, Mr. Salman

7A-7B. Survey of Political History of the U.S. Lecture, two hours; discussion, two hours. This sequence (or two terms of course 6) strongly recommended for history majors planning to take more advanced courses in U.S. history. Designed for students in social sciences and other departments who desire thorough grounding in American political culture. Survey of history of the U.S. from the Revolutionary era to the present. Emphasis on political developments and social, cultural, and economic bases of American politics. 7A. To 1877; 7B. 1877 to the Present. Ms. Appleby

8A. Culture, Ethnicity, and Gender in Early Latin America. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. General introduction to Latin American history from conquest to independence, with emphasis on role of ethnicity and gender in the emerging society and culture. Mr. Lockhart

8B. Latin America: Reform and Revolution. (Formerly numbered 8A.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. General introduction to Latin America, emphasizing those institutions from the past which have shaped the present and the struggle for change in the 20th century.

Mr. E.B. Burns, Mr. Moya

8C. Latin American Social History. (Formerly numbered 8B.) Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Historical and contemporary perspective of role of ordinary people in Latin American society. Each lecture/film session centers on a major Latin American movie illustrative of a theme in social history.

Mr. E.B. Burns, Mr. Moya

8CH. Latin American Social History (Honors). Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Honors course parallel to course 8C. Mr. E.B. Burns, Mr. Moya

9A-9D. Introduction to Asian Civilizations. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours:

9A. History of India. Introductory survey for beginning students of major cultural, social, and political ideas, traditions, and institutions of Indic civilization.

Mr. Lal, Mr. Wolpert

9C. History of Japan. Survey of Japanese history from earliest recorded time to the present, with emphasis on development of Japan as a cultural daughter of China. Attention to manner in which Chinese culture was Japanized and aspects of Japanese civilization which became unique. Creation of the modern state in the last century and impact of Western civilization on Japanese culture.

Mr. Notehelfer, Ms. Silverberg

9CH. History of Japan (Honors). Honors course parallel to course 9C. Mr. Notehelfer

9D. History of the Near and Middle East. Introduction to history of the Muslim world from advent of Islam to the present day. Ms. Marsot, Mr. Morony

10A-10B. Introduction to Civilizations of Africa. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Intended for students with general interest in Africa, but also strongly recommended for those intending to take upper division courses in African history. Exploration of African cultures on a thematic basis within a wider framework of political change over time.

Mr. Ehret, Mr. Posnansky, Mr. Worger

10BH. Introduction to Civilizations of Africa (Honors). Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Honors course parallel to course 10B. Mr. Worger

11A-11B. History of China. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours:

11A. To 1000. Survey of early history of China—genesis of characteristic Chinese institutions and modes of thought from antiquity to 1000. Focus on social, political, intellectual, and economic aspects of early and middle empires.

Ms. Bernhardt, Mr. Elman, Mr. von Glahn

11B. 1000 to 1950. Survey of later history of China—evolution of characteristic Chinese institutions and modes of thought from 1000 to 1950. Focus on social, political, intellectual, and economic aspects of late empires and rise of modern China in the contemporary era.

Ms. Bernhardt, Mr. Elman, Mr. von Glahn

11AH-11BH. History of China (Honors). Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Honors sequence parallel to courses 11A-11B.

Ms. Bernhardt, Mr. Elman, Mr. von Glahn

20. Government and Society in Ancient Eurasia. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Examination of earliest civilizations of Asia, North Africa, and Europe—Mesopotamia, Egypt, Israel, India, China, Greece, and Rome—from development of settled agricultural communities until about A.D. 500, with focus on rise of cities, organization of society, nature of kingship, writing and growth of bureaucracy, varieties of religious expression, and linkage between culture and society. P/NP or letter grading.

Mr. Mellor, Mr. von Glahn

21. World History, 1200-1800. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours; outside study, seven hours. Exploration of early modern world through "eyewitness" accounts, with focus on both humanistic and social science aspects of historical change, specifically addressing social, political, economic, and cultural spheres of activity important in world affairs before American and French Revolutions.

Mr. Elman, Mr. Symcox

22. Contemporary World History, 1870 to the Present. Lecture, three hours; discussion, two hours. Broad thematic survey of world history since the mid-19th century. Examination, through lecture and discussion, of global implications of imperialism, total war, nationalism, cultural change, decolonization, changes in women's rights and roles, and eclipse of world communism. Designed to introduce students to historical study, help them understand issues and dilemmas facing the world today, and prepare them for more in-depth work in history of specific regions or countries of the world. P/NP or letter grading.

Mr. Berenson

M70. Survey of Medieval Greek Culture. (Same as Classics M70.) Lecture, three to four hours. Classical roots and medieval manifestation of Byzantine civilization: political theory, Roman law, pagan critique of Christianity, literature, theology, and contribution to the Renaissance (including discovery of America).

Mr. Dyck

88A-88U. Lower Division Seminars (5 units each).

Seminar, three hours. Limited to 15 freshmen/sophomores. Open to nonhistory majors. Readings, discussions, papers. Sign-ups and descriptions of offerings each term are available in undergraduate counselor's office (6248 Bunche Hall). Ten units may be taken for credit. 88A. Ancient Greece; 88B. Ancient Rome; 88C. Medieval; 88D. Early Modern Europe; 88E. Modern Europe; 88F. Russia/Eastern Europe; 88G. Britain; 88H. U.S.; 88I. Latin America; 88J. Near East; 88K. India; 88L. China; 88M. Japan; 88N. Africa; 88O. Science/Technology; 88P. History of Religions; 88Q. Theory of History; 88R. Jewish History; 88S. Armenia and the Caucasus; 88T. Southeast Asia; 88U. Psychohistory.

97H. Three Trials. Discussion, three hours. Limited to 20 students. Intensive study of three trials, each of which led to the execution of the accused: Socrates, Jesus of Nazareth, and Joan of Arc. View of each trial as a conflict between legitimate but irreconcilable interests and world views. For each, class constitutes itself as a court (prosecution, defense, jury) and reviews the verdict of original trial. Mr. Benson

Upper Division Courses

Prerequisite for all upper division courses is upper division standing or consent of instructor, unless otherwise stated. Certain graduate courses (200 series) are open to students with upper division standing and consent of instructor.

100A. History and Historians. (Formerly numbered 100.) Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours. Study of historiography, including intellectual processes by which history is written, results of these processes, and sources and development of history. Attention also to representative historians.

Mr. Baldwin, Mr. Ooms, Mr. Reill

100B. History and Contemporary Theory. Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours. Survey of main sources and trends of contemporary theory, from Saussure's linguistics to recent feminist theories, in texts that inform much of the most recent historiographical directions and debate.

Mr. Biagioli, Mr. Ooms

101. Introduction to Historical Practice. Seminar, three hours. Limited to juniors and seniors. Discussion classes of no more than 15 students meeting with a faculty member. Exploration of how works of history are written, with emphasis on problems of historiography and method.

101H. Introduction to Historical Practice (Honors). Seminar, three hours. Limited to juniors and seniors in history honors program. Discussion classes of no more than 15 students meeting with a faculty member. Emphasis on problems in philosophy of history, historiography, and historical method.

102. Explorations in Psychoanalysis and History. Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours. Art of psychological and historical interpretation; assessment of recent writings in the field of psychohistory.

Mr. Loewenberg, Mr. Wohl

M103. Historical Archaeology. (Same as Anthropology M115S.) Survey of aims and methods of historical archaeology as practiced on both sides of the Atlantic, with case studies from North America, the Caribbean, Africa, and Europe.

Mr. Posnansky

M104A-M104B. Ancient Egyptian Civilization. (Same as Ancient Near East M104A-M104B.) Lecture, three hours. Course M104A is not prerequisite to M104B. Political and cultural institutions of ancient Egypt and ideas on which they were based. M104A. Chronological discussion of Prehistory, the Old and Middle Kingdom. M104B. The New Kingdom and the Late period until 332 B.C. (Alternate years)

M105. History of Ancient Mesopotamia and Syria. (Formerly numbered 105.) (Same as Ancient Near East M105.) Lecture, three hours. Political and cultural development of the "Fertile Crescent," including Palestine, from the Neolithic to the Achaemenid period.

Mr. Buccellati

106A-106B-106C. Survey of the Middle East from 500 to the Present. Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours. Background and circumstances of rise of Islam, creation of the Islamic Empire, and its development. Rise of Dynastic Successor States and the Modern Nation States. Social, intellectual, political, and economic development.

106A. 500 to 1300.

Mr. Morony

106B. 1300 to 1700.

Ms. Marsot

106C. 1700 to the Present.

Ms. Keddie

107A-107B. Islamic Civilization. Lecture, three or four hours; discussion, one hour (optional); outside study, eight hours:

107A. Premodern Islam. Origins of Islamic civilization, Muhammad and the Qur'an; development of Islamic doctrine, ritual, piety and law, sectarian Islam, and mysticism.

Mr. Morony

107B. Islam in the Modern World. Reform movements, legal issues, sociopolitical trends, movements of opposition.

Ms. Keddie, Ms. Marsot

History/Art History (Interdepartmental)

6248 Bunche Hall, (310) 825-3720

Scope and Objectives

The interdisciplinary major in history/art history allows students to study the relationship between art history and the history of society, politics, and culture.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

Lower division history and art history courses may be applied toward the general education requirements; a course taken to satisfy the American History and Institutions requirement may be applied toward the history section of the interdepartmental major.

No course for the major may be taken on a P/NP grading basis.

If you wish to confer with a counselor regarding program planning and major requirements, contact the history/art history counselor at (310) 825-3720.

Preparation for the Major

Required: History 1A-1B-1C; two courses from Art History 50, 51, 54, 57; one course from Art History 55A, 55B, 56A, 56B.

Group F— Two art history elective courses selected from the above lists. You may also take Art History 127, 197, 199 to meet this requirement.

Honors Collegium

A311 Murphy Hall, (310) 825-1553

The Honors Collegium is an unusual educational alternative designed primarily for students in their freshman and sophomore years. Entering freshmen with at least a 580 SAT verbal score who have satisfied the Subject A/English 2 requirement and continuing students with a UCLA grade-point average of 3.0 who have satisfied the Subject A/English 2 requirement may enroll in specially devised Honors Collegium courses with an interdisciplinary emphasis. The collegium offers small classes and individual attention. It encourages animated discussion among students, as well as between students and professors. And it seeks to promote scholarly exchange across the major disciplines in the University.

Each course is staffed by a director who is distinguished in teaching and scholarship, by a variable number of guest lecturers, and by additional specialists in their fields. Many courses satisfy general education requirements and serve as preparation for numerous majors in the College of Letters and Science. Counselors are available in the Honors Programs Office, A311 Murphy Hall, to advise and help you plan an integrated academic program.

In 1994-95 the Honors Collegium will offer the following one-term courses, most of which carry four units of credit each; the six-unit courses are so indicated.

Associate Professor

Joseph F. Nagy, Ph.D. (Celtic Languages and Literatures)

Assistant Professor

Christopher M. Stevens, Ph.D. (Germanic Languages)

Scope and Objectives

The prime aim of this graduate program is the integral study of Indo-European culture, based on comparative linguistics, archaeology, social structure, and religion. The Ph.D. in Indo-European Studies is offered with three alternative major emphases: Indo-European linguistics, Indo-Iranian or other specialized language area studies, and European and related archaeology.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

Students admitted to graduate standing must have a B.A. degree with a major in an Indo-European language field (e.g., German, Slavic, Celtic, Romance languages, Latin, Greek), linguistics (with concentration in historical and comparative linguistics), anthropology, or archaeology. Letters of recommendation (at least two, preferably three or four) are required; Graduate Record Examination (GRE) scores are not required. Potential applicants may request a brochure by writing to the Indo-European Studies Program, c/o Department of Classics, 7349 Bunche Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1475.

Admission to the program itself constitutes admission to the doctoral program; a master's degree is not offered. Should deficiencies exist in prerequisites to specific work at the graduate level, you may be granted provisional admission and directed to remove those deficiencies in the initial period of enrollment.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

The Ph.D. in Indo-European Studies is offered with three alternative major emphases: (1) Indo-European linguistics; (2) Indo-Iranian or other specialized language area studies; (3) European and related archaeology.

Foreign Language Requirement

French and German are required, one during the first year. A third language is added only when relevant to your field of specialization. Proficiency in a language may be demonstrated by (1) passing the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with a score of 600 or better, (2) completing a level five course with a grade of B or better, or (3) passing a departmental reading examination.

Course Requirements

The course requirements vary among the three major fields of specialization. General requirements for all students regardless of specialization include knowledge of Vedic Sanskrit and Homeric Greek, basic competence in Indo-European linguistics (including Indo-European Studies M150 and 210), mythology (e.g., Classics 168), and archaeology (including Indo-European Studies 131, 132). Additional requirements by field are as follows:

(1) Linguistics — An advanced seminar in comparative grammar, a minimum of four ancient Indo-European languages from different subbranches, and additional units in courses offered by the Linguistics Department (e.g., phonetics, structural linguistics) and related departments. These additional units should be selected in consultation with your adviser.

(2) Indo-Iranian or Other Specialized Language Area — An advanced seminar in comparative grammar, a minimum of two ancient Indo-European languages from different subbranches, and additional units in the area of specialization, to be selected in consultation with your adviser.

(3) European and Related Archaeology — A minimum of one ancient Indo-European language, an advanced seminar in European archaeology, a course in analytical methods in archaeology, and additional units in archaeology, anthropology, and related fields, to be selected in consultation with your adviser.

Teaching Experience

Teaching experience is highly desired, but not available within the program and therefore is not required. The program works closely with its constituent departments in an attempt to provide some teaching experience.

Qualifying Examinations

When you have completed the required coursework, a series of written examinations covering the major and minor fields are administered. These consist of translation and analysis of set texts from the ancient Indo-European languages and diagnostic examinations in the other fields. Following successful completion of the written examinations, the University Oral Qualifying Examination, based on the written examinations and the dissertation prospectus, is administered by the doctoral committee. It is intended to probe your grasp of the entire field. Should you fail either the written or oral examinations, the interdepartmental degree committee may allow re-examination. After successful completion of the written and oral examinations, you are advanced to doctoral candidacy and begin work on the dissertation.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

A final oral defense of the dissertation is optional with the doctoral committee.

Upper Division Courses

International Relations

4256 Bunche Hall, (310) 825-3862

Scope and Objectives

The undergraduate specialization in international relations can only be taken jointly with a major in political science, and all requirements for the political science major must be met by or in addition to meeting the requirements of this program. Students completing the program receive a degree with a major in political science and specialization in international relations. The program is designed to serve the needs of (1) students desiring a general education focused on international affairs and (2) students preparing for graduate work in international affairs, whether in a social science or area study.

The program is also beneficial for (1) students planning careers (in business, law, journalism, or library service) with an international emphasis and (2) those preparing to teach social sciences in the secondary schools. These students should structure their programs primarily to meet the preparation requirements of the professional school or instructional credential of their choice.

Courses in management and administration, and in oral and written communications, ordinarily increase the career options of students in this program.

Special Undergraduate Program

Preparation for the Specialization

Required: Political Science 20, 50, and two courses from 10, 30, 40; Anthropology 9 or 60; Economics 1 and 2, 5, or 100; Geography 3 or 5; History 1A-1B-1C or any three courses from 5A, 5B, 8A, 8B, 8C, 9A, 9C, 9D, 10A, 10B, 11A, 11B; Sociology 1 or 31.

Upper Division

The political science major should be completed as follows: any four upper division political science courses in each of Fields II and IV and two additional courses both in Field I or III.

Other required social sciences courses include one course from Anthropology 161, M162P, 165, 167, 171, 173Q, 174P, 174Q, 175R, 175T, 175U, 177, Sociology 182, 183, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190; two courses from Economics 110, 111, 112, 180, 181A, 181B, 182, 190, 191, 192; one course from Geography 110, 121, 125, M128, 133, 140, 181, 182A, 182B, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190; two courses from History 116A, 116B, 117A, 127A, 127B, 142A, 142B, 148C, 152A, 152B, 168.

Completion of the sixth quarter course (or equivalent as prescribed by the language department), with a grade of C or better, of any modern foreign language is also required. French 6, German 6, Spanish 25, and Russian 6 are most frequently offered in fulfillment of this requirement, but also refer to the offerings listed under African Languages, East Asian Languages and Cultures, Germanic Languages, Italian, Near Eastern Languages and Cultures, and Portuguese. Arabic, Chinese, French, German, Japanese, Russian, and Spanish are the languages of widest career utility in international affairs.

All courses must be taken for a letter grade.

Area Focus

Students are advised but not required to concentrate their political science, geography, history, and language courses so as to achieve broad familiarity with one area, such as Africa, East Asia, Europe, Latin America, the Middle East, South Asia, or Southeast Asia.

For further information, contact the political science undergraduate counselor in the program office.

Scope and Objectives

The undergraduate major in this discipline is called Near Eastern studies. For details, see the program by that name later in this chapter.

The designation of this interdepartmental degree program is meant to convey the broadest cultural concern with peoples and places influenced by Islam, rather than a narrow approach to Islam as religion alone. Islam as a culture-forming force in history may be studied and understood through the literate sources of Islamic civilization and/or through systematic observation and examination of behavioral patterns and social relations of Muslim peoples. The commonality of an "idealized" and a "functional" or "practical" Islam does not preclude a multiple number of valid and varied approaches to Islamic studies. The program, with its core emphasis on the major languages of the Islamic Middle East, is intended to provide an internal view of the dynamics of Islamic culture.

The interdepartmental program for the Master of Arts and Ph.D. degrees in Islamic Studies is designed primarily for students desiring to prepare for an academic career. It may, however, be found useful for students seeking a general education and desiring a special emphasis in this particular area or for those who plan to live and work in this area, whose career will be aided by a knowledge of the people, languages, and institutions. (Such a career might be centered on teaching, research, business, engineering, journalism, librarianship, or government service.) Subject to the limitations of the program, the special course of studies is formulated for candidates according to their experience and requirements.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

In addition to the general University requirements, a Bachelor of Arts degree in Near Eastern Studies or equivalent is required. The deadline for admission applications is March 1, by which time your admission file must be complete. Files are created during Winter Quarter for admission to the following Fall Quarter. The interdepartmental degree committee passes on your application for admission to the program. You are normally expected to have completed the equivalent of Arabic 102A-102B-102C or Iranian 102A-102B-102C or Turkic Languages 102A-102B-102C. In addition, you should have completed the equivalent of two years of Near Eastern history (pre-modern and modern) and at least one year of a European language, preferably French or German. Some coursework in Islamic culture and institutions may be applied toward the history requirement. Deficiencies in any of these prerequisites have to be removed by taking the appropriate courses without credit toward the advanced degree. No special application form is required.

The Graduate Record Examination (GRE) is required of graduates of American universities and recommended for international applicants. No screening examination is required.

A score of 560 on the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) is required of all applicants whose native language is not English and who have not attended English-speaking universities.

A departmental brochure may be obtained by writing to the Von Grunebaum Center for Near Eastern Studies, 10286 Bunche Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1480.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

Arabic, Persian, Turkish, history of the Near East, political science, anthropology, economics, geography, sociology, Islamic art and architectural history, Near Eastern music.

Foreign Language Requirement

You are required to show proficiency in either French or German. You are expected to (1) pass the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) reading examination with a score of 550 or better, (2) pass a departmental-ly administered European language examination by the end of your third term in residence, or (3) complete two years of language courses at UCLA with grades of B or better.

Course Requirements

A minimum of nine courses is required, five of which must be at the graduate level. You must take no fewer than four courses on the appropriate level in one Near Eastern language of your choice, and no fewer than five courses selected from the relevant upper division and graduate courses in history, political science, or any of the other fields represented in the program. The selection must be limited to two of these disciplines. The omission of history may be approved only in exceptional cases. Eight units of 500-series courses may be applied toward the total course requirement, as well as toward the minimum graduate course requirement, provided they are not in the same discipline. If you intend to proceed to the Ph.D. in Islamic Studies, you should show proficiency in a second Near Eastern language (Arabic, Persian, Turkish). One of the two languages required for the Ph.D. is Arabic.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

The thesis plan is not available in this program. You must pass written examinations in one Near Eastern language, one in its literature, one in the history of the Near East, and in one of the other nonlanguage major fields or subdisciplines listed above. The examinations are constructed by the instructor responsible for each discipline. Reexamination in exceptional cases is determined by the interdepartmental degree committee. The examiner or examiners are appointed by the chair of the interdepartmental degree committee.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

Students intending to work for the Ph.D. in Islamic Studies are normally expected first to fulfill all requirements for the M.A. degree. Those who enter the program with an M.A. from another university should have attained a level of preparation in languages, history, and social sciences equivalent to that required for the M.A. at UCLA. In addition, students are expected to show proficiency in a second Near Eastern language (one of the two required languages is Arabic.) Those who have not done so should make up any deficiencies by taking the appropriate courses without credit toward the degree. No special application form is required, but applications must be accompanied by three letters of recommendation.

The Graduate Record Examination (GRE) is required of graduates of American universities and recommended for international applicants.

A departmental brochure may be obtained by writing to the Von Grunebaum Center for Near Eastern Studies, 10286 Bunche Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1480.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

Arabic, Persian, Turkish, history, anthropology, economics, geography, sociology, political science, Islamic art and architectural history, Near Eastern music.

Foreign Language Requirement

At the beginning of your first term in residence, you must present to the chair of the interdepartmental degree committee a written statement explaining your preparation in one of the two modern languages required by the University (generally French and German). You are expected to (1) pass the Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) reading examinations with scores of 550 or better, (2) pass departmentally administered European language examinations by the end of your second year in residence, or (3) complete two years of language courses at UCLA with grades of B or better. Any option may be selected for either language. For work in some fields, reading knowledge of Italian, Spanish, or Russian may be substituted for one of the above European languages after satisfactory advisement.

Course Requirements

If you are entering directly into the Ph.D. program, course requirements are the same as in the M.A. program. Beyond this, you continue advanced courses in your two Near Eastern languages, in Near Eastern history, and in one of the social sciences, on specific advisement of the interdepartmental degree committee.

Qualifying Examinations

Written qualifying examinations in four fields are required: two Near Eastern languages and literatures as approved by the advisory committee, the whole range of Near Eastern history, and one of the other nonlanguage major fields or subdisciplines listed above. After successfully completing the written examinations, you must pass the University Oral Qualifying Examination in order to be advanced to doctoral candidacy. Reexamination in any field is at the discretion of the doctoral committee in consultation with the chair of the program.

Research proposals, dossiers, research papers, propositions, etc., are not permitted as alternatives to the written qualifying examinations.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

With the approval of the doctoral committee at the time of the oral qualifying examination, the final oral examination may be waived.

Scope and Objectives

Italian art and letters provide an invaluable key to understanding many facets of European civilization. Examined in its own right or studied comparatively, Italian culture offers unmatched rewards. The UCLA faculty views transmitting the Italian language as inseparable from transmission of the culture, so students consider in depth virtually all aspects of Italian civilization. After their linguistic initiation, ideally including a year abroad, students may pursue advanced studies in the department exclusively and through a wide range of interdisciplinary programs.

Bachelor of Arts degrees are offered in Italian and in Italian and Special Fields. Graduate study leads to the Master of Arts degree in Italian (with specializations in literature and language) and to the Ph.D. (literature specialization). In addition, the department participates extensively in the interdepartmental graduate programs in Romance Linguistics and Literature, Comparative Literature, and Folklore and Mythology.

Bachelor of Arts in Italian

The program of studies leading to the Bachelor of Arts in Italian consists of two distinct phases: preparation in the language and study of the literature and culture. While literature courses constitute the bulk of the program, good knowledge of the language is prerequisite to all upper division literature courses credited toward the major in Italian. The use of Italian is stressed at all levels of study. Detailed information on programs and specific degree requirements is available from the department.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Italian 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, and one course from 42A, 42B, 46, 50A, 50B.

The Major

Required: Twelve upper division Italian courses, including one course from 102A, 102B, 102C; one course from 113A through 116B; one course from 118 through 122; 190; and eight courses (at least 32 units) from 103A through 197H selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser. One course from another humanities or social sciences department, selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser, is also required. Recommended courses include Art History 106A, 106B, 106C, History 125A, 125E, 125F, 132A, 132B, Humanities 1A through 1D, C161, C167.

Majors who select courses taught in English must do additional work from the original Italian texts in consultation with the course instructor, who will meet with them on a regular basis.

Study in Italy

You are encouraged to spend up to one year in Italy either to (1) study with an education abroad program or (2) study in an Italian university. You are also urged to take advantage of summer language workshops and study programs, either at American campuses or in Italy. The Department of Italian offers an intensive, eight-week summer Italian studies program. For information on Casa Italiana, contact the department or the Summer Sessions Office, 1147 Murphy Hall.

Honors Program

Majors with an overall grade-point average of 3.25 and a 3.5 GPA or better in Italian are eligible to participate in the honors program. Prerequisites: Italian 102A-102B-102C.

Candidates select three upper division literature courses in which additional readings are required. In the last term of your senior year, you are required to write a thesis on a subject related to one of the three above-mentioned courses. The average for the three courses should not fall below A-. Applications should be made during the last term of your junior year.

Bachelor of Arts in Italian and Special Fields

Students with particular interests or professional goals may select this major, with coursework divided between Italian and a collateral field. Study programs fulfilling requirements for the major have been developed with the departments and programs listed below.

Majors who select courses taught in English must do additional work from the original Italian texts in consultation with the course instructor, who will meet with them on a regular basis.

Anthropology Field

Preparation for the Major: Italian 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, and one course from 42A, 42B, 46, 50A, 50B; Anthropology 8 or 9, and one elective from 33, 34, 60, 60P.

The Major: Italian 102A or 102B or 102C, 195, and five courses from 103A through 197H selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser; five courses from Anthropology 110, 111, 112, C115R, M115S, 118A, 118B, 130, 132, 133Q, 135A, 135B, 135C, 135S, 135T, 138, 139, 139L, M140, 141, 143, 150 through M154, 161, 182, 183 selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser.

Art History Field

Preparation for the Major: Italian 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, and one course from 42A, 42B, 46, 50A, 50B; Art History 50 or 51, 54, 57.

The Major: Italian 102A or 102B or 102C, 195, and five courses from 103A through 197H selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser; six courses from Art History M102F, M102G, M102H, 105A through 105D, 105F, 106A through 106D, 109A, 109C, 110A, 110B, 110D, 110F, 127 selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser.

Classics Field

Preparation for the Major: Italian 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, and one course from 42A, 42B, 46, 50A, 50B; Classics 10 or 20, 40 or 41, and Greek 1, 2, 3 and/or Latin 1, 2, 3, or equivalent.

The Major: Italian 102A or 102B or 102C, 195, and four courses from 103A through 197H selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser; Greek 100 or Latin 100, one course from Classics 141 through 197 (except 195), and one course from Greek 101A through 133 or Latin 101 through 133 (graduate seminars may be substituted for upper division author courses) selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser.

English Field

Preparation for the Major: Italian 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, and one course from 42A, 42B, 46, 50A, 50B; English 3, 4, 10A, 10B, 10C.

The Major: Italian 102A or 102B or 102C, 195, and four courses from 103A through 197H selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser; four courses from English 100, 101 through 119, 121, 140A through M197 selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser.

Film and Television Field

Preparation for the Major: Italian 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, 46.

The Major: Italian 102A or 102B or 102C, 195, and six courses from 103A through 197H selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser; six courses from Film and Television 106A, 106B, 106C, 107, 108, 110A, 110B, 110C, 112 through 116, 193A selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser.

French Field

Preparation for the Major: Italian 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, French 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 12 or 14.

The Major: Italian 102A or 102B or 102C, 195, and three courses from 103A through 197H selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser; one course from French 114A, 114B, 114C, and three courses from 115A through 142 selected in consultation with the undergraduate adviser.

History Field

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

Three letters of recommendation should be sent to the Graduate Adviser, Department of Italian, 2326 Murphy Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1535.

Files of prospective graduate students meeting the University minimum requirements are screened by the departmental committee on admissions. Because the department offers the master's degree as a step toward the Ph.D. degree, all students admitted to the M.A. program are designated as "first-stage doctoral students" in order to distinguish them from students in terminal master's degree programs. This is for administrative purposes only and has no bearing on your acceptance into the program if you do not indicate on the application that your final degree objective is the Ph.D. Admission on a provisional basis may be recommended in case of deficiencies in preparation.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

The M.A. degree is available with specializations in Italian literature and Italian language.

Foreign Language Requirement

Reading knowledge of one other foreign language approved by the graduate adviser or successful completion of courses through at least level three is required. This requirement must be met at least one term before the comprehensive examination.

Course Requirements

Italian Literature Specialization —

(1) For the comprehensive examination plan, 12 courses are required, including Italian 205A, 205B, 222A. The other eight courses must be distributed in three main literary periods — Middle Ages, Renaissance, modern (at least two courses in each period). Three of these courses may be upper division if approved by the graduate adviser. Related courses in other departments, such as History 205A-205B and Art History 230, are strongly recommended.

(2) For the thesis plan, 12 courses are required, including Italian 205A, 205B, 222A. At least nine courses must be in the 200 series.

Italian Language Specialization —

For the comprehensive examination plan, knowledge of linguistics equivalent to Linguistics 20 and 110, and broad familiarity with Italian literary and cultural history are required. Also required are 12 or more courses, including Italian 222A-222B-222C and Linguistics 202 or equivalent. At least nine courses must be in the 200 series.

Although you are generally expected to follow the comprehensive examination plan, you may petition to substitute the thesis plan in lieu of the examination.

No 500-series courses may be applied toward the M.A. course requirements.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

In general, the department favors the comprehensive examination plan, which consists of a minimum five-hour written examination to be given before the final examination period in Fall and Spring Quarters. The examination tests your general competency and does not have major and minor fields of emphasis. After the written examination, you are required to take an oral examination. In case of failure, you may be reexamined once, subject to approval by the examination committee and the chair of the department.

Thesis Plan

This plan is recommended for research-oriented students of exceptional merit. If you have completed your first year of graduate work with at least a 3.7 grade-point average, you may be nominated by one of the faculty members of the department for application to the thesis plan.

At this point you must have completed Italian 205A, 205B, and at least two other graduate courses in Italian. On acceptance, the guidance committee helps you select six more graduate courses in preparation for the thesis.

The thesis must be at least 50 pages long and follow the rules and style of the UCLA Ph.D. dissertation regulations. It must be submitted in your sixth term of graduate work. After completion of the thesis, you must pass an oral examination testing your knowledge in the field of the thesis and your general competence in Italian literature.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

Three letters of recommendation from professionals in the field of Italian studies should be sent to the Graduate Adviser, Department of Italian, 2326 Murphy Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1535.

Prerequisite for entering the department's doctoral program is an M.A. in Italian literature from UCLA or another university in the U.S. or the equivalent.

Students with a master's degree from another institution, or the equivalent, are required to pass part 1 of the Ph.D. qualifying examinations by the end of their third term in residence. They should expect to take part 2 of the examinations after approximately six terms.

Students holding the M.A. from UCLA normally take part 2 of the qualifying examinations at the end of their sixth term in residence.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

Two centuries of Italian literature in the medieval, Renaissance and baroque, or modern area comprise the major fields, while two centuries of Italian literature from any of these areas make up the minor fields.

You may select a major in a literary genre or a minor outside the department, provided that it relates to your major field of specialization and has the department's approval.

Foreign Language Requirement

This requirement is normally met by passing courses through level three in at least two of the following languages: Latin, French, German, Spanish (subject to departmental approval). A foreign language used to satisfy the requirement for the master's degree in Italian may be applied toward fulfillment of this requirement. The language requirement must be satisfied before taking part 2 of the qualifying examinations, either by Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) or departmental examination or by petition for course credit to the Graduate Division.

Course Requirements

In addition to those required for the master's degree, at least 10 other quarter courses, of which no more than two 596 courses may apply, are required. You also take such courses as your guidance committee may prescribe for the qualifying examinations (such as Italian 596 or 597). All courses from Italian 201 on, except 205B, may be applied toward the Ph.D. degree.

Qualifying Examinations

The comprehensive examination for the M.A. in Italian at UCLA corresponds to part 1 of the Ph.D. qualifying examinations.

The department also requires both written and oral qualifying examinations (part 2), which must be taken during the same academic year, although not necessarily during the same term. Normally taken six terms after the M.A. degree, the written examination consists of two parts: an eight-hour examination in your major field and a six-hour examination in your minor field. Additionally, a two-hour University Oral Qualifying Examination is required for advancement to doctoral candidacy. A summary of requirements entitled "Regulations for the Ph.D. Examination" is available in the department. In case of failure, you may be reexamined on unanimous approval of the guidance committee, after at least one academic term of additional residence.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

After acceptance of the dissertation in its final form, your doctoral committee may require that you take an oral examination which covers principally the field within which the dissertation falls.

Scope and Objectives

This special undergraduate program is intended to coordinate and enrich offerings on the workplace's connections to the social, political, and economic forces that surround it. Students become acquainted with institutions of the labor market such as public policies, employment practices, and unions. Faculty members from various disciplines are actively engaged in research on some aspect of employee relations, employee organizations, or workplace concerns in the U.S. or other countries. Administration of the program is coordinated through the Institute of Industrial Relations.

Special Undergraduate Program

The specialization must be taken in conjunction with a major in the social sciences or in psychology. Students with other majors may be admitted by petition.

Upper Division

Required: Management 150; Political Science 142C or History 155B; three other courses selected from Chicano Studies 120, Economics 103C, 150, 151, 152, 181B, 183, Geography 155, History 155A, 155B, Political Science 142C, 169A, Psychology M137E, Sociology M163, 171, 173, Women's Studies M164, 170. All students take a one-term specialization seminar designed for the exchange of disciplinary perspectives and directed research toward the end of the program.

Courses in the specialization may also be applied toward the requirements of the major where appropriate.

For further information, contact the Institute of Industrial Relations (310-794-0385) or Professor Sanford M. Jacoby (310-825-2505).

Scope and Objectives

UCLA has been in the forefront of U.S. universities with significant teaching and research interests in Latin American studies for more than 50 years. More than 100 faculty members from 22 departments and professional schools regularly offer a broad range of courses with an emphasis on Latin America. These course offerings in the humanities, social sciences, fine arts, and professional fields provide students a unique opportunity to focus on Latin America, a region of growing importance.

The Latin American Studies Program, coordinated through UCLA's Latin American Center, offers the Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts degrees. In the undergraduate major students develop a program combining language and methodological training with interdisciplinary studies in one of three areas: arts and humanities, social sciences, or ecology and environment. At the graduate level, students pursue more specialized coursework and interests, culminating in an interdisciplinary research study. Cooperative degree programs with the UCLA Schools of Architecture and Urban Planning, Education and Information Studies, Engineering and Applied Science, Management, and Public Health provide the opportunity to combine the M.A. in Latin American Studies with a master's degree in a professional field.

Bachelor of Arts Degree

Undergraduate studies of the Latin American region are designed to serve the needs of students (1) desiring a general education focused on the Latin American cultural region, (2) planning to enter business, government, or international agency service, (3) preparing to teach social sciences or language, and (4) preparing for advanced academic study of Latin America.

You must complete all preparation courses with a C (2.0) in each course; the courses are applicable toward the Letters and Science lower division general education requirements.

Foreign Language Requirement

Language requirements are uniform for all students in the major regardless of core area. Proficiency in two languages equivalent to (1) Spanish 25 and Portuguese 3 or (2) Portuguese 25 and Spanish 5 is required. In lieu of Portuguese 1, 2, and 3, you may take Portuguese 102A-102B which are designed for students with a background in Spanish. An indigenous language of Latin America (i.e., Quechua) may be substituted for the minor language.

Course Limitations

You may not take more than eight units of Latin American Studies 199 for letter-grade credit nor more than eight units in any single term. No course taken on a Passed/Not Passed basis may be applied toward the B.A. degree requirements. In order to register in a 199 course, you must have advanced junior standing and an overall GPA of 3.0, or senior standing.

Double Majors

Through judicious use of electives, you may find it possible to obtain the B.A. degree with two majors (e.g., Latin American studies and history). Interested students who have achieved junior standing should consult the undergraduate advisers of both departments involved, initiating the appropriate petition with the undergraduate adviser in Latin American Studies.

Study in Latin America

You are encouraged to spend up to one year in Latin America either (1) to study with an education abroad program, (2) to study in Latin American universities, (3) to conduct research, or (4) to complete an internship in an international or development agency. Full credit is granted according to the individual programs arranged in consultation with the undergraduate adviser. Proposals must be presented in writing to the interdepartmental committee.

Core Areas

You select one of three core areas as the focus of your major: arts and humanities, social sciences, or ecology and environment. Requirements for each core area are listed below.

Core I: Arts and Humanities

Preparation — Two courses from History 8A, 8B, 8C; Latin American Studies 99 (or 197 with department consent); Spanish and Portuguese M44; Art History 55A or 55B or Ethnomusicology and Systematic Musicology 91K and Dance 73B.

Core Area — Ten upper division courses from the approved list of Latin American courses distributed as follows:

(1) Core Concentration — Five courses from literature and folklore or the arts (art, music, dance, theater arts) or linguistics. Only one course from the electives list may be applied toward the core concentration.

(2) Theory and Methods — One course from theory and methods.

(3) Internal Breadth — Four additional courses from the arts and humanities core area but outside the core concentration. No more than two of these may be electives.

External Breadth — From the approved list, six upper division courses outside the arts and humanities core area distributed as follows: two courses in each of two core concentrations such that at least one core concentration is selected from the social sciences core (e.g., history) and at least one is developed within the ecology and environment core (e.g., public health). No more than three external breadth courses may be electives.

Preparation — Two courses from History 8A, 8B, 8C; Latin American Studies 99; Geography 5; Statistics 50.

Core Area — Ten upper division courses from the approved list of Latin American courses distributed as follows:

(1) Core Concentration — Five courses from the core area. Only one course from the electives list may be applied toward the core concentration.

(2) Theory and Methods — One course from theory and methods.

(3) Internal Breadth — Four additional courses from the ecology and environment core area to be selected from theory and methods core courses or electives.

External Breadth — From the approved list, six upper division courses outside the ecology and environment core area distributed as follows: two courses in each of two core concentrations such that at least one core concentration is selected from the arts and humanities core (e.g., fine arts) and at least one is developed within the social sciences core (e.g., history). No more than three external breadth courses may be electives.

Approved Undergraduate Course List

Community Health Sciences 132. Health, Disease, and Health Services in Latin America

Geography 121. Conservation of Resources: Underdeveloped World

*M128. Global Environment: Problems and Issues

*142. Population Geography

181. Mexico, Central America, Caribbean

182A. Spanish South America

182B. Brazil

*199. Special Studies

Theory and Methods

Anthropology *180. Quantitative Methods in Anthropology

*186. Models and Modeling in Anthropology

Biostatistics 100A, 100B, 100C. Introduction to Biostatistics

Geography *171. Quantitative Analysis

Electives

Anthropology *132. Technology and Environment

*153. Evolution of Human Societies

*167. Urban Anthropology

M168. Health in Culture and Society

Community Health Sciences *130. Nutrition and Health

Economics *120. Introduction to Urban and Regional Economics

Geography *108. World Vegetation

*129. Seminar: Environmental Studies

*140. Political Geography

Latin American Studies 197. Interdisciplinary Topics in Latin American Studies

199. Special Studies in Latin American Studies

Sociology *116. Social Demography

*Special courses which may be applied toward the M.A. degree requirements with advanced departmental approval. These courses do not have any exclusive focus on Latin America but provide an opportunity for students to relate a particular perspective or phenomenon to Latin America.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

In addition to University minimum requirements, the B.A. degree in Latin American Studies constitutes the normal basis for admission. Applicants with a degree in another field can be admitted but must complete certain undergraduate prerequisites subsequent to admission. Applicants with Latin American field experience or special methodological studies are given special consideration. All applicants should meet minimum requirements in at least one language of Latin America. The following items are required:

(1) Three academic letters of recommendation, unless you have been away from school for some time, in which case one of the letters may be from an employer.

(2) A minimum of a 3.0 or B average in the junior/senior years of college.

(3) A statement of purpose discussing your background in Latin American studies, proposed program of study, and future career plans.

(4) A minimum score of 1,000 on the General Test (combined verbal and quantitative sections) of the Graduate Record Examination (GRE).

(5) A résumé or curriculum vitae describing academic and Latin American experience.

Students are admitted each term. Application deadlines are November 1 for Winter Quarter, February 1 for Spring Quarter, and December 15 (to be considered for financial assistance) or May 1 for Fall Quarter.

Fellowship applications for the academic year are due on January 8 prior to the Fall Quarter for which application is made. Prospective students may write for departmental brochures to the Academic Programs Office, Latin American Center, 10347 Bunche Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1483.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

You are expected to develop and integrate three fields in Latin American studies, to be selected from the following: anthropology, art, economics, education, engineering, folklore, geography, history, law, library science, linguistics, management, music, political science, Portuguese, public health, sociology, Spanish, theater arts, and urban planning. At least one of the selected fields must be a social science.

Foreign Language Requirement

Proficiency equivalent to 24 quarter units of university-level Spanish and 12 quarter units of university-level Portuguese or 16 quarter units of university-level Portuguese and 20 units of university-level Spanish is required. Only coursework taken within five years of the award of the M.A. degree may be used to demonstrate current proficiency. Since these courses may not be applied toward the M.A. degree, you are encouraged to pass these proficiency levels by examination. A major Indian language of Latin America (i.e., Quechua) may be substituted for either Spanish or Portuguese. You must fulfill the foreign language requirement by examination or petition for a waiver of the examination if you have gained competency in another manner (i.e., native speaker, upper division coursework, Peace Corps service).

Course Requirements

Two plans are available. For the comprehensive examination plan, a minimum of nine courses is required, including a one-term core course (Latin American Studies 205) and eight additional courses to be distributed among three fields or disciplines on a 3-3-2 basis. Of the nine courses, five must be at the graduate level, with at least one in each of the three fields.

For the thesis plan (which requires prior approval), a minimum of 10 courses is required, including a one-term core course and nine additional courses to be distributed on a 4-3-2 basis among three fields. Three graduate-level courses are required in the first field, with one each in the two minor fields.

All courses must be selected from the department-approved list of courses. Other courses must be petitioned in advance.

Courses numbered in the 300 and 400 series are not applicable toward the M.A. degree.

No more than eight units of 500-series courses may be applied toward the total course requirement for the M.A. degree; no more than four units may be applied toward the five graduate courses required for the degree.

Graduate courses may be repeated unless they are lecture courses.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

In addition to course requirements, you must submit three research papers written for at least two of your three fields of study. At least two of the papers must have been submitted for graduate courses in the 200 series. A three-member faculty committee representing your three fields evaluates the papers and grades them pass, pass subject to revision of one or more of the research papers, or fail. No reexamination is permitted. The M.A. degree is awarded on recommendation of the faculty committee. Copies of your papers must be filed in the Academic Programs Office of the Latin American Center.

Thesis Plan

Although you are generally expected to follow the M.A. comprehensive examination plan, in special cases you may be allowed to follow the M.A. thesis plan. You must develop a carefully prepared proposal that provides sound justification for the thesis plan, including provisions for funding any planned field research.

Once the thesis plan option has been approved, you select a three-member faculty thesis committee to work with you in the development of the thesis and to read, evaluate, and approve the drafts and final version. Once the final version is approved, the thesis committee recommends the award of the M.A. degree. By the end of the term before graduation, you must file for advancement to candidacy with the Graduate Division.

Cooperative Degree Programs

Several options are available to combine the M.A. in Latin American Studies with a professional degree. After acceptance by both the Latin American Studies Program and the respective professional school, you may pursue both degrees simultaneously. Articulated degree programs are currently available with the Schools of Education and Information Studies (M.Ed. in Curriculum and M.L.I.S.), Engineering and Applied Science (M.S. in Engineering), and Public Health (M.P.H.); articulated programs do not allow course credit to be applied toward more than one degree. Concurrent degree programs are available with the Department of Urban Planning (M.A. in Urban Planning) and the John E. Anderson Graduate School of Management (M.B.A.).

Lower Division Course

99. Introduction to Latin American Problems. Limited to 15 students. Interdisciplinary seminar for lower division students. May be repeated for credit with topic change.

Upper Division Courses

197. Interdisciplinary Topics in Latin American Studies. Advanced interdisciplinary course for upper division students. May be repeated for credit with topic change.

199. Special Studies in Latin American Studies (4 or 8 units). Prerequisite: upper division standing. Intensive directed research program in which students conduct interdisciplinary research or complete internship with an international agency or program dealing with Latin America. Faculty sponsorship and written reports required.

Graduate Courses

M200. Latin American Research Resources. (Same as History M265 and Library and Information Science M225.) Seminar, three hours. General and specialized materials in fields concerned with Latin American studies. Library research techniques provide experience and competency required for future bibliographic and research sophistication as basis for enhanced research results. Mr. Lauerhass

201. Statistical Resources for Latin American Research. Contemporary statistical materials important for research in Latin American studies. Discussion on qualitative and interpretative aspects of the material, especially as it relates to data developed for publication in Latin American Center's Statistical Abstract of Latin America and its Supplement Series.

205. Latin Americanist Scholarship. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Panoramic introduction to methods and issues in various disciplines that study Latin America, with guest lecturers from various fields. (Latin American Studies core course.) Mr. Moya

M225. Computer Methodologies in Latin American Studies and Anthropology. (Same as Anthropology M289.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Basic principles of computing and information processing, along with their potential application in Latin American research. Examination of impact that computers are having in Latin American society.

M250A. Indians of South America. (Same as Anthropology M272.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Survey of literature and research topics related to Indian cultures of South America. May be repeated for credit.

250B. Interdisciplinary Seminar: Latin American Studies. Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Problem-oriented seminar on critical areas stressed in University's cooperative programs in Latin America.

250C. Interdisciplinary Topics in Latin American Studies. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Reading knowledge of Spanish or Portuguese normally required. Seminar devoted to selected topics of an interdisciplinary nature.

M268A-M268B. Seminars: Recent Latin American History. (Same as History M268A-M268B.) Seminar, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Reading knowledge of Spanish and Portuguese normally required. Seminar devoted to selected topics of an interdisciplinary nature. In Progress grading. Mr. Wilkie

501. Cooperative Program (2 to 8 units). Prerequisite: consent of UCLA graduate adviser and graduate dean, and host campus instructor, department chair, and graduate dean. Used to record enrollment of UCLA students in courses taken under cooperative arrangements with USC. S/U grading.

596. Directed Individual Study or Research (2 to 8 units). May be repeated, but only four units may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement. S/U or letter grading.

597. Preparation for M.A. Comprehensive Examination. Ordinarily taken only during term in which student is being examined. S/U grading.

598. Research for and Preparation of M.A. Thesis. Only four units may be applied toward the minimum graduate course requirement. S/U grading.

Approved Graduate Course List

Scope and Objectives

The goal of linguistics is the enrichment of knowledge about the nature, grammar, and history of human language. Linguistics is a theoretical discipline, akin to philosophy, anthropology, and cognitive psychology. It is important for prospective students to understand that studying linguistics is not a matter of learning to speak many languages. Linguistics courses draw examples from the grammars of a wide variety of languages, and the more languages linguists know about in depth (as distinct from possessing fluency in the use of them), the more likely they are to discover universal properties. It is also possible to pursue these universal aspects of human language through the intensive in-depth study of a single language. This accounts for the high proportion of examples from English and familiar European languages found in linguistics courses and research publications.

The core areas of linguistic theory are phonology (with its roots in phonetics), morphology, syntax, and semantics. A grammar is a system of rules which characterize the phonology, morphology, syntax, and semantics of a natural language. The properties of grammars are the central focus of linguistic theory.

Because language is central to all humanistic disciplines, as well as to several social science areas, it is studied from many points of view. Linguistics itself cannot be said to recognize a single optimal approach to the subject. Hence, the courses provide a variety of approaches which reflect the diversity of the field.

In a recent survey conducted by the Conference Board of the Associated Research Councils, UCLA's Linguistics Department was judged second best in the nation in the quality of its faculty. It offers programs leading to the Bachelor of Arts, Master of Arts, and Ph.D. degrees.

Undergraduate Study

The majors described below are of three types: (1) a major which concentrates entirely on general linguistics, (2) several majors which combine the basic courses of the general program with a language concentration or other related fields, and (3) a major which concentrates entirely on an African language area. The combined majors in conjunction with instructional certification programs are especially appropriate for students who have nonuniversity teaching careers as goals, and the African major is for students with specific African interests.

A 2.0 grade-point average in linguistics courses is required for all Linguistics Department majors.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics

This major is designed for students with an exceptional interest in and aptitude for the study of languages and linguistics. It enables the undergraduate to gain substantial familiarity with several languages and types of linguistic structure and to become conversant with the historical study of language and formal theories of linguistics.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20; two of the following: Philosophy 31, Psychology 10, one cultural anthropology course; completion of the equivalent of the sixth term in each of two foreign languages or the sixth term in one foreign language and the third term in each of two other foreign languages.

If you complete an advanced language course, you are considered to have completed the equivalent of whatever courses are prerequisite to that one (e.g., if you complete French 100, you have automatically satisfied the requirement of the sixth term of work in one language). You are required to complete at least the equivalent of the third term in a language other than those in the Romance, Slavic, or Germanic families. This requirement may be satisfied either as part of or in addition to the language requirement described in the preceding paragraph.

The Major

Required: A minimum of 13 upper division or graduate courses, including Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, and two courses from 125, 165A, 165B (you may substitute courses 200A and 200B for 165A and 165B respectively if you receive grades of A in 120A and 120B respectively and have consent of instructor). Both courses 165A and 165B, or 200A and 200B, are recommended for students planning linguistics graduate work. The remaining seven courses are electives, three of which must be linguistics courses. The other four may be in linguistics or in certain other fields as listed below. Electives have generally been selected from the following list (courses not on the list may be used as electives only in consultation with an adviser): Linguistics 104, 114, M115, 125, 127, 130, C135, 140, M146, M150, 160, 165A (or 200A for qualified students), 165B (or 200B for qualified students), 170, 175, M176A, C180, C185A, C185B, 195, 196A, 196B, 199 (if four units), African Languages M190, Anthropology 143, English 121, 122, Philosophy 127A, 127B, 172, Psychology 122, 123, or upper division courses in a foreign language beyond the sixth term. Not all of these elective courses are necessarily given every year; consult an adviser regarding electives to be offered in a given year.

Linguistics 195 or 196A/196B are recommended for students planning to pursue graduate work in linguistics, since they provide an opportunity to engage in independent research and to write a paper which can be submitted to graduate admissions committees. To enroll in the courses, you must consult with the department's senior essay and honors counselor.

Specialization in Computing

Students in any of the linguistics majors (except linguistics and computer science) may select a specialization in computing by (1) satisfying all the requirements for a bachelor's degree in the specified major and (2) completing Program in Computing 10A, 10B, 10C, 60, Linguistics C180, C185A. You graduate with a bachelor's degree in your major and a specialization in computing.

Honors Program

Honors in linguistics are awarded at graduation to those students who have a grade-point average of 3.6 or better in their junior and senior years and who have received a grade of A in Linguistics 195 or 196A/196B. Qualified students may be proposed by any member of the faculty to the faculty as a whole for the award of highest honors on the basis of a piece of research in linguistics completed at UCLA.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and Anthropology

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, completion of the sixth term in each of two foreign languages or the sixth term in one foreign language and the third term in each of two other foreign languages (at least three terms must be in a language other than those in the Romance, Slavic, and Germanic families). Anthropology 33 is strongly recommended, when offered.

The Major

Required: Thirteen upper division courses as follows: Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B or 127, 125, 170, one other upper division linguistics course (recommended: 114), Anthropology M140, 144 or M145, one course from Anthropology 141, 142A, 143, or Sociology CM124A, and three upper division electives from Anthropology 141, 142A, 143, 144, M145, the 130 series (one course only), the 170 series (one course only), Sociology CM124A, CM124B. Linguistics 165A and 165B (or 200A and 200B with grades of A in 120A and 120B respectively and consent of instructor) are recommended for students planning to pursue graduate work in linguistics.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and Computer Science

Premajor in Linguistics and Computer Science

Admission to the major is contingent on passing the following courses, which constitute the linguistics and computer science premajor, with a grade-point average of 3.3 or better and no grade lower than a C: Linguistics 20, Philosophy 31, Program in Computing 10A, 10B, 10C.

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, Mathematics 31A, 31B, Philosophy 31, Program in Computing 10A, 10B, 10C, 30, completion of the sixth term in one foreign language and the third term in a second foreign language. Mathematics 31A and 31B must be passed with grades of C or better. Mathematics 61 is strongly recommended.

The Major

Required: Fourteen upper division courses as follows: Linguistics 103, 104, 120A, 120B, 125, 165A or 165B (or 200A or 200B with a grade of A in 120A or 120B respectively and consent of instructor; 165B/200B are most strongly recommended for this major), C180, C185A, C185B, Computer Science 131, 132, 141, 161 or 163, 181.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and East Asian Languages and Cultures

Preparation for the Major

Required: Completion of the sixth term in either Chinese or Japanese; Linguistics 20, Philosophy 31; one cultural anthropology course; either Chinese 50 or Japanese 50, as appropriate; completion of the sixth term in one other foreign language or the third term in each of two other foreign languages.

The Major

Required: Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, 165A or 165B (or 200A or 200B with a grade of A in 120A or 120B respectively and consent of instructor), one upper division elective in linguistics; for the classical Japanese track: Japanese 100A-100B, CM122, 140A-140B-140C, C149; for the modern Japanese track: Japanese 100A-100B-100C, 120, CM122, 130B; for the classical Chinese track: Chinese 110A-110B-110C, four courses from 140A, 140B, 140C, 165, 170, 195; for the modern Chinese track: Chinese 100A-100B-100C, four courses from 101A, 101B, 101C, 130A, 130B.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and English

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, English 3, 10A, 10B, 10C, Philosophy 31, completion of the sixth term in each of two foreign languages or the sixth term in one foreign language and the third term in each of two other foreign languages.

The Major

Required: Fourteen upper division courses as follows: Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, 165A or 165B (or 200A or 200B with a grade of A in 120A or 120B respectively and consent of instructor), two upper division electives in linguistics, English 121, 122, 140A, and four electives from 141A, 141B, 142A, 142B, 143, the 150 series (one course only), the 160 series (one course only), the 170 series (one course only).

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and French

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, French 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 12, 15, completion of the sixth term in one other foreign language or the third term in each of two other foreign languages.

The Major

Required: Fifteen upper division courses as follows: Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, 165A or 165B (or 200A or 200B with a grade of A in 120A or 120B respectively and consent of instructor), two upper division electives in linguistics, French 100, 101, 102, 103, 105, 107, and two elective upper division French literature courses.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and Italian

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, Italian 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, Latin 1, 2, 3, completion of the third term in one other foreign language or the sixth term in Latin, Philosophy 31, one cultural anthropology course.

The Major

Required: Twelve upper division courses as follows: Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, 165A or 165B (or 200A or 200B with a grade of A in 120A or 120B respectively and consent of instructor), two upper division electives in linguistics, Italian 102A, 190, and three upper division electives in Italian.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and Philosophy

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, Philosophy 31, 32, and two courses from 1, 6, 7, 21; completion of the sixth term in each of two foreign languages or the sixth term in one foreign language and the third term in each of two other foreign languages.

The Major

Required: Thirteen upper division courses as follows: Linguistics 103, 120A, 120B, 165B (or 200B with a grade of A in 120B and consent of instructor), three upper division electives in linguistics; six upper division courses in philosophy, including at least five from Philosophy 126A through 135B, 170, 172, 184, 186, 187, 188, of which at least two must be from 127A, 127B, 172.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and Psychology

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, Psychology 10, 41, 42, completion of the sixth term in one foreign language and the third term in a second foreign language. Program in Computing 10A is strongly recommended.

The Major

Required: Twelve upper division courses as follows: Linguistics 103, 120A, 120B, 130, two upper division electives in linguistics, Psychology 110, 120, 121, 123, 130, and an elective to be selected from 112A, 112B, 112C, 115, 116, 124B, 135. Linguistics 165A or 165B (or 200A or 200B with a grade of A in 120A or 120B respectively and consent of instructor) and Psychology 115 are strongly recommended.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and Scandinavian Languages

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, Scandinavian 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, or 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, or 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, 30, completion of the sixth term in one other foreign language or the third term in each of two other foreign languages.

The Major

Required: Thirteen upper division courses as follows: Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, 165A or 165B (or 200A or 200B with a grade of A in 120A or 120B respectively and consent of instructor), two upper division electives in linguistics, Scandinavian 105 and 106, or 110 twice, 199 (in a topic related to Scandinavian linguistics, under the direction of a Scandinavian or Linguistics faculty member), and three upper division electives in Scandinavian.

Bachelor of Arts in Linguistics and Spanish

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, Spanish 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 25, M42, M44, completion of the sixth term in one other foreign language or the third term in each of two other foreign languages.

The Major

Required: Fourteen upper division courses as follows: Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, 165A or 165B (or 200A or 200B with a grade of A in 120A or 120B respectively and consent of instructor), two additional upper division courses in linguistics (preferably 130 and 170), Spanish 100A-100B, 115 or M118A, 119A, 119B, and two additional upper division Spanish courses.

Bachelor of Arts in African Languages

Preparation for the Major

Required: Linguistics 20, nine courses from African Languages 1A through 42C and 199 (six in one language and three in another).

The Major

Required: A minimum of 13 upper division courses, including three courses in an African language; African Languages M190, Linguistics 103; two courses from Folklore M155, French 121A, Film and Television 106C, Theater 102E, or one or more special four-unit African Languages 199 tutorials focusing on literature in an African language; three courses from English 114, Ethnomusicology and Systematic Musicology 136A, 136B, Geography 189, History 125A, 125B, 125C, 126A, 126B, 127A, 127B, 128A, 128B, Linguistics 110, 120A, 120B or 127, 140, M146, 170, Political Science 166A, 166B, 166C. Linguistics 165A or 165B (or 200A or 200B with a grade of A in 120A or 120B respectively and consent of instructor) and completion of the sixth term in one of the following non-African languages are strongly recommended: Afrikaans, Arabic, Dutch, French, German, Portuguese.

Graduate Study

The programs leading to the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in Linguistics are open to qualified graduate students who are interested in descriptive, theoretical, and historical linguistics. Preparation for graduate study in linguistics should be equivalent in as many respects as possible to the undergraduate curriculum in linguistics.

There is also a graduate program leading to a Ph.D. in Applied Linguistics. It is administered by an interdepartmental committee, not by the Department of Linguistics. The requirements of the program are stated earlier in this chapter.

Master of Arts Degree

Admission

Students are normally admitted to begin residence in Fall Quarter only (exceptions may be made by the chair). The deadline for submission of applications for Fall Quarter is December 15 of the previous year. This deadline may occasionally be extended for applicants who do not wish to be considered for fellowship support.

Applicants are asked to submit a statement of purpose, which should include their background for graduate study in linguistics and their immediate and long-range goals in the field. They should also have three scholars under whom they have studied submit letters to the department about their qualifications. Scores on the verbal, quantitative, and analytical sections of the Graduate Record Examination (GRE) must be submitted with the application. There is no minimum score requirement. In addition, applicants must submit a copy of some research paper or other piece of writing in linguistics or a closely related field.

While not required for admission, Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, 165A, 165B are prerequisites to graduate courses in their respective areas. At the time of admission, students are notified which, if any, of the above courses are required due to deficiencies. However, if there is any question of whether courses taken elsewhere are equivalent to the above courses, students must discuss this with their advisers.

Prospective students may request an information brochure from the Administrative Analyst, Department of Linguistics, 3125 Campbell Hall, UCLA, Los Angeles, CA 90024-1543. This brochure explains, in particular, advising methods and procedures for the formation of M.A. and Ph.D. guidance committees.

Specialization

At the M.A. level, three survey courses in phonology, syntax, and language change are required. You must also select four additional survey courses from a list of 11. These choices allow for a certain amount of specialization. The remaining two courses (of the nine graduate courses required) may be in any area of linguistics and provide additional opportunities for specialization.

Foreign Language Requirement

You must demonstrate knowledge of one research language before receiving the M.A. and a second research language before advancement to candidacy. Knowledge can be demonstrated by one of four methods: (1) a reading examination administered by the department, (2) a research paper based on extensive sources in the language, (3) a conversation examination showing knowledge in depth, (4) a Graduate School Foreign Language Test (GSFLT) with a score of 650 or better. One of the languages must have substantial literature on linguistics; the other may serve as a contact language for field research. The latter option must be approved by the departmental language committee. Native speakers of languages other than English may use English to meet one of the foreign language requirements. If this is done, the second language must be other than the native language. The departmental brochure provides details about the departmentally administered language examinations.

Course Requirements

The M.A. degree requires the completion, with a B average or better, of nine graduate courses in linguistics. All students, regardless of prior background, are required to take Linguistics 200A, 200B, 201, 202, and 206. The remaining four survey courses must be selected from Linguistics 203 through 218. All first-year graduate students must take courses 411A-411B, and all second-year students who have not yet been admitted to the Ph.D. program must take course 444.

The following undergraduate courses or the equivalent are prerequisite to graduate courses in the corresponding areas: Linguistics 103, 110, 120A, 120B, 165A, 165B. Course 103, or an examination in practical phonetics, must be passed with a grade of B or better as a prerequisite to course 210A, a required course for the Ph.D. that may be taken at the pre-M.A. level. A proficiency examination in elementary logic, which may be waived on the basis of appropriate coursework, is prerequisite to course 206.

No more than two courses (with grades of B or better) from institutions outside the University of California may be applied toward the M.A.

You must complete all degree requirements in a maximum of seven regular academic terms.

Thesis Plan

After completing the required courses and the foreign language examination, students selecting this plan submit a thesis based on original research to a thesis committee for approval. All students intending to proceed to the Ph.D. must adopt this plan.

If you wish to be considered for advancement into the doctoral program, a copy of the thesis, complete and clearly legible, but not necessarily in final typed form, must be in the hands of the committee at least two weeks before the last day of classes in the term. Limits on the length of the thesis are stipulated in the departmental brochure.

Requirements for receiving an M.A. include the filing of a Petition for Advancement to Candidacy form early in the term during which you expect to take the degree. The thesis must be typed according to regulations set by the University. Information on these regulations and procedures is available from the Graduate Division.

Comprehensive Examination Plan

After completing the required courses and the foreign language examination, you must pass a comprehensive examination administered by a four-member committee of the faculty, appointed by the chair. This is normally an oral examination, general in scope, and results in a terminal M.A. degree.

Ph.D. Degree

Admission

General admission requirements are the same as those listed for the M.A. Students who have done their earlier graduate work at UCLA are considered for admission into the Ph.D. program on the basis of the following: (1) completion of all requirements for the M.A. and (2) the faculty's evaluation of the quality of the M.A. thesis and of the student's overall work and promise.

If you have already received an M.A. in Linguistics from another department or institution, you must fulfill all the requirements expected of an M.A. candidate, including the coursework, unless work elsewhere is equivalent and satisfies the course requirements. Then there are two possible procedures: (1) you may submit a master's thesis written at another institution or department or (2) if you have not written a thesis elsewhere, you must submit a paper equal in depth and scope to a thesis. In either case an evaluation committee is appointed and, once the committee has approved the thesis or paper, it is submitted to the entire faculty who evaluates its quality and your accomplishments and promise.

Major Fields or Subdisciplines

You may specialize in syntax, semantics, phonology, phonetics, language change, morphology, typology, sociolinguistics, neurolinguistics, psycholinguistics, computational linguistics, and many language areas, notably African languages and American Indian languages. Other specializations may be possible, depending on the availability of faculty expertise.

Foreign Language Requirement

A doctoral committee cannot be officially appointed until the foreign language requirement has been met. Details are given above under the "Foreign Language Requirement" for the M.A. degree.

Course Requirements

Candidates for the Ph.D. are required to have taken 36 units of graduate coursework beyond the M.A. requirements. These units must include Linguistics 210A, 210B, and eight units in an area distinct from that of your major area of concentration. The 36 units may not include courses 275, 597, or 599. Of the 36 units, no more than 12 units may be in course 596A. A maximum of four two-unit seminars may be included in the 36 units. At some time, you are expected to present some of the results of your research at a meeting of the Linguistics Department Colloquium. This is a requirement for the degree.

Qualifying Examinations

In order to be advanced to candidacy, you are required to prepare two original research papers in different areas or fields of linguistics. These papers are to be submitted to and approved by a doctoral guidance committee. A written prospectus of the dissertation must be submitted to the guidance committee, with a copy for the department file, one month prior to the oral examination. At this time, provided the language requirement has been met, an official doctoral committee must be established.

The University Oral Qualifying Examination is administered by the doctoral committee, based primarily on the topic of the dissertation research. The examination deals with the background necessary for you to pursue research on the specific topic. Reexamination is possible on recommendation of the committee. You are expected to take the examination and be advanced to candidacy no later than six terms after being admitted to the doctoral program.

Candidate in Philosophy Degree

You are eligible to receive the C.Phil. degree on advancement to candidacy for the Ph.D.

Final Oral Examination

A final defense of the dissertation is required. The defense is not restricted to the doctoral committee and is scheduled at a time, and with advance notice, that will enable a substantial number of students and faculty to attend.

General Linguistics

Lower Division Courses

1. Introduction to Study of Language. Summary, for general undergraduates, of what is known about human language; unique nature of human language, its structure, its universality, and its diversity; language in its social and cultural setting; language in relation to other aspects of human inquiry and knowledge.

(F,W,Sp)

10. Structure of English Words. Lecture, three to four hours. Introduction to structure of English words of classical origin, including most common base forms and rules by which alternate forms are derived. Students may expect to achieve substantial enrichment of their vocabulary while learning about etymology, semantic change, and abstract rules of English word formation.

Mr. Stockwell (W)

20. Introduction to Linguistics. (Formerly numbered 100.) Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Introduction to theory and methods of linguistics: universal properties of human language; phonetic, phonological, morphological, syntactic, and semantic structures and analysis; nature and form of grammar.

(F,W,Sp)

88. Lower Division Seminar. Seminar, three hours. Limited to freshmen. Variable topics; consult Schedule of Classes, College of Letters and Science, or department for topics to be offered in a specific term. May be repeated for credit.

99. Special Studies in Linguistics (2 to 4 units). Supervised research or training. May be repeated for credit. P/NP or letter grading.

Upper Division Courses

103. Introduction to General Phonetics. Lecture, three hours; laboratory, two hours. Prerequisite: one prior linguistics course or course 20 concurrently. Phonetics of a variety of languages and phonetic phenomena that occur in languages of the world. Extensive practice in perception and production of such phenomena.

Ms. Keating (F,W)

104. Experimental Phonetics. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 103. Survey of principal techniques of experimental phonetics. Use of laboratory equipment for recording and measuring phonetic phenomena.

Ms. Keating

110. Introduction to Historical Linguistics. Prerequisites: courses 20, 103, 120A. Methods and theories appropriate to historical study of language, such as comparative method and method of internal reconstruction. Sound change, grammatical change, semantic change.

Mr. Anttila, Mr. Bedell, Ms. Munro (F,Sp)

114. American Indian Linguistics. Strongly recommended (but not prerequisite): course 20. Survey of genetic, areal, and typological classifications of American Indian languages; writing systems for American Indian languages; American Indian languages in social and historical context. One or more languages may be investigated in detail.

Ms. Munro (W or Sp)

M115. Survey of African Languages. (Same as African Languages M190.) Prerequisite: course 20. Introduction to languages of Africa, their distribution and classification, and their phonological and grammatical structures; elementary practice in several languages.

Ms. Koopman, Mr. Schuh

120A. Phonology I. Prerequisites: courses 20, 103. Introduction to phonological theory and analysis. Rules, representations, underlying forms, derivations. Justification of phonological analyses. Emphasis on practical skills with problem sets.

Mr. Hayes, Ms. Steriade (W,Sp)

120B. Syntax I. Prerequisite: course 20. Course 120A is not prerequisite to 120B. Descriptive analysis of morphological and syntactic structures in natural languages; emphasis on insight into nature of such structures rather than linguistics formalization.

Ms. Koopman, Mr. Sportiche, Mr. Stowell (F,W)

125. Semantics. Lecture, four hours; discussion, one hour. Prerequisite: course 120B. Survey of most important theoretical and descriptive claims about the nature of meaning.

Mr. Keenan, Ms. Szabolcsi

127. Syntactic Typology and Universals. Prerequisite: course 20. Study of essential similarities and differences among languages in grammatical devices they use to signal the following kinds of concepts: relations between nouns and verbs (case and word order), negation, comparison, existence/location/possession, causation, interrogation, reflexivization, relativization, attribution (adjectives), time (tense and aspect), and backgrounding (subordination). Data from a range of languages presented and analyzed.

Mr. Keenan, Mr. Mahajan

130. Child Language Acquisition: Introduction. Prerequisites: courses 20, 120A, and 120B, or consent of instructor. Survey of contemporary research and theoretical perspectives in acquisition of language. Emphasis on linguistic interpretation of existing data, with some attention to relationship with second language learning, cognitive development, and other topics. Discussion of acquisition of English and other languages and universals of linguistic development.

Ms. Curtiss, Ms. Hyams

132. Introduction to Psycholinguistics. Prerequisites: courses 20, 120A, 120B. Central issues in language comprehension and production, with emphasis on how theories in linguistics inform processing models. Topics include word understanding (with emphasis on spoken language), parsing, anaphora and inferencing, speech error models of sentence production, and computation of syntactic structure during production.

C135. Theoretical Issues in Disorders of Language Development. Prerequisites: courses 1 or 20, and 130, or consent of instructor. Introduction to the field of language disorders of children. Some clinical syndromes which are associated with delayed or deviant language acquisition: aphasia, autism, mental retardation. Theories regarding etiology and relationship of these disorders to each other. Such questions as relationship of cognition to linguistic ability. Concurrently scheduled with course C235.

Ms. Curtiss

140. Linguistics in Relation to Language Teaching. Prerequisites: courses 120A, 120B. Aspects of linguistics in relation to teaching of language, with particular focus on special problems entailed in teaching non-European languages.

Mr. Schuh, Mr. Stockwell

M146. Language in Culture. (Same as Anthropology M140.) Prerequisite: upper division standing or consent of instructor. Study of language as an aspect of culture; relation of habitual thought and behavior to language; and language and the classification of experience. Holistic approach to study of language, with emphasis on relationship of linguistic anthropology to fields of biological, cultural, and social anthropology, as well as archaeology.

Mr. Kroskrity

M150. Introduction to Indo-European Linguistics. (Same as Indo-European Studies M150.) Prerequisites: one year of college-level study (course 3 or better, eight units minimum) of either Greek or Latin and either German or Russian. Survey of Indo-European languages from ancient to modern times; their relationships and chief characteristics.

Mr. Anttila (Sp)

160. Field Methods (6 units). Discussion, four hours; individual or group sessions, one to two hours. Prerequisites: courses 103, 120A, 120B. Analysis of a language unknown to members of class from data elicited from a native speaker of the language.

Ms. Koopman, Ms. Munro

165A. Phonology II. (Formerly numbered C165A.) Prerequisite: course 120A (undergraduates with grade of A in course 120A may replace course 165A with 200A, with consent of instructor). Further study in phonological theory and analysis: autosegmental theory, syllable structure, metrical theory, interface of phonology and grammar.

Mr. Hayes, Ms. Steriade (Sp)

165B. Syntax II. (Formerly numbered C165B.) Prerequisite: course 120B. Recommended for students who plan to do graduate work in linguistics. Form of grammars, word formation, formal and substantive universals in syntax, relation between syntax and semantics.

Mr. Mahajan, Mr. Sportiche, Mr. Stowell (Sp)

170. Language and Society: Introduction to Sociolinguistics. Prerequisite: course 20 or consent of instructor. Study of patterned covariation of language and society; social dialects and social styles in language; problems of multilingual societies.

Mr. Stockwell

175. Linguistic Change in English. Prerequisites: courses 110, 120A, 120B. Principles of linguistic change as exemplified through detailed study of history of English pronunciation, lexicon, and syntax.

Mr. Stockwell

M176A. Structure of Japanese I. (Same as Japanese CM122.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: Japanese 120 or equivalent or consent of instructor, two years of Japanese. Discussion of many seemingly idiosyncratic characteristics of Japanese syntax and semantics in light of word-order typology and universal grammar, often in form of a contrastive analysis of Japanese and English.

Ms. Akatsuka

M176B. Structure of Japanese II. (Same as Japanese CM123.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisite: two or more years of Japanese language study or consent of instructor. Survey of Japanese language at three different levels of organization: (1) word level — word class, verbal morphology and semantics; (2) clause/sentence level — tense, aspect, modality; (3) discourse level — point of view, ellipsis, topicalization.

Mr. Iwasaki

M177. Structure of Korean. (Same as Korean CM120.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: two years of Korean, or one year of Korean and some knowledge of linguistics. Discussion of major syntactic, semantic, and pragmatic characteristics of Korean in light of linguistic universals, with brief introduction to formation, typological features, and phonological structure of Korean.

Ms. Sohn

M178. Contrastive Analysis of Japanese and Korean. (Same as Japanese CM127 and Korean CM127.) Lecture, three hours. Prerequisites: two years of Japanese or Korean, one introductory linguistics course. Critical reading and discussion of selected current research papers in syntax, pragmatics, discourse, and sociolinguistics from perspective of contrastive study of Japanese and Korean. May be repeated for credit with consent of instructor.

Ms. Akatsuka, Ms. Sohn

C180. Mathematical Linguistics I. Prerequisites: courses 120A, 120B, 165B/200B (may be taken concurrently). Prior mathematics knowledge not assumed. Introduction to selected topics in set theory, logic and formal systems, modern algebra, and automata theory, with elementary applications to linguistics. Topics vary each term. Concurrently scheduled with course C208.

Mr. Keenan (F)

C185A. Natural Language Processing I. Prerequisites: courses 120B, C180, Program in Computing 10B. Recommended: course 165B or 200B, Program in Computing 60. Survey of recent work on natural language processing, including basic syntactic parsing strategies, with brief glimpses of semantic representation, reasoning, and response generation. Concurrently scheduled with course C209A.

Mr. Stabler (W)

C185B. Natural Language Processing II. Prerequisite: course C185A/C209A or consent of instructor. Extensions of basic language processing techniques to natural language processing. Recent models of syntactic, semantic, and discourse analysis, with particular attention to their linguistic sophistication and psychological plausibility. Concurrently scheduled with course C209B.

Mr. Stabler (Sp)

195. Senior Essay. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Limited to senior linguistics majors. Extended piece of writing is undertaken on a linguistic topic selected by the student to be completed under supervision of a faculty member. Consult professor in charge to enroll.

196A. Honors Essay. Prerequisites: 3.5 GPA, course 165A/200A or 165B/200B (may be taken concurrently). Recommended (but not required): completion of both courses 165A and 165B (or 200A and 200B) before or during term in which course 196A is taken. Draft of extended piece of writing on a linguistic topic selected by the student is prepared under supervision of a faculty member. Consult professor in charge to enroll. In Progress grading (credit to be given only on completion of course 196B).

(Sp)

196B. Honors Essay (2 units). Prerequisite: course 196A. Piece of writing drafted in course 196A is presented in a seminar, revised, and put into final form under supervision of a faculty member. Consult professor in charge to enroll.

(F)

197. Special Topics in Linguistics. Prerequisite: course 1 or 20 or consent of instructor. Variable topics selected from any undergraduate linguistics course area in which students desire greater in-depth knowledge. May be repeated for credit with topic change.

199. Special Studies in Linguistics (2 to 4 units). Prerequisites: courses 120A, 120B, consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit.

Graduate Courses

200A. Phonological Theory I. (Formerly numbered C200A.) Prerequisite: graduate standing in linguistics or grade of A in course 120A or equivalent course in phonology. Courses 200A and 201 form two-course survey of current research in phonological theory. Interaction of phonology with morphology and syntax, syllable structure, stress.

Mr. Hayes, Ms. Steriade (F)

200B. Syntactic Theory I. (Formerly numbered C200B.) Prerequisite: graduate standing in linguistics or grade of A in course 120B or equivalent course in syntax. In-depth introduction to selected topics in theory of constituent structure and syntax of predicates, arguments, and grammatical relations. Topics include levels of representation, X-bar theory, case theory, thematic roles, the lexicon, grammatical function-changing rules, head-complement relations.

Ms. Koopman, Mr. Mahajan, Mr. Stowell (F)

201. Phonological Theory II. Prerequisite: course 200A. Continuation of course 200A. Second course in two-course survey of current research in phonological theory. Topics include autosegmentalism (tone, tiers, segment structure), feature theory, underspecification, prosodic morphology.

Mr. Hayes, Ms. Steriade (W)

202. Language Change. Prerequisites: courses 110, 200A, 200B. Survey of current theories and research problems in language change.

Mr. Anttila, Mr. Stockwell (Sp)

203. Phonetic Theory. Prerequisite: course 120A. Preliminaries to speech analysis. Functional anatomy of vocal organs; fundamental principles of acoustics and of acoustic theory of speech production; issues in perception of speech; nature and design of feature systems for phonetic and phonological analysis.

Ms. Keating

204. Experimental Phonetics. Prerequisite: course 103 or equivalent. Use of laboratory equipment to investigate articulatory, acoustic, and perceptual properties of speech. Topics include experimental design and statistics; theoretical basis of acoustic structure of speech sounds; computer-based speech processing, analysis, and modeling; perceptual and acoustic evaluation of synthetic speech.

Ms. Keating

205. Morphological Theory. Prerequisites: courses 200A, 200B. Survey of current theories and research problems in morphology. Nature of morphological structure; derivational and inflectional morphology; relation of morphology to phonology, syntax, and the lexicon.

Mr. Hayes, Ms. Steriade

206. Syntactic Theory II. Prerequisite: course 200B or consent of instructor. In-depth introduction to selected topics in theory of movement processes and topics selected from following areas: WH-movement and related rules, subadjacency and other constraints on movement; ECP and related conditions on distribution of empty categories; resumptive pronoun constructions; parametric variation in movement constructions; LF WH-movement; filters; reconstruction; parasitic gaps; barriers theory; control theory; null subject parameter.

Mr. Mahajan, Mr. Sportiche, Mr. Stowell (W)

207. Formal Semantics. Prerequisite: course C180/C208 or equivalent. Survey of current approaches to model-theoretic semantics and its relation to current linguistic theory. Approaches include generalized categorial grammars, Montague grammar, Boolean-based systems, generalized quantifier theory, logical form.

Mr. Keenan

C208. Mathematical Linguistics I. Prerequisites: courses 120A, 120B, 165B/200B (may be taken concurrently). Prior mathematics knowledge not assumed. Introduction to selected topics in set theory, logic and formal systems, modern algebra, and automata theory, with elementary applications to linguistics. Topics vary each term. Concurrently scheduled with course C180. Graduate students expected to complete additional problem sets.

Mr. Keenan (F)

C209A. Natural Language Processing I. Prerequisites: courses 120B, C180, Program in Computing 10B. Recommended: course 165B or 200B, Program in Computing 60. Survey of recent work on natural language processing, including basic syntactic parsing strategies, with brief glimpses of semantic representation, reasoning, and response generation. Concurrently scheduled with course C185A.

Mr. Stabler (W)

C209B. Natural Language Processing II. Prerequisite: course C185A/C209A or consent of instructor. Extensions of basic language processing techniques to natural language processing. Recent models of syntactic, semantic, and discourse analysis, with particular attention to their linguistic sophistication and psychological plausibility. Concurrently scheduled with course C185B.

Mr. Stabler (Sp)

210A. Field Methods I (6 units). Prerequisites: courses 200A, 200B, grade of B or better in course 103 or in examination on practical phonetics. Analysis of a language unknown to members of class from data elicited from a native speaker of the language. Term papers to be relatively full descriptive sketches of the language. May be repeated for credit with topic change.

Ms. Koopman, Ms. Munro

210B. Field Methods II (6 units). Prerequisite: course 210A in preceding term. Because different languages are investigated in different years, course 210B can only be taken as direct continuation of 210A in same year. When there are multiple sections, continuation must be in same section. May be repeated for credit with topic change.

Ms. Koopman, Ms. Munro

212. Learnability Theory. Prerequisite: course C180/C208 or consent of instructor. Survey of some of most significant results on capabilities of learners, given precise assumptions about their memory, time, and computational power, and precise assumptions about information provided by the environment.

Ms. Hyams, Mr. Stabler

213. Psycholinguistics. Prerequisites: courses 200A, 200B. Survey of recent empirical and theoretical research in several subareas of psycholinguistics, including grammatical and lexical development in first language acquisition; psycholinguistic models of grammatical processing, especially syntactic parsing; brain bases for language acquisition; language breakdown.

Ms. Hyams

214. Survey of Current Syntactic Theories. Prerequisite: course 206. Survey of several current syntactic theories, compared with one another and with theory discussed in course 206, from point of view of theories' relative descriptive and explanatory power.

Mr. Stowell

215. Syntactic Typology. Prerequisite: course 200B. Current results in word-order universals; genetic classification of the world's languages; cross-language properties of specific construction types, including relative clauses, passives, positive and negative concord systems, agreement systems, deixis systems, and types of sentence complements.

Mr. Keenan

216. Syntactic Theory III. Prerequisite: course 206 or consent of instructor. Selected topics on syntactic theories of anaphora and quantification from the following areas: typology of binding categories (pronouns, anaphors, etc.); theory of locality conditions in binding theory; parametric variation in binding; quantifier movement; existential quantification and unselective binding; strong and weak crossover; superiority; scope interactions; complex quantifier structures.

Ms. Koopman, Mr. Sportiche, Mr. Stowell (Sp)

218. Mathematical Linguistics II. Prerequisite: course C180/C208 or consent of instructor. Applications of automata and formal language theory to natural language: Chomsky hierarchy; whether natural languages are finite state, context free, context sensitive; categorial grammar, indexed grammar, ID/LP grammar, tree adjoining grammar, feature systems, languages as models of first-order theories.

Mr. Keenan, Mr. Stabler

220. Linguistic Areas. Prerequisites: courses 120A, and 120B or 127. Recommended: courses 165A/200A, 165B/200B. Analysis and classification of languages spoken in a particular area (e.g., Africa, the Balkans, South Asia, Southeast Asia, Australia, Aboriginal North America, Aboriginal South America, Far East, etc.). May be repeated for credit with topic change.

225. Linguistic Structures. Prerequisites: courses 120A, and 120B or 127. Recommended: courses 165A/200A, 165B/200B. Phonological and grammatical structure of a selected language and its genetic relationships to others of its family. May be repeated for credit with topic change.

230. History of Linguistics. Prerequisites: courses 200A, 200B. Aspects of history of linguistics. Different course offerings may deal with different areas of linguistics (e.g., phonology, syntax) or with different historical periods. May be repeated for credit with topic change.

C235. Theoretical Issues in Disorders of Language Development. Prerequisites: courses 1 or 20, and 130, or consent of instructor. Introduction to the field of language disorders of children. Some clinical syndromes which are associated with delayed or deviant language acquisition: aphasia, autism, mental retardation. Theories regarding etiology and relationship of these disorders to each other. Such questions as relationship of cognition to linguistic ability. Concurrently scheduled with course C135. Graduate students expected to apply more sophisticated knowledge and produce research paper of greater depth.

Ms. Curtiss

M246C. Topics in Linguistic Anthropology. (Same as Anthropology M241.) Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Problems in relations of language, culture, and society. May be repeated for credit.

Proseminars numbered 251 through 254 may be taken for either two or four units. If a proseminar is taken for four units, a paper is required. Proseminars and seminars numbered 251 and above may be repeated for credit, having been approved by the Graduate Council as nonrepetitive in content.

251. Topics in Phonetics and Phonology I: Proseminar (2 or 4 units). Lecture, four hours. Prerequisite: course 200A. Course 201, 203, or 204 may be required. Specialized topics in phonetics and phonology. May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. degree requirements when taken for two units. Meets with course 256A. May be repeated for credit. S/U (two-unit course) or letter (four-unit course) grading.

252. Topics in Syntax and Semantics I: Proseminar (2 or 4 units). Lecture, four hours. Prerequisite: course 200B. Course 206, 207, 214, 215, or 216 may be required. Specialized topics in syntax and semantics. May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. degree requirements when taken for two units. Meets with course 257A. May be repeated for credit. S/U (two-unit course) or letter (four-unit course) grading.

253. Topics in Language Variation I: Proseminar (2 or 4 units). Prerequisite: course 110. Course 202 may be required. Specialized topics in language variation. May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. degree requirements when taken for two units. Meets with course 258A. May be repeated for credit. S/U (two-unit course) or letter (four-unit course) grading.

254. Topics in Linguistics I: Proseminar (2 or 4 units). Lecture, four hours. Prerequisites: courses 200A, 200B, consent of instructor. Course 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, C208, C209A, C209B, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, or 218 may be required. Individual proseminars on topics such as child language, sociolinguistics, neurolinguistics, computational linguistics, psycholinguistics, etc. May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. degree requirements when taken for two units. Meets with course 259A. May be repeated for credit. S/U (two-unit course) or letter (four-unit course) grading.

256A. Topics in Phonetics and Phonology II: Proseminar. Prerequisite: course 200A. Course 201, 203, or 204 may be required. Specialized topics in phonetics and phonology. May be repeated for credit. Meets with course 251. In Progress grading (credit to be given only on completion of course 256B).

256B. Topics in Phonetics and Phonology II: Proseminar (2 units). Prerequisite: course 256A. Specialized topics in phonetics and phonology. May be repeated for credit.

257A. Topics in Syntax and Semantics II: Proseminar. Prerequisite: course 200B. Course 206, 207, 214, 215, or 216 may be required. Specialized topics in syntax and semantics. May be repeated for credit. Meets with course 252. In Progress grading (credit to be given only on completion of course 257B).

257B. Topics in Syntax and Semantics II: Proseminar (2 units). Prerequisite: course 257A. Specialized topics in syntax and semantics. May be repeated for credit.

258A. Topics in Language Variation II: Proseminar. Prerequisite: course 110. Course 202 may be required. Specialized topics in language variation. May be repeated for credit. Meets with course 253. In Progress grading (credit to be given only on completion of course 258B).

258B. Topics in Language Variation II: Proseminar (2 units). Prerequisite: course 258A. Specialized topics in language variation. May be repeated for credit.

259A. Topics in Linguistics II: Proseminar. Prerequisites: courses 200A, 200B, consent of instructor. Course 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, C208, C209A, C209B, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, or 218 may be required. Individual proseminars on topics such as child language, sociolinguistics, neurolinguistics, computational linguistics, psycholinguistics, etc. May be repeated for credit. Meets with course 254. In Progress grading (credit to be given only on completion of course 259B).

259B. Topics in Linguistics II: Proseminar (2 units). Prerequisite: course 259A. Individual proseminars on topics such as child language, sociolinguistics, history of linguistic theory, neurolinguistics, languages of the world, psycholinguistics, etc. May be repeated for credit.

Seminars numbered 260A through 264C may be taken for either two or four units. If a seminar is taken for four units, an oral presentation is required. Seminars may be taken for two units credit only by students who have been formally admitted to the doctoral program. All others must enroll for four units.

260A-260B-260C. Seminars: Phonetics (2 or 4 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Each course may be taken independently for credit. May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. degree requirements when taken for two units. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

261A-261B-261C. Seminars: Phonology (2 or 4 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Each course may be taken independently for credit. May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. degree requirements when taken for two units. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

262A-262B-262C. Seminars: Syntax and Semantics (2 or 4 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Each course may be taken independently for credit. May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. degree requirements when taken for two units. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

263A-263B-263C. Seminars: Language Variation (2 or 4 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Each course may be taken independently for credit. May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. degree requirements when taken for two units. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

264A-264B-264C. Seminars: Special Topics in Linguistic Theory (2 or 4 units each). Discussion, three hours. Prerequisite: consent of instructor. Each course may be taken independently for credit. Special topics may include child language, neurolinguistics, psycholinguistics, sociolinguistics, etc. May not be applied toward M.A. or Ph.D. degree requirements when taken for two units. May be repeated for credit. S/U grading.

275. Linguistics Colloquium. Prerequisite: completion of M.A. requirements. Varied linguistic topics, generally presentations of new research by students, faculty, and visiting scholars. S/U grading.

276. Linguistics Colloquium (No credit). Prerequisite: graduate standing. Same as course 275, but taken without credit by students not presenting a colloquium. S/U grading.
